The result of the recent test of Washington coal made by the several vessels of the Bering Sea fleet is being waited for with considerable interest on this coast. For years every effort has been put forth to induce the naval authorities to buy American coal instead of the coal from the British Columbian mines. The contract for this year's supply was made as usual with the Comox Mine on Vancouver Island; but Secretary Herbert afterward ordered the Bering Sea fleet to visit Puget Sound and make a thorough trial of the steaming qualities of the Washington product. The Mohican, the flagship of the squadron, took 125 tons; the Yorktown, 200 tons; the revenue cutter Bear, 350 tons; the Corwin, 40 tons; the other vessels of the fleet went north with full bunkers, but will use the Comox coal after the present supply is exhausted.

The importance of a coaling station on this side of the continent is easily apparent. In the event of war with England, the British Columbian mines would be immediately shut off, and in case of a quarrel with another country, the neutrality laws would forbid England to supply us. There seems no reason for preferring the British Columbian to the Washington coal. The latter has been in use for years on all the coast steamers, and has given universal satisfaction. The Oregon Improvement Company runs more than a dozen large boats, including the Queen, the finest on the Alaska route, all using coal from the company's mines.

The revenue cutter Bear, one of the largest carriers of the Bering Sea fleet, uses the American coal from preference. The Bear is one of the finest vessels in the service. She has been selected to make the annual trip to Point Barrow, the northernmost point of Alaska, and is the only ship, except whalers, that goes so far north. The Washington coal will be cheaper to use, and in the opinion of experts, will give better satisfaction, since it contains less sulphur and less ash-making material than the average output of the British Columbian mines. It is possible that some slight alteration will have to be made in the furnaces of vessels before the coal can be made thoroughly useful, but the result would more than pay for the trouble. It can be used in the present furnaces, with rather more frequent feeding than the Comox coal requires.

The magnitude of the coal deposits in the State of Washington is little realized away from the Pacific coast. Not all the Atlantic States combined contain such a supply. Workable veins are known to exist in eighteen out the thirty-four counties, and they cover an area of more than 1,000,000 acres. The coal ranges in character from cannel to semianthracite, through all grades of domestic, gas, steaming, coking, and smithing coals. With the exception of the Roslyn mines in Kittitas County, the productive measures lie west of the Cascade Range. They are all lignite and bituminous.

Anthracite has been found in the Olympics and in the Cascades, and there is a fine deposit at the base of Mount Rainier. These, however, have not been developed sufficiently to judge of their values. The lignite measures extend from British Columbia on the north to the Columbia River, and east from Puget Sound 15 miles. The area covered is estimated at 800,000 acres. Less than 2 per cent of all this territory has been worked, although about 5 per cent of it is owned by companies prepared to open up veins as soon as the market is ready for the output. Many hundred acres are held by prospectors who lack the money to develop their claims.

Of the mines already in operation the New Castle, owned by the Oregon Improvement Company, lies 21 miles from Seattle, and consists of four veins, the shallowest of which is 3 feet, the deepest 12 feet. The coal is excellent for steaming purposes. The Gilman mine, 42 miles from Seattle, is now working two of its five veins. The output is high-grade lignite, with small streaks of bituminous; too small, however, to warrant separation. The Cedar Mountain mine is working two veins, one of them 11 feet 6 inches in depth. At Franklin, the coal is of a semibituminous character, the deposit being of a somewhat older geological formation. The same is true of the Black Diamond mines, 30 miles from Seattle. This mine employs something like five hundred men, and its capacity is estimated at 1,000 tons per day.

The Skagit County mines bid fair to be of immense value in the near future. The preliminary tests made by the Yorktown indicated that this coal is the best for steaming purposes on the Sound. It also makes a very superior coke. The bituminous measures join the lignite on the east and extend to the Cascade range. The veins are so twisted that it is impossible to determine their number. The Carbon River group is developed more than the others, four veins being worked, the product high-grade gas and steam coal. Twelve miles north is the Raging River group, consisting of eight veins, four of which are being worked. The Roslyn mines are 125 miles east from Seattle. Their veins lie nearly horizontal, near the surface, and cover an area of 100,000 acres. The mines have been in operation since 1886. Over 1,000 men are employed, and the daily output is about 2,500 tons of bituminous lump coal, well adapted to domestic and steaming purposes.

The first discovery of coal in Washington was made in 1852, at Bellingham Bay, but no export of importance was made until 1870. Last year over a million and a quarter tons were marketed, which for a season of depression is no bad showing. The Washington coal veins are easier mined than those of the Eastern States, on account of the angles at which they dip allowing them to be opened by tunnels and saving the expense of hoisting the output. Timber for bunkers, etc., is cheap and abundant; water for washers is to be found everywhere. This, of course, has a great bearing on the values of the measures. It seems only a question of time before Washington will be the largest coal-producing district in the United States, and probably the largest in the world.

Mr. SQUIRE. I may say also in this connection, in regard to the rate of wages paid in the different countries, that the average cost of coal mining in the United States is far above the cost in Great Britain. I have here a table showing the average cost of coal mining in the United States and in Great Britain. As a rule, where in the United States the wage-worker in coal gets $2, in England the same worker gets $1, in France and in Germany 60 cents, and in Bohemia and the eastern parts of Europe 50 cents.

Mr. President, I say, in conclusion, that I trust before this bill is finally disposed of, the Committee on Finance will be willing to increase the rate of duty on coal to at least 60 cents a ton. I am very glad to get 40 cents rather than no duty at all; but I hope the committee will increase it at least to the extent of 50 or 60 cents a ton.

Mr. PLATT. They ought to make it 60 cents a ton.

Mr. SQUIRE. Sixty cents a ton would be preferable; and if no other Senator does so, I shall first propose an amendment making the rate 60 cents a ton, and if I do not succeed in getting that, I may propose an amendment at 50 cents a ton. I may add, in this connection, that I hope there will not be exercised that kind of spirit against the lumber industry that seems to exist now in the minds of the members of the Finance Committee. It is not right, it is not fair, and the Democratic party, if they insist upon entirely abolishing the duty upon sawed lumber, will be held to a severe account by the people of the State of Washington. I hope, before we get through with this bill, a reasonable duty will be placed upon lumber, at least a small duty, say 50 cents per thousand feet on sawed lumber and $1 per thousand on dressed lumber.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this amendment has been under discussion for about four hours, and I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,
Allison,	Frye,	Kyle,	Quay,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Berry,	George,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Smith,
Caffery,	Gray,	Martin,	Squire,
Call,	Hale,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Teller,
Cameron,	Harris,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Carey,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Vest,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Walsh,
Cullom,	Irby,	Perkins,	Washburn,
Dolph,	Jarvis,	Platt,	White.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask consent of the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw his motion, that there may be a direct vote on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. If a direct vote can come without further debate I should prefer taking it upon the amendment, but the amendment has been debated for four hours and I think the country is sufficiently enlightened upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator from Tennessee accede to the request I made? I think I can assure him that there will be no further debate upon this particular question.

Mr. HARRIS. The only trouble is that the Senator from New York can not assure me that others will not debate it. If he can I should most cheerfully accede to his request.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the Senator from New York ask unanimous consent to that effect.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that no further debate be had upon the proposition to place bituminous coal upon the free list.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw my motion to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee being withdrawn, the question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HIGGINS. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, on page 80, it is proposed to strike out "40 cents per ton," and insert "shall be admitted free from duty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays will be called on the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). As a rule I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]; but if he were present I think he would vote "nay," and therefore I shall vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

I desire, while I am on my feet, to say that I voted this morning inadvertently upon some roll call when the Senator from Virginia was absent. I try to be very particular respecting my pairs, but forgot it this morning.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], and my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. I desire to transfer that pair, which will allow the Senator from Delaware and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GIBSON. I am paired generally with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON]. I am not advised as to how he would vote if present, but I presume he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], which will allow the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Allen,	Hill,	Kyle,	Washburn.
Hansbrough,	Irby,	Peffer,

NAYS—50.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Allison,	Dolph,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Roach,
Berry,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Martin,	Shoup,
Brice,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Call,	Gray,	Morgan.	Teller,
Camden,	Hale,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cameron,	Harris,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Carey,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Pasco,	White.
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Platt,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—28.

Blanchard,	Gallinger,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Butler,	George,	Mills,	Squire,
Caffery,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Oregon	Stewart,
Daniel,	Hunton,	Patton,	Turpie,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	Vilas,
Dixon,	McLaurin,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Dubois,	McMillan,	Power,	Wolcott.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line 10, page 80:

But the above product shall be admitted free of duty from any country which imposes no import duty on the like product when exported from the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] made a very remarkable statement, considering the attitude which has been taken by his party in this debate. He said that possibly some few years hereafter, when the people's minds had been prepared by discussion for free coal, he might himself be able to stand up here and advocate it. If there is anything that our friends on the other side have insisted upon in this debate, it was that the people's minds on all these questions had been prepared by abundant discussion, and had been not only made up, but expressed in the Presidential election of 1892; and it is a little remarkable that when the people's minds had got so made up and expressed, according to our Democratic brethren, the Democrats come in here and undertake to act directly contrary to its expression.

If there is any one thing which the mind of the people who voted the Democratic ticket was made up on in New England, it was free coal. That has been the cry of all the Democratic speakers and the burden of all Democratic resolutions and platforms. The Democratic party went into that campaign with a principle, as they allege, and a promise. The principle was that a protective duty was robbery; was unconstitutional; that no patriotic American could support it; that they proposed to abandon it in establishing this duty, as they have in a thousand other cases where a Southern industry comes into consideration.

Then they have made this particular and express promise as to its application. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who must be somewhere, mourning and wringing his hands when he can not be present, uttered that promise all over the State of Massachusetts, and, I think, in some other New England States, certainly in Connecticut. The Democratic platforms in each State had the same principle and promise.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] lectured us on statesmanship a little while ago, and thought it was a great wrong that any Senator on the Republican side should refrain from voting on this question if he thought best. I think of the two it is better statesmanship not to vote at all than to constantly and confessedly keep voting against what you think is the interest of your country, sound constitutional principle, and your own promises; and with this poor excuse that these Senators want to vote for free coal and free raw material, but there is some hidden person who will not let them.

Now, I appeal to the honorable Senator from Missouri to try to have an honest vote once; let him get up and make his speech in favor of free coal and free sugar, which he believes in, and see if he can not convert these people. Let him move an amendment. A great many amendments have gone through here on the authority of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Why will they not just try once moving an amendment which represents their principles and their promises? Perhaps that is what my honorable friends are consulting about at this moment. [Laughter.] I shall wait, if the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri would like to have me, until they finish their consultation. I presume it is a new idea to my honorable friends on the other side——

Mr. VEST. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether the Senator would once move an amendment in accordance with his own belief and make a speech in favor of it?

Mr. VEST. Oh, I thought the Senator was talking about the size of some duty.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that before the Senator yields to this unknown Ethiopian in the Democratic woodpile, he should once move something which he believes in, and make a speech in its favor, and try a vote in the Senate on it.

Did the Senator ever hear before of statesmanship which carried its point by silence? Did he ever before hear of statesmanship which carried its point by voting against everything in which it believed? Did the Senator ever before hear of statesmanship which was constantly making motions to amend a bill, which was right as the Senator found it, to make it wrong?

Mr. President, it does seem to me that our honorable friends on the other side never can go to the American people—I do not know that they ever expect to go to the people of New England again—and ask the confidence of any human being, merely on this claim that they were forced to do something by somebody whom they do not name. Why can you not stand up like men and move an amendment to put coal on the free list, and vote for it? Why can you not stand up like men and move an amendment to put sugar on the free list, and vote for it? Why can you not stand up and move an amendment to put iron on the free list, and vote for it?

Where is this man? In regard to this particular matter of coal, as I said the other day, every Democratic Senator from a coal-producing State has told the Senate that he would vote for the pending bill whatever you did with coal—every one of them, both Senators from West Virginia, both Senators from old Virginia, and one Senator from Alabama, and the other, I have no doubt, knows very well his purpose in the same way is perfectly understood. Can the Senators on the other side of the Chamber name a man on that side whose vote would be lost if you concur with the House of Representatives and concur with the President? Your promise, your word of honor is broken. I am speaking now of the party, and not in the personal sense. Your principles are abandoned and gone.

Mr. President, there was a New England poet and prophet who described the present situation of the Democratic party a good many years ago, and I should like to commend the narrative to my honorable friend from Arkansas. History repeats itself. The same old Democratic party—I was going to use another word, but I shall simply confine myself to that, for I can not say anything worse than that [laughter]—has been in existence a good many years, and here is a description in regard to it in reference to this very tariff question, which I commend to my honorable friends on the other side:

A marciful Providunce fashioned us holler
O' purpose thet we might our principles swaller;
It can hold any quantity on 'em, the belly can,
An' bring 'em up ready fer use like the pelican.
Or more like the kangaroo, who (which is stranger)
Puts her family into her pouch wen there's danger.
Ain't principle precious? Then who's goin to use it,
Wen there's resk o' some chap's gittin up to abuse it?
I can't tell the w'y on 't, but nothin' is so sure
Ez thet principle kind o' gits spiled by exposure.
A man thet lets all sorts o' folks git a sight on 't
Ough' to hev it all took right away, every mite on 't;
Ef he can't keep it all to himself wen it's wise to,
He ain't one it's fit to trust nothin' so nice to.
Besides, ther's a wonderful power in latitute—

West Virginia and Massachusetts, for example——

To shift a man's morril relations an' attitude,
Some flossifers think thet a fakkilty's granted
The minnit it's proved to be thoroughly wanted,
Thet a change o' demand makes a change o' condition,
An' thet everythin' 's nothin' except by position;

Ez, fer instance, thet rubber trees fust begun bearin'
Wen p'lit'kle conshunces come into wearin';
Thet the fears of a monkey, whose holt chanced to fail,
Drawed the vertibry out to a prehensile tail;
So, wen one's chose to Congriss, ez soon ez he's in it,
A collar grows right round his neck in a minnit,
An' sartin it is thet a man can not be strict
In bein' himself when he gits to the Deestrict,
Fer a coat thet sets wal here in ole Massachusetts,
Wen it gits on to Washinton, somehow askew sets.

I recommend that to my honorable friend from Texas——

So they march in percessions, an' git up hooraws
An' tramp thru the mud fer the good o' the cause,
An' think they're a kind o' fulfillin' the prophecies,
Wen they're on'y jest changin' the holders of offices;
Ware A sot afore, B is comf'tably seated,
One humbug's victor'ous an' t'other defeated,
Each honnable doughface gits jest wut he axes,
An' the people—their annooal softsodder an' taxes.

Now, to keep unimpaired all these glorious feeturs
Thet characterize morril an' reasonin' creeturs,
Thet give every paytriot all he can cram,
Thet oust the untrustworthy Presidunt Flam,
An' stick honest Presidunt Sham in his place,
To the manifest gain o' the holl human race,
An' to some indervidgewals on 't in partickler,
Who love Public Opinion an' know how to tickle her—
I say thet a party with gret aims like these Must stick jest ez close ez a hive full o' bees.
I'm willin' a man should go tollable strong
Agin wrong in the abstract, fer thet kind o' wrong
Is ollers unpop'lar an' never gits pitied,
Because it 's a crime no one never committed;
But he mus'n't be hard on particklar sins,
Coz then he'll be kickin' the people's own shins;
On'y look at the Demmercrats, see wut they've done
Jest simply by stickin' together like fun;
They've sucked us right into a mis'able war
Thet no one on airth aint responsible for;
They've run us a hundred cool millions in debt
They talk agin tayriffs, but act fer a high one,
An' so coax all parties to build up their Zion;
To the people they're ollers ez slick ez molasses,
An' butter their bread on both sides with The Masses,
Half o' whom they've persuaded, by way of a joke,
That Washinton's mantelpiece fell upon Polk.

Mr. VEST. I have an amendment to offer after that literary production.

Mr. PLATT. Is there not an amendment pending?

Mr. VEST. The amendment pending has been voted upon, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am rather sorry my friend from North Dakota has offered this amendment. I know that it is in accord with a great many amendments which have already been voted into this bill. It is provided in the bill that wheat and wheat flour, rye and rye flour, oats and oatmeal, corn and corn meal, buckwheat and buckwheat flour, and perhaps some other things shall come into this country free of duty from the Dominion of Canada when the Dominion of Canada admits free of duty similar articles from this country.

I admit with the Senator from North Dakota that consistency would seem to require that the same arrangement should apply to bituminous coal; but the Senator from North Dakota forgets that under the coal arrangement, as it now stands in the bill, the coal miners of Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and Maryland will be unable to transport their coal along the seaboard line, with the provision of 40 cents a ton, as against like coal transported southwestward from Nova Scotia, and that it is not intended by the producers of coal, first, in these States, and secondly, in Nova Scotia that this competitive market with a 40-cent duty per ton upon one side and 60 cents duty upon the other side shall get very far away from the seaboard; because if it did the coal of Ohio and the more westerly coal would find a market in the Western portion of Canada, and possibly in the neighborhood of Manitoba, and thus interfere with the transportation of the Canadian railroads and the Nova Scotia coal into the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

So it is intended that this shifting as between the Southern regions of coal producing shall have their play along the seaboard, and that Ohio and other Western States, which produce coal, shall be shut out of the Canadian market, and the Canadian coal shall be shut out of the interior regions of the Northeastern States.

So these rules, I submit to my friend, do not seem to apply with the force with which they applied to wheat and corn and oats and buckwheat, because, in that instance, nobody but the people of the Northwestern States is to be injured by such a proceeding; but in this instance it will cut a little both ways, possibly, and that will do very well. It is all well enough to put these great Northwestern products into competition with Canada without duty on either side; but when it comes to coal it must be left, the Atlantic seaboard to play on one side or on the other.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there is not a very large export of bituminous coal from this country into Canada?

Mr. ALLISON. It is very large; I do not know how much, but nearly 2,000,000 tons, I think, per annum, and yet it pays 60 cents a ton duty.

Mr. HOAR. If that duty were taken off would it not extend our exports into Canada of that coal very far to the eastward of the supply now—about as far east as Quebec?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; and in doing that it would come in competition with the Nova Scotia coal, which is no part of the purpose here; but the purpose seems to be to keep out the Ohio coal from this competition, in order that the Nova Scotia coal may get as far into Ontario as possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senate will not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, because, if it does, it will not be operative. The people of Canada now ship largely from Ohio and from other Northwestern States across the Canadian line. Indeed the coals of the United States supply all the demand in that whole country from Montreal clear westward almost to the Rocky Mountains, where they have plenty of fine anthracite coal. They therefore will not accept this condition if it is proposed, while it leaves the other provision, which has already been acted upon, to operate entirely against the people of the United States.

There is now no wheat, no buckwheat, no rye, and no grain of any kind shipped from the United States of America to Canada. The farmers of Canada supply these articles for their own people, consequently the provision which has already been inserted will be very injurious to the Northwestern States, as will indeed be many of the provisions of this bill. I think this is one of the most injurious in a financial sense.

The people of Canada will not surrender the 60-cent duty upon coal in order to avail themselves of the privilege of free coal. They regard the duty on our coal as a revenue duty, and it was imposed for that purpose. They know the coals from Nova Scotia can not go west of Montreal. The conditions of commerce and everything prevent it. The coals of Nova Scotia must find their market, if anywhere, either in Quebec or in the New England States, and can not by possibility be extended up the St. Lawrence beyond the city of Montreal. Nova Scotia coal will not be transported above Montreal west, for that region is supplied entirely by our coal.

The Canadians, I am quite sure, will not surrender the revenue which they derive from coal, which is quite a necessary item, and is vital to them. If the quantity imported into Canada amounts to 2,000,000 tons, at 60 cents a ton it would be $1,200,000, a very large sum, and a sum that they can not do without. Therefore, it is useless to insert this provision here, and it will probably set a bad example.

I trust before this bill passes away from the Senate that the other provisions, which entirely place our market at the command of the Canadian farmer without any corresponding benefit whatever to us, will be changed, because no grain whatever is transported from the United States across the water into Canada, and they supply themselves with the cereals. The land in some parts of Canada in some respects is better than the average land in the United States for wheat, rye, oats, and barley.

I therefore shall vote against this amendment, however plausible it may appear to be.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment on the table.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I take occasion to again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think it is quite clear that the Senate or some of the Senators do not understand the proposition before the Senate, and I ask that the amendment be read and then that the parliamentary situation be explained.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the roll call proceed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object to debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The roll call was resumed.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I suggest to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] that we transfer pairs so that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] will stand paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and we may both vote.

Mr. GORDON. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his named was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALDRICH. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] has been called away from the Chamber by illness.

Mr. CAMDEN. I again announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. CAMERON. Assuming that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], if present, would vote the same way as I do upon this question, I vote "yea."

Mr. MURPHY. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. SQUIRE. I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, on page 80, after the word "shale," it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. I shall support this amendment with a great deal of pleasure. I should support it in silence by my vote, if I did not fear that after what has been said here to-day by some Senators from my section of the country it might be charged or suspected that New England wants free coal, or coal at a largely reduced rate of duty.

I am sure that what all those Senators intended should be understood from their remarks was that it was a criticism upon the very great inconsistency of the Democratic party in trying to obtain votes upon a promise to give free coal, and then when in power keeping coal dutiable. That inconsistency, Mr. President, hardly ought to be remarked upon in the Senate. It is so common and has been so universal in all the past history of the Democratic party that it should try to secure votes by promises which it never intended to keep, that it is scarcely worth while to remark upon it.

I shall also support this amendment very heartily, because the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] says that nobody in the world is to be benefited by a reduction of the present duty upon coal, except some people along the seaboard. The people along that seaboard do not want a reduction, and have no respect for the gift so bestowed by the people of West Virginia upon them. I wish to vote for a larger duty than that recommended by the Committee on Finance for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that we do not want this reduction of duty, either suggested by the Senator from West Virginia, or recommended by the Finance Committee, or by any member of the committee, for the purpose of benefiting anybody up in New England or in New York; but I do agree with the Senator from West Virginia to the extent that the reduction of this duty will benefit nobody.

He thinks it will benefit nobody, except some people in Boston and New York and not a mile back from the Atlantic seaboard. The reduction of the duty will benefit nobody else all over the country. I do not know when I have been more pleased by the statement of a law of political economy by a concession to the theory of the protectionist than I was by the admission of the Senator from West Virginia.

It is rather curious to witness what reasons are given by a free trader and a man who believes in free raw material when he wants to get a duty which will protect. He wants to reduce the duties in this bill because he wants to take some burdens off of somebody's shoulders; but the moment it goes to coal, and the reduction of the duty on coal from 75 cents a ton to 40 cents a ton, that will take the burdens from nobody's shoulders and be of no earthly benefit to anybody, except some few within a mile of the Atlantic seaboard!

Why not? If this great reduction of the duty on coal from 75 cents a ton to 40 cents a ton is not going to lift a burden from anybody's shoulders, how are all these other reductions which the Senator votes for, and for which Senators on the other side of the Chamber vote, going to take burdens off the people's shoulders? It shows the inconsistency of the claim that this reduction is going to benefit somebody.

Then the Senator said this 40 cents per ton duty is a revenue duty, and he said that 75 cents a ton was a revenue duty. If 75 cents a ton duty was a good revenue duty, why in the world impose a duty of 40 cents a ton? Will 40 cents a ton get as large revenue as 75 cents per ton, when they are both revenue duties? I notice we got quite a good deal of revenue out of the importation of bituminous coal last year. Of bituminous coal and shale we had an importation of 1,090,374 tons, of the value of $3,599,037, with a duty of $817,780; and the reduction of duty as figured by the expert of the committee is from $817,780 to $436,149. A peculiar kind of a revenue duty transaction this!

Mind you, the 75 cents per ton duty was a revenue duty, and the 40 cents per ton is a revenue duty, which is going to reduce the revenue by some $300,000, more or less—I do not remember the exact figures. If the 75 cents a ton was a revenue duty and yielded this large revenue, why not keep it? Why reduce it to 40 cents per ton and obtain less revenue? Is the Treasury so plethoric that we do not need the revenue?

When this Congress first met we were told that there was to be a deficit in the Treasury of about $28,000,000. Under Republican administration, the year ending June 30, 1893, there had been no deficit; the revenue had been equal to the expenditures, and a little more; but after we got together here in session we were told there was going to be a deficit of $28,000,000. That ran along for a time, bad enough to contemplate, but after awhile those figures were revised by the Secretary of the Treasury, and we were told that there was to be a deficit of $78,000,000 about the 30th of June.

Here is the end of the year, and I have the last estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, undoubtedly to be corrected, and the deficit in our receipts, as compared with our expenditures, for the past year is from $75,000,000 to $78,000,000. Why, then, when we have a revenue duty which produces $800,000 and over, we should go and put on another revenue duty which will raise only about $400,000, is one of the things that I can not understand.

There are several things about this bill which, to use the language of a famous comedian, "no fellow can find out," and one of them is, why it is that this marvelous change has come over the spirit of the Democratic dream since this bill came from the House of Representatives. When the bill was in the House of Representatives it was a revenue bill; it was a Democratic bill; it was a reform bill; and adhesion to it was thought to be a test of pure Democracy; the things which were vaunted in the bill, the things which were praised to the skies, the things which were so eulogized that not only the Hall in the other end of this building rang with the eulogies, but all the Democratic papers in the land took up the cry, were that sugar and wool and coal and iron and lead were on the free list.

That was the crowning glory of the Wilson bill, and there went up one universal cry from the mouth of all Democrats in the United States just as soon as this bill got over into the Chamber, "Pass the Wilson bill."

What was the Wilson bill? A bill for free coal. That was the burden of the Democratic song; that was the significance of the Democratic cry, their banner cry—"Pass the Wilson bill." Well, the Wilson bill said "free coal." I suppose I may not read from what anyone said in the other House, but I want to read what was said somewhere.

Of all the reductions made in this bill there are none in their benefit to the consumer, none in their benefit to the laborer, that can be compared with the removal of taxes from the materials of industry. We have felt that we could not begin a thorough reform of the existing system, built up, as I have shown, story by story, until it has pierced the clouds, except by a removal of all taxation on the great materials that lie at the basis of modern industry, and so the bill proposes to put on the free list wool, iron ore, coal, and lumber. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There was a Democratic doctrine then. Then there was a little something more said about coal.

With such exhaustless supplies, so close to the surface that the cost of mining has been reduced to a minimum, to less than is possible in Nova Scotia, to less than is actually paid in England, the question of a tariff on coal is neither a question of protection nor a question of revenue, but simply a question of subsidy to the great railroad corporations of the country.

We are exporters of coal for sale in neutral markets. We have a steadily and of late years a rapidly growing export trade, and retain this duty only to hold on to markets so remote from the coal mines that railroad transportation is their chief item in the cost of fuel.

Have we at last, Mr. President, come to the reason why this Wilson bill, which put coal on the free list, has been changed, and a duty of 40 cents a ton put upon coal? I have got so that in scanning the bill and analyzing its provisions, it has come to me naturally to hunt for a corporation behind any of the proposed advances. Let me read again what was given elsewhere as the only reason for keeping a duty on coal:

A tariff on coal is neither a question of protection nor a question of revenue, but simply a question of subsidy to the great railroad corporations of the country.

It was a Democrat who said that, and a Democrat who has a right to speak for the Democratic party. The bill came here to the Senate with that notice, that to put a duty on coal would be to grant a "subsidy to the great railroad corporations of the country." Yet, notwithstanding that, here comes this duty on coal. My only objection to it is that it is not enough, as I shall try to show before I get through the few remarks which I am making.

To show that there was not any mistake about what the Wilson bill meant, I wish to read from a review made of it by a very distinguished exponent of the Democratic party, so much so that he was invited to write the review of the Wilson bill for the North American Review of February, 1894:

The Democratic party, now in possession of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, has from its origin been the advocate and defender of equal rights and equal duties. It has been the uncompromising foe of class legislation and special privileges. In the press, on the stump, and in the conventions it has condemned every form of legislation that conferred bounties and exclusive privileges on one class of people and corresponding burdens on another. Two years ago the people took us at our word, and placed in our hands the constitutional power to redeem the pledges we had so often made. We are now face to face with the responsibility, and the future is soon to tell whether we have been sincere in the professions we have made, and whether we have the ability to execute the trust confided to our hands.

Let me read once more what this other noted Democrat says:

A tariff on coal is neither a question of protection nor a question of revenue, but simply a question of subsidy to the great railroad corporations of the country.

The article in the North American Review proceeds:

The Democratic party * * * in the press, on the stump, and in conventions has condemned every form of legislation that conferred bounties and exclusive privileges on one class of people and corresponding burdens on another.

But here comes this Wilson bill which had free coal in it, with a duty on coal, as its author says, for the benefit of the "great corporations of the country." Now, we go on a little further with this review of the Wilson bill:

The very first step to take is to put all materials that are to be manufactured or remanufactured on the free list. The work must not stop with wool and coal and ores, but it must be extended to all materials.

In looking at the schedules, the first in the list is chemicals, every article of which should be placed on the free list. Almost every article on that schedule is used in our metal and textile manufactures. In the metal schedule, all ores, pigs, bars, blooms, slabs, ingots, sheets, plates, and rods, should be freed from taxation. In textiles, all wool, cotton, silk, flax, hemp, and jute, and the yarns and threads of every fiber should be admitted free. All machinery oils and dyes, and everything that increases the cost of the finished articles, and especially of those we export, should be untaxed.

But wool, coal, and ore were indispensable. It never entered the mind of this distinguished exponent of the Democratic party that the party in the Senate could stop short of wool, coal, and ore. That was in the Wilson bill. The Wilson bill, as it passed the other House, was Democratic gospel. After looking at the bill before us I think the author of this article, who, by the way, is the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], will read the following sentence from his review with interest:

Invested with full power, the people expect us to emancipate them from the tryanny to which they have been so long enslaved. We have put our hands to the plow and should not look back. We have started out from Sodom, and should "remember Lot's wife." There should be no halting, doubting, or debating as we stand on the banks of the stream.

That was when free coal was going to be adopted as a Democratic measure. But it strikes me if that Senator could now express his real sentiments about this bill, which goes back upon every promise of the Democratic party made to secure votes, he would think that if they had started from Sodom with the bill as it was passed by the other House they were only going over to Gomorrah with the bill as it will pass the Senate.

Mr. President, there are different degrees of virtue in the world, as we were told the other day by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], there are different degrees of selfishness. There is that virtue which is proof against all assailment, which nothing can overthrow and nothing can destroy. Then there is virtue which resists a good deal of temptation and pretty strong assaults. Then there is virtue which yields pretty easily when tempted or assaulted.

Now, we are told by the Senators on the other side that they have been forced to this matter of a duty on coal; that they yielded from necessity, not from choice. They are free traders still in this matter of coal. They are going home to their constituents and they are going to ring the changes on the same old platform again; they are going to tell them that they are for free coal, but they could not get it this time and they will next; and the reason why they could not get it this time was because they were overpowered and forced, and their virtue was not proof against the assault which was made upon them.

Mr. President, we have not seen any evidence here of resistance which entitles the people who put up that plea to any great sympathy. I never before have understood that two or four or six persons could control a Democratic caucus. I had supposed that the majority controlled in a Democratic caucus. When I am told that two or three or four or one mythical Senator had to be conciliated by a duty on coal when everybody else wanted to make free coal, I beg to say that there is not any such evidence of resistance as justifies the assumption of any extraordinary virtue in respect to this bill, and that the plea of being forced to take the protective duties which are scattered all along through the bill will scarcely go down hereafter even with Democratic audiences.

Now, Mr. President, a little more on the subject of the fierce assault which was made upon the virtue of Senators on the other side. They might have taken warning from something which was found in the letter of acceptance of President Cleveland, which was not incorporated in the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. They might have taken warning from this, when the President said:

The struggle for unearned advantage at the doors of the Government tramples on the rights of those who patiently rely on the assurance of American equality. Every governmental concession to clamorous favorites invites corruption in political affairs by encouraging the expenditure of money to debauch suffrage in support of a policy directly favorable to private and selfish gain.

I think the Senators who were constructing this bill, when the great coal barons we have heard so much about came to the doors of the committee room and demanded this duty, might well have turned as to their political bible to the following phrase of President Cleveland:

Every governmental concession to clamorous favorites invites corruption in political affairs by encouraging the expenditure of money to debauch suffrage in support of a policy directly favorable to private and selfish gain.

Is it so that the concessions which have been made to clamorous Democratic favorites will debauch the suffrage? That is what the President says. The chairman of the committee had a little experience with these clamorous favorites in the construction of the bill. With, as I thought, a somewhat unnecessary parade of the virtue which had been overthrown, he said when he made his speech in place of a report upon the bill that—

Obstacles have, of course, been encountered gigantic in size, arrogant, insolent, dictatorial, and, in some instances, sinister, perfidious, and dishonest in character.

Were those resisted or did the Senate committee succumb to them? Were the influences which got this duty on coal obstacles which were "gigantic in size, arrogant, insolent, dictatorial, sinister, perfidious, and dishonest in character?" I do not want to believe it, Mr. President; I am loath to believe it; but we must find some reason why these pledges, and these promises, these oft-reiterated principles of the Democratic party have been overthrown, and why when they were once incorporated in the Wilson bill in the nature of free coal they are overthrown by the imposition of a duty of 40 cents a ton on coal. I do not suppose that the Senator reporting the bill intended the coal barons by this sentence—I merely read it to show what they had to contend with—

> Manufacturing interests * * * haughtily strutting the corridors and issuing their edicts in the tones of dictators for or against the enactment of pending measures in the halls of Congress.

Unfortunately the manufacturing interests, however much they have strutted these corridors, however loud they may have been in their demands, and however dictatorial they may have been, have not succeeded in getting so well taken care of as these coal barons.

There was something said this morning about statesmanship. It was intimated that if we did not vote upon this subject on this side of the Senate we should not be statesmen. I would rather not vote at all than to vote for something that I do not believe in. I express my private conviction (and I express it publicly, for the benefit of all Senators on the other side of the Chamber) that a majority of the Democratic Senators do not believe in a duty on coal. Yet they are going to vote for it. They vote one way when they believe another.

It is a sad spectacle, Mr. President, when the whole Democratic majority in the Senate quails and surrenders before two or three. Do they believe in the majority rule, or do they believe in the minority rule? Have they the capacity to carry into legislation their belief? I respect and admire the discipline of the Democratic party. I can not respect their surrender of the many to one or a few; but when they have surrendered I respect and admire their discipline. Senators are going to vote for this bill when they know it will consign them to private life in their own States.

Democratic Senators are going to vote for this bill, when they know that it works a revolution in politics and brings the Republican party again into power. Yet there is no flinching. Not a Senator halts in the onward march to the destruction of the Democratic party. The discipline is splendid. It is like the soldier of a forlorn hope. He believes that he is going to be shot down; he believes that he is not going to succeed; but he never falters or misses a step. Even in that grand charge at Balaklava of the six hundred, where some one had blundered, not a soldier faltered.

> Forward, the Light Brigade!
> Was there a man dismay'd?
> Not tho' the soldier knew
> Someone had blunder'd;
> Their's not to make reply,
> Their's not to reason why,
> Their's but to do and die:
> Into the valley of Death
> Rode the six hundred.
> * * * * *
> Storm'd at with shot and shell,
> Boldly they rode and well,
> Into the jaws of Death,
> Into the mouth of Hell,
> Rode the six hundred.

Not a Democratic Senator flinches or falters, knowing that the action of the Senate in passing the bill, unless the action shall be overthrown in the conference, means the death of the Democratic party.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if that is the reason why he so vigorously opposes our action?

Mr. PLATT. I warn you to "flee from the wrath to come."

Mr. HARRIS. Warn yourselves.

Mr. PLATT. Believing one way and voting another reminds me of nothing so much in the world as the account which Mr. By-ends gave of his kindred in Pilgrim's Progress.

It will be remembered that after Faithful had lost his life at Vanity Fair, and Christian and Hopeful escaped with their lives and went on their journey, Mr. By-ends, of the town of Fair-speech, overtook them. Christian questioned him with regard to his ancestry, and I shall read his answer:

> CHRISTIAN. Pray, who are your kindred there, if a man may be so bold?
> BY-ENDS. Almost the whole town, and in particular my Lord Turn-about, my Lord Time-server, my Lord Fair-speech, from whose ancestors that town first took its name; also Mr. Smoothman, Mr. Facing-both-ways, Mr. Anything, and the parson of our parish, Mr. Two-tongues, was my mother's own brother by father's side, and to tell you the truth I am become a gentleman of good quality. Yet my grandfather was but a waterman, looking one way and rowing another, and I got most of my estate by the same occupation.

Believing one way, and voting another, and hoping to secure in some way a Democratic estate by that means. They will be mistaken, Mr. President.

I have thus far alluded to what seemed to me the shameful inconsistency of the Democratic party in the Senate in disfiguring, so far as the Democratic party of the country is concerned, this bill by protective duties. I am glad enough to get them. When I find one in the bill I vote with the committee to retain it. I only wish they had some principle about it, and that the bill was not fashioned on the principle of the church festival grab-bag, by which everybody grabs and gets all he can, for if the grab-bag game was to be applied to the bill I regret that Republican Senators have not had an opportunity to put their hands in and grab too.

Mr. STEWART. And Western Senators in regard to wool.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Nevada speaks about wool. I want to say that I regard free wool as the crowning shame of the bill. It is shameful in a good many respects, but that is the worst. What I complain of is that if the bill is to be constructed on the grab-bag principle we are not allowed in the game. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], in his youthful impetuosity, one night told us we were not to be in the game at all; that the Republicans were to have no hand in it; that it was all going to be constructed by Democratic hands. I had not then come to understand just exactly how it was to be constructed.

My complaint about the duty under consideration is that it is not large enough, and I propose to vote for the duty proposed by the Senator from Washington. If this has been a revenue duty at 75 cents a ton nobody ought to oppose it. Nobody ought to oppose a duty of 60 cents a ton. As I said, we do not want to throw away this revenue. I never did see such hot haste as the Democratic party makes to empty the Treasury, and to keep it empty. If there is an article here which produces revenue like wool, coal, lumber, brandy, and all those things which might stop the continual outward flow of money from the present Democratic Treasury, they will not have any revenue from that source.

I shall vote for this proposed duty of 60 cents a ton, because I want the coal we use mined in this country by American workmen, and if there are some undesirable men among those American workmen, some who think they do not have their rights and take improper measures to obtain those rights, as they suppose them to exist, that is no reason why I should favor having this work done out of the country.

I wish the Democratic free trader could get the one idea into his mind as to what a benefit it is to the country to have all our work done here, what a benefit it is to have our wool grown here, and our ore dug here, and our coal mined here rather than to have it done somewhere else. I should suppose that the underlying patriotism of American Senators would get the better of their party predelections and party pride, so that they would not put into the bill anything which would strike down industries in this country.

Mr. President, at a rate of 40 cents a ton coal will not be mined in this country in competition with Nova Scotia and Vancouver Island except at a great reduction of wages to the miner, and it is poor wages enough that the miners get now. Everybody knows that. The Senator from West Virginia admits it. He admits that at 40 cents a ton the Nova Scotia coal will meet the Cumberland coal at New York or further south. Who will mine the Nova Scotia coal? Not an American workman. And what will the American workman do, who might have mined the coal in the United States if the duty had not been reduced from 75 cents a ton to 40 cents a ton?

He will not work at less wages in the mines, because when the work is being performed in Nova Scotia and on Vancouver Island there will be just so much less work performed in the mines of this country, and there will be just so many less men required to perform it as are employed in Nova Scotia and in Vancouver Island. What is he to do? What other occupation is he going into? Is he to go into the already crowded occupation of farming, with its blessed prospects under free wool, and free wheat, and free corn, and free oats? The rest of the miners will be told and told justly, that they can not compete with the Nova Scotia mines and the Vancouver mines at the rate of wages which has been paid; that if they will go on paying the same rate of wages their coal will be met at New York with Nova Scotia coal, which will come down to Philadelphia, and the coal of Vancouver will go on down the coast to San Diego, and therefore the wages have got to be reduced.

Mr. President, I stand for the system of protection because I will not desert the American laborer. I have no special right to call myself his champion, but I believe that the continuance of all these industries in the United States by American labor is the salvation of our civilization, and it is for that reason that I am a protectionist. No supposed sentiment that we could get coal a little cheaper in New England will for a moment turn me from the plain, straight path of protection, which a man who acts from principle and not from selfish aims ought to pursue.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Washington will be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. If we had fewer common scolds in the Senate we would get on with the public business much more rapidly. I move to lay the amendment on the table in order that we may make some progress.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is evident that the discussion upon this particular amendment is exhausted, and I hope the Senator will allow the vote to be taken on it.

Mr. HARRIS. I was speaking of the character of the discussion and not of the discussion itself.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion and allow the vote to be taken upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a direct vote on the amendment it is just as satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as heretofore announced to-day, with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], which I will transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce my pair with the junior senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. HIGGINS. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], who is paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], enabling the Senator from Mississippi and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], but with the distinct understanding that I may vote when necessary to make a quorum. Is my vote necessary to make a quorum?

Mr. CAFFERY. I announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. VILAS (after having voted in the negative). I learn that another Senator has transferred his pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] has not yet been paired. I therefore transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. I have already voted.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. He would vote "nay" if present, and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hawley,	Manderson,
Allison,	Dubois,	Higgins,	Quay,
Carey,	Frye,	Hoar,	Squire,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Lodge,	Teller.

NAYS—34.

Allen,	Call,	Gorman,	Jones, Ark.
Bate,	Cockrell,	Gray,	Kyle,
Berry,	Daniel,	Harris,	Lindsay,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Hill,	McLaurin,
Brice,	George,	Jarvis,	Martin,
Mitchell, Wis.	Peffer,	Smith,	Voorhees,
Morgan,	Pugh,	Turpie,	Walsh.
Palmer,	Ransom,	Vest.
Pasco,	Roach,	Vilas,

NOT VOTING—35.

Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Proctor,
Butler,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Caffery,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Camden,	Hale,	Murphy,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Hunton,	Patton,	Washburn,
Chandler,	Irby,	Perkins,	White,
Coke,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Dixon,	McMillan,	Platt,	Wolcott.
Dolph,	McPherson,	Power,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. In line 9, after the word "culm," I move to insert the words "such as will pass through a half-inch screen."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee in line 9, after the word "culm," by inserting "such as will pass through a half-inch screen;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Coal, bituminous, and shale, 40 cents per ton; coal slack or culm such as will pass through a half-inch screen, 15 cents per ton.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert as a new paragraph after line 10, page 80:

Coke, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HILL. After the word "coke," I move to strike out "15 per cent ad valorem" and insert "shall be admitted free of duty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HILL. The Wilson bill as it passed the other House placed coke and charcoal and articles of that nature upon the free list. The present bill, which has been termed the Gorman bill, provides a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem on coke, and leaves charcoal still upon the free list. I do not propose to detain the Senate with any argument in favor of placing coke upon the free list. I submit the question to the judgment of the Senate. I should like to hear some reason why the bill as it passed the other House is departed from in this particular. I should like to know why coke has been changed from the free list to the dutiable list and charcoal allowed to remain on the free list. I await some reply to my inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HILL. No explanation seems to be made for this most extraordinary distinction. I assume that none can be made. I will content myself, Mr. President, with asking for the yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator in charge of the bill state about how much coke is imported into the United States.

Mr. VEST. Eighty-seven thousand two hundred and thirty-eight dollars' worth in 1893.

Mr. ALLISON. Where does it come from?

Mr. VEST. I will say in reply to the Senator from New York that it is one of the blessings of our rule that we are unable to stop debate or control the action of the Senate in any way. The Senators in charge of the bill are constrained to give as little cause for discussion as possible. It is generally used as a great argument against any previous question in the Senate that this is the only place in the country where there is unlimited free debate. The fact is that our present rules discourage debate and make it an ex parte matter entirely. That has been the experience of the Senate on various occasions.

When it was determined to put a duty of 40 cents upon coal, as a matter of course, and I use the words advisedly, it followed that there should be a duty upon coke, and as there was $87,000 worth imported into the United States under the McKinley act, the rate being 20 per cent, it was considered only proper to put a duty of 15 per cent upon coke, a reduction of 5 per cent from the McKinley duty.

The Treasury reports do not give the countries from which coke comes.

Mr. FRYE. It must come from British Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. It comes from British Columbia, I suppose.

Mr. VEST. I think that is very probable. I do not know.

At any rate, I have given the amount of importations, and that is all I am able to state.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], so as to enable the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KYLE (when his name was called). I wish to state that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has gone from the Chamber, and I am paired with him. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MURPHY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his named was called). I am generally paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. I suppose if he were present he would vote "nay," but I am not advised, and therefore I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] is not in the Chamber, and I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. CALL. I am authorized to vote in the absence of a quorum and I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. KYLE. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], who is the regular pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], having returned to the Chamber and announced his pair, I will vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I have a right to vote under an arrangement with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], with whom I am paired when my vote is necessary in order to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY. Under the arrangement I made with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] I have a right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the negative). I understand a quorum is present without my vote, and I withdraw it.

Mr. TELLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I understand the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has announced a pair with me.

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—4.

Allen,	Davis,	Hill,	Peffer.

NAYS—46.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Quay,
Allison,	Frye,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Bate,	George,	Lodge,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Brice,	Gray,	Manderson,	Squire,
Caffery,	Hale,	Martin,	Turpie,
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Carey,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Pasco,	Washburn.
Daniel,	Jarvis,	Perkins,
Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—35.

Berry,	Call,	Coke,	Gallinger,
Blanchard,	Cameron,	Dixon,	Gibson,
Butler,	Chandler,	Dolph,	Gordon,
Hoar,	Mills,	Platt,	Teller,
Hunton,	Mitchell, Oregon	Power,	Vilas,
Irby,	Morrill,	Proctor,	White,
Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Sherman,	Wilson,
McMillan,	Patton,	Shoup,	Wolcott.
McPherson,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 319, in the following words:

319. Manufactured corks, 20 per cent ad valorum.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

319. Corks, manufactured, 10 cents per pound.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the committee amendment by adding the words "wholly or partially," after the word "corks," in line 12.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

320. Dice, draughts, chessmen, chess balls, and billiard, pool, and bagatelle balls, of ivory, bone, or other materials, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph by striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty;" so as to read, "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the committee will withdraw the amendment. There certainly can be no reason for reducing the duty on dice and this class of articles from the House provision or the present law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee have made no agreement to withdraw this amendment, and I think it will have to stand.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move——

Mr. ALLISON. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. Let us vote it down.

Mr. ALDRICH. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have a division upon the amendment. The other House put 50 per cent on these articles, which are articles of pure luxury. I think we ought to have the sense of the Senate on the question.

Mr. MANDERSON. Most assuredly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. The duty in the McKinley act was prohibitory. Only $21,582 worth came in in 1893. While they are articles of luxury—that is, I suppose men can live without them—yet they are used in innocent amusements. The idea that a man can not play a game of backgammon without paying an enormous duty upon dice or that our people can not make them——

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the other House provided a duty of 50 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly, whether our people can make these articles or not, there ought to be a high rate of duty imposed on them.

Mr. ALLISON. Fifty per cent is too much, 30 per cent is a fair revenue duty. It is not prohibitory; it is not oppressive, and it makes enough difference, if there should be a difference, between labor here and abroad, which is the standing argument in favor of high duties.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] told us to-day that he is supporting this bill because he wanted to take the burden off of men's shoulders. Whose shoulders will it take burdens off to reduce the duty on dice and billiard and pool balls? It does not seem to me we ought to be in great haste to take burdens off the shoulders of the people who shake dice for drinks and loaf around billiard rooms.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is true that the importations of these articles last year amounted to only a little more than $21,000, but it is manifest that they were manufactured in this country and gave employment to American workmen. They are not articles of prime necessity. It seems to me that instead of giving a practical monopoly of the business of manufacturing dice, chessmen, and other articles of that kind to artisans in Europe we ought to keep the manufacture in this country.

We confer a benefit upon our workingmen in permitting them to manufacture these articles, the use of which very often works to the detriment of those who employ them. It does seem to me that this is one item in the schedule that ought to be left unchanged. That it can do any earthly good to the people of the United States to allow foreign mechanics to manufacture these articles and send them to our people to purchase, even though they may get them a little cheaper by the process, surpasses my comprehension. It is one of the things, it strikes me, that we ought to insist upon, and, if possible, retain as it is in the existing tariff law. I am surprised that any Senator should insist that we ought to reduce the duty on these articles so that they may come in here and be bought perhaps a little cheaper by our people.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a question entirely of revenue, and the people of the country in looking upon it will not understand how it is that we increase the duty upon sugar, a necessity of life, and cut it off on dice, billiard balls, and such articles, which are not a necessity, but rather a luxury. It seems to me the committee ought to withdraw the amendment and leave the duty just as it was when the bill came from the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the years and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN].

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). Under the terms of my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] I am permitted to vote if necessary to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] for the day unless the Senator from South Carolina comes in. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. HIGGINS. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] is willing, we can transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I am willing to make such an arrangement.

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN. I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER. I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will withhold my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. CAREY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I ask the Senator from Mississippi if it would be agreeable to him to transfer pairs that he and I may vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Mississippi has announced that he would vote "nay" but for the fact that he was paired; and in the face of that announcement a Senator on the other side proposes to transfer pairs with him so as to get two more votes on the record. The Senators can determine for themselves the fairness of such a proceeding.

Mr. GALLINGER. I stand on the declaration as it was made. I simply followed the usages of the Senate and made a transfer of my pair. The Senator from Tennessee has no right to call my action in question.

Mr. GEORGE. There was no necessity, I presume, for a transfer of my pair. I suppose the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] would have voted "nay" if present, and that was my vote.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bate,	Gray,	Murphy,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Caffery,	Jarvis,	Pugh,	Voorhees
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,	Walsh.
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Gorman,	Morgan.	Turpie,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Hawley,	Manderson,
Allen,	Frye,	Higgins,	Palmer,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Hill,	Peffer,
Chandler,	George,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Cullom,	Hale,	Kyle,	Quay,
Davis.	Hansbrough,	Lodge,	Washburn.

NOT VOTING—36.

Berry,	Dixon,	Martin,	Proctor,
Blanchard,	Dolph,	Mills,	Sherman,
Brice,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Butler,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,
Call,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Camden,	Irby,	Patton,	Teller,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	White,
Carey,	McMillan,	Platt,	Wilson,
Coke,	McPherson,	Power,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

321. Dolls, doll heads, toy marbles of whatever material composed, and all other toys not composed of rubber, china, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen or stone ware, and not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem. This paragraph shall not take effect until October 1, 1894.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the paragraph, in lines 22 and 23, by striking out the words, "This paragraph shall not take effect until October 1, 1894," and inserting "This paragraph shall not take exect until January 1, 1895."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to explain briefly why that change of date is proposed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There were some representations made to the committee as to the date, October 1, interfering with the operation of the trade in some way that I do not distinctly recall. I remember that we agreed to it, thinking at the time it was a good and sufficient reason. I have some doubt about the propriety of it myself, and I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment and leave the matter stand as it was.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not make any suggestion respecting that. I did not know but that there was some special reason why the date should be changed to January 1.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Some statements were made as to its interfering with the time of manufacture in some way that I do not recall. As is suggested to me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], the dealers have to purchase these articles long before, and the former date interferes with the trade in a way that we are not justified in interfering with it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know about the matter, but I suggest that as these articles are sold largely at Christmas for the holiday trade it is very possible that the makers in this country desire not to be cut off by the foreign manufacturers before the holiday trade. I do not know that to be fact, however.

Mr. FRYE. That is undoubtedly the reason.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose that is true, and I think the amendment a very proper one.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is some such trade reason as that.

Mr. HALE. Why not let the amendment be agreed to and it can be fixed in the Senate afterwards, if necessary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope that will be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five." I do not ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, but I desire to have a vote on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 21, paragraph 321, before the words "per centum," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read: "35 per cent ad valorem."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

322. Emery grains, and emery manufactured, ground, pulverized, or refined, 1 cent per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 1, on page 81, after the word "refined," to strike out "1 cent per pound" and insert "20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the committee amendment and insert "eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Explosive substances:

323. Firecrackers of all kinds, 8 cents per pound, but no allowance shall be made for tare or damage thereon.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 4, after the word "kinds," to strike out "8 cents per pound," and insert "50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope that the amendment will not prevail. The proposition of the committee will reduce the revenue from the importation of firecrackers at least $350,000 per annum, and if there is any public reason why the revenue from the importation of firecrackers should be reduced to this extent I should be very glad to have the Senator from Arkansas state it. I do not believe that any such reason exists, and I do not believe that that change can be defended here or elsewhere on any ground of public policy.

Mr. VEST. The duty under the McKinley act upon single firecrackers is 147.32 per cent. The importation was $335,478. We propose to reduce this ad valorem to 50 per cent.

It is true that the boys of this country can live and exist without firecrackers, and that they are a luxury; but at the same time, by the customs and habits of the country, we know that firecrackers will be used and will be imported; and we know that our people are also manufacturing them, and that the skill and resources of the American people, with a moderate duty, will insure the revenue and will give the manufacturers all the advantages they need.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator from Missouri state where any firecrackers are manufactured in the United States?

Mr. VEST. I understand that there is a large factory in the city of New York. That is my information.

Mr. ALDRICH. I never knew of it.

Mr. VEST. And if I am not mistaken, there is a large factory in the city of St. Louis.

Mr. ALDRICH. There may be some Chinamen who make firecrackers in this country.

Mr. VEST. I am positive with regard to the fact that we manufacture firecrackers; but it is true that the great bulk of them come in from abroad, and that China furnishes most of the importation that comes into this country; but our people have been, I think, manufacturing them to a considerable extent lately.

But, Mr. President, if it is necessary to exclude firecrackers from the country, then double the duty in the McKinley act and collect no revenue from them. It seems to me 50 per cent duty is enough to put on them, and the enormous duty in the McKinley act is to my mind absurd, unless we propose to use it for the purpose of prohibition.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to say that we have been manufacturing firecrackers in this country within a few years; I think the manufacture of very large crackers, somewhat high explosives, has grown up in this country, but the small, common firecrackers, with which everybody is familiar, I do not think are yet made here. I think only the large ones, the high-explosive, giant, or thunder crackers.

Mr. ALDRICH. With the peculiar notions the Senator from Missouri has as to what are necessaries of life, I suppose we shall have to submit to this duty. We have had the duties reduced upon cosmetics and upon alcoholic perfumery and artificial flowers on the ground, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, that they were necessaries of life, and now he proposes to add another item to the catalogue in the shape of firecrackers.

If the revenue from this source is to be maintained, it will be necessary to import three times as many firecrackers as we do now. Is that desirable? Who is desirous of having three times as many firecrackers imported into the United States as now?

Mr. WHITE. The boys.

Mr. ALDRICH. Possibly, but I think the Senator from California will agree with me that there are quite enough imported now. I do not think we have suffered—possibly they have in California—from having too few firecrackers. But, with all deference to the action of the committee, it seems to me to reduce the duty on firecrackers two-thirds is simply absurd.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should move to strike out "50 per cent ad valorem" and insert "8 cents per pound" but for the fact that the same object will be accomplished by voting against the amendment of the committee, and letting the paragraph stand as it came from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

324. Fulminates, fulminating powders, and like articles, not specially provided for in this act, 30 per cent ad valorem.

335. Gunpowder, and all explosive substances used for mining, blasting, artillery, or sporting purposes, when valued at 20 cents or less per pound, 5 cents per pound; valued above 20 cents per pound, 8 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 325, after the word "purposes," at the end of line 11, strike out "when valued at 20 cents or less per pound, 5 cents per pound; valued above 20 cents per pound, 8 cents per pound," and insert "10 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment of the committee is withdrawn.

The Secretary read as follows:

326. Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph, in line 19, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. FRYE. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph what I send to the desk.

326. Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, per gross of 144 boxes, containing not more than 100 matches per box, 8 cents per gross; when imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each, three-fourths of 1 cent per 1 000 matches.

Mr. FRYE. This specific duty is about equivalent to 25 per cent ad valorem. I offer it on account of the information contained in this letter from the Portland Star Match Company. It is as follows:

If Wilson bill is passed as amended Canadian and Swedish matches will drive us out of business, unless labor will submit to a reduction of at least 50 per cent. Do all you can to keep present duty of 10 cents per gross. Will write.

In our factory one-third of the labor is done by girls at $1 per day; two-thirds by men and boys at an average of $1.37 per day.

In Canada girls at about 40 cents per day do nearly all the work, very few men and boys being employed.

In Sweden, we are informed, the work is done principally by girls at 20 cents per day.

Again, on glue, whiting, and phosphorus we are to pay a duty of 25 per cent each, while our competitors will pay none.

All we want is to be kept on an even footing with our competitors. Hope you will do all you can for us.

Truly, yours,

PORTLAND STAR MATCH CO.

This, to be sure, is a small industry, but it employs about six thousand people.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This criticism, as I understand, is to the House bill as amended.

Mr. FRYE. This is a criticism of the Senate amendment reducing the rate from 20 to 10 per cent, but these persons desire very much a specific duty; and as I have drafted the amendment it is a specific duty equivalent, as I have said, to about 25 per cent ad valorem. I wish the committee would accept it. I have reduced the rate in the McKinley act from 10 cents per gross to 8 cents per gross, and from 1 cent to three-quarters of a cent per thousand matches when imported in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I propose an amendment, which I send to the desk, to be numbered 326½, to come in after the paragraph just acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

326½. Musical instruments, or parts thereof, except pianoforte actions, and parts thereof, strips for musical instruments not otherwise enumerated, cases for musical instruments, pitch pipes, tuning forks, and tuning hammers, and metronomes, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. To what does the exception refer?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It excepts only the pianoforte actions and parts thereof.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is another reduction upon articles of luxury, and it ought not to be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

327. Percussion caps, 30 per cent ad valorem; blasting caps, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 21, after the words "blasting caps," I move to strike out "35 per cent ad valorem" and insert "$2.07 per thousand caps."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

328. Feathers and downs of all kinds, when dressed, colored, or manufactured, including quilts of down and other manufactures of down, and also including dressed and finished birds suitable for millinery ornaments, and artificial and ornamental feathers, fruits, grains, leaves, flowers, and stems, or parts thereof, of whatever material composed, suitable for millinery use, not specially provided for in this act, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out "35 per cent" and insert "50 per cent." What the committee propose is another reduction upon articles of artificial feathers, flowers, and millinery ornaments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 328, on page 82, line 5, before the word "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read, "50 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

329. Furs, dressed on the skin but not made up into articles, and furs not on the skin, prepared for hatters' use, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 7, after the word "articles," to insert "20 per cent ad valorem;" and in the same line, before the word "furs," to strike out the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move in line 8, before the words "per centum," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to suggest that this is the McKinley rate, but perhaps I had better not make the suggestion. I withdraw it in deference to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We thought that perhaps furs were a luxury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

330. Fans of all kinds, except common palm-leaf fans, 40 per cent ad valorem.

331. Gun wads of all descriptions, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in paragraph 331, line 12, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

332. Hair, human, if clean or drawn but not manufactured, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as paragraph 332½ what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph:

332½. Hair, curled, suitable for bedsor mattresses, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. What is the rate now?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Fifteen per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that paragraphs 333 and 334 may be passed over for the present. I have some figures which I wish to present in relation to them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Those paragraphs may be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, paragraphs 333 and 334 will be passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

335. Hats for men's, women's, and children's wear, composed of the fur of the rabbit, beaver, or other animals, or of which such fur is the component material of chief value, wholly or partially manufactured, including fur hat bodies, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment after the words "hat bodies," at the end of line 23, to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. VEST. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "forty;" so as to make the rate "40 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. PLATT. That is not a sufficient duty, but I despair of getting any higher duty by moving an amendment. The rate ought to be 55 per cent, as is in the existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

Jewelry and precious stones:

336. Jewelry: All articles not specially provided for in this act, and commercially known as "jewelry," and cameos in frames, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "act," in line 3, I move to strike out the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, it is proposed to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read, "fifty per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the reason for reducing the duties upon jewelry is the fact that jewelry is largely a necessity of life in Missouri and in Arkansas. I can not understand any other reason why this reduction should be made. Certainly the rate ought to be retained at 50 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

337. Pearls, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph, in line 6, strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator who has this bill in charge to allow paragraph 338 to be passed over. I wish to offer an amendment, which has not been printed, in regard to diamonds and precious stones.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to passing the paragraph over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Leather, and manufacturers of:

Sole leather, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph, in line 17, before the words "per cent," to strike out "five" and insert "ten."

Mr. PEFFER. I propose an amendment striking out paragraphs 339, 340, 341, and 342, and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraphs 339, 340, 341, and 342 and insert:

All leather and manufactures of leather, except ladies' and children's gloves, provided for in paragraphs 343 to 348, inclusive, shall be admitted free of duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

340. Bend or belting leather, and leather not specially provided for in this act, 10 per cent ad valorem.

341. Calfskins, tanned, or tanned and dressed, dressed upper leather, including patent, enameled, and japanned leather dressed or undressed, and finished; chamois or other skins not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 15 per cent ad valorem; bookbinders' calfskins, kangaroo, sheep, and goat skins, including lamb and kid skins, dressed and finished, 15 per cent ad valorem; skins for morocco, tanned but unfinished, 10 per cent ad valorem; pianoforte leather, and pianoforte action leather, 25 per cent ad valorem; boots and shoes, made of leather, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 341, in line 25 on page 83, to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" in line 3, page 84, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" and in line 6, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. The articles included in this paragraph might properly be called necessaries of life. Instead of being treated as jewelry and the various other articles we have passed over, which were reduced from 20 to 30 and 40 per cent, the duties on these articles are increased from 15 to 20 per cent, showing, I suppose, that some different influence has affected these articles, other than the influence which affected duties on jewelry and articles of that nature.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

342. Leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps, or other forms, suitable for conversion into manufactured articles, 20 per cent ad valorem.

343. Gloves made wholly or in part of leather, whether wholly or partly manufactured, shall pay duty at the following rates, the lengths stated in each case being the extreme length when stretched to their full extent, namely:

344. Ladies' or children's "glace" finish, Schmaschen (of sheep origin), not over 14 inches in length, $1 per dozen pairs; over 14 inches and not over 17 inches in length, $1.50 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $2 per dozen pairs; men's "glace" finish, Schmaschen (sheep), $2 per dozen pairs.

Mr. VEST. In paragraph 344, line 23, I move to strike out the word "two," and insert "three;" so as to read, "$3 per dozen pairs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

345. Ladies' or children's "glace" finish, lamb or sheep, not over 14 inches in length, $1.75 per dozen pairs; over 14 and not over 17 inches in length, $2.75 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $3.75 per dozen pairs. Men's "glace" finish, lamb or sheep, $3 per dozen pairs.

Mr. VEST. In paragraph 345, line 8, I move to strike out "eight," and insert "four," before the word "dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

346. Ladies' or children's "glace" finish, goat, kid, or other leather than of sheep origin, not over 14 inches in length, $2.25 per dozen pairs; over 14 and not over 17 inches in length, $3 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $4 per dozen pairs; men's "glace" finish, kid, goat, or other leather than of sheep origin, $3 per dozen pairs.

Mr. VEST. In that paragraph, I move to strike out, in line 15, the word "three," before the word "dollars," and insert "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

347. Ladies' or children's, of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, not over 14 inches in length, $1.75 per dozen pairs; over 14 and not over 17 inches in length, $2.75 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $3.75 per dozen pairs; men's, of sheep origin, with exterior surface removed, by whatever name known, $3 per dozen pairs.

Mr. VEST. In line 3, page 86, paragraph 347, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "three" and insert "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

348. Ladies' or children's kid, goat, or other leather than of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, not over 14 inches in length, $2.25 per dozen pairs; over 14 inches and not over 17 inches in length, $3 per dozen pairs; over seventeen inches in length, $4 per dozen pairs; men's goat, kid, or other leather than of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, $3 per dozen pairs.

Mr. VEST. In line 15 of that paragraph, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "three" and insert "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

349. In addition to the foregoing rates, there shall be paid on all leather gloves, when lined, 60 cents per dozen pairs.

Mr. VEST. In line 17, I move to strike out "sixty cents" and insert "one dollar."

The amendment was agreed to.

350. Glove tranks, with or without the usual accompanying pieces, shall pay 75 per cent of the duty provided for the gloves in the fabrication of which they are suitable.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to occupy time, but I observe that there is an entirely new classification here in this bill as it comes from the House of Representatives, and I notice that the Senator from Missouri has quite largely increased, not only the specific rate in each paragraph, but at the end of paragraph 349 a dollar a dozen is to be added for gloves lined.

Inasmuch as our tables are all made on the basis of 40 per cent ad valorem, I should like to ask the Senator to give us a general idea of the equivalent ad valorem rates of the proposed scheme, especially on what are known as the cheaper gloves, gloves of cheap origin, worth four and five dollars a dozen.

Mr. VEST. This is a slight increase over the bill as it came from the House in regard to men's gloves. The other rates are substantially unchanged. The intention in the House was to make it about 40 per cent ad valorem or the equivalent, although they adopted specific rates. My impression in regard to it, upon such examination as I could give, was that the duty ought to be ad valorem.

There was no schedule in the whole bill which gave me so much trouble to understand as the duties upon gloves, and I have never yet found any man who understood it. They were made up by experts, by importers, in the McKinley act, and the House followed the same classification. The importers and manufacturers having made the schedule, it is simply impossible for anybody but an expert to know when you put the duty upon a particular length or upon the number of buttons and the number of stitches, what is the equivalent ad valorem.

All I could arrive at was that the House intended to put on the equivalent of about 40 per cent. We have added to some of these classes, for instance, on men's gloves an increase of $1 on a dozen pairs, and it would make slightly over 40 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands this as a sufficient protection to our own glove-makers in New York and elsewhere?

Mr. VEST. It is not all they ask; but so far as I can judge, they always ask more than they expect to get; and it was thought a very fair duty.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is satisfied that none of these duties would go above 50 or 60 per cent?

Mr. VEST. I think not, unless we have been grossly deceived by the appraisers and by the manufacturers and importers. There has been a great difference of opinion as to whether these duties should be ad valorem or specific. The appraisers first held, as shown in the testimony under the bill of 1888, identically the same appraisers—said an ad valorem was the fair duty; but of late years the weight of testimony has been the other way.

It is impossible for an appraiser to sustain an ad valorem duty, because it increases his work so much that it would not be human nature for him to put it upon that ground alone, and so he does not stand by ad valorem duties. But the pressure was tremendous on all sides for a specific duty, and the House has put a specific duty there. We contented ourselves with increasing the rates slightly upon certain classes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to this scale of duty, but I think we ought to have a sort of general understanding amongst ourselves that it is a pretty high rate on some things. The scale as it came from the House was said to be on some of the cheaper classes of goods about 120 per cent ad valorem. I notice the Senator from Missouri has added $1 a dozen here and there. I should think that rate must be in the neighborhood of 150 per cent.

Mr. VEST. The Senator is entirely mistaken. We did not increase the rate on the lower grade of goods, of which he is speaking. The increase was made alone on men's gloves and the higher priced gloves.

Mr. ALDRICH. The increase is satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Miscellaneous manufactures:

351. Manufactures of amber, asbestus, bladders, coral, catgut or whipgut or wormgut, jet, paste, spar, wax, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment after the word "coral," in line 2, page 87, to insert "cork."

The amendment was agreed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

352. Manufactures of bone, chip, grass, horn, India rubber, palm leaf, straw, weeds, or whalebone, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem. But the terms grass and straw shall be understood to mean these substances in their natural form and structure and not the separated fiber thereof.

353. Manufactures of leather, fur, gutta-percha, vulcanized India rubber, known as hard rubber, human hair, papier-mache, plaster of Paris, indurated fiber wares, and other manufactures composed of wood or other pulp, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, all of the above not specially provided for in this act, 30 per cent ad valorem.

354. Manufactures of ivory, vegetable ivory, mother-of-pearl, gelatine, and shell, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, and manufactures known commercially as bead or beaded trimmings or ornaments, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the word "or," in line 6, after the word "beaded," and insert "or jet."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In lines 6 and 7 I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read "40 per cent."

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

355. Masks, composed of paper or pulp, 25 per cent ad valorem.

356. Matting and mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 356, after the word "rattan," in line 10, to insert "and floor matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commonly known as Chinese matting."

Mr. ALDRICH. The proposition of the committee is to take what is known as Chinese matting from the free list and impose a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem upon it.

Chinese matting is not made and can not be made in this country. It is used as carpeting by a large class of the poor people of the United States, and the different treatment afforded to this article, when there is no necessity of revenue, as compared with the reductions which have been made to-day upon jewelry and all those articles of luxury, will, I think, create some surprise, to say the least, in the minds of the American people, and there is no economic policy, of which I know anything, that will justify this action.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, and I desire to say something on the matter of cocoa mats and mattings made of cocoa fiber and rattan. I should be very much obliged if the Senator who has the bill in charge would allow this clause to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. I withdraw the committee amendment, and let the paragraph stand as it came from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will be willing to let this paragraph go over until morning? It is now very late, and I should like to offer an amendment and speak for a few minutes in regard to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean as to Chinese matting or as to cocoa matting?

Mr. LODGE. I mean the paragraph relating to matting made of cocoa fiber or rattan. I desire to offer an amendment to it, and I have some petitions and papers I desire to present. I also desire to say something about it, but it is so very late that I should be obliged if the Senator would let it go over. I shall only take up a few moments.

Mr. VEST. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

357. Pencils of wood filled with lead or other material, 35 per cent ad valorem; slate pencils, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 16 to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty," and in line 18 to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 15, it is proposed to insert "and slate pencils covered with wood;" in line 16, to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" after the words "ad valorem," in line 17, to insert "all other;" and, in line 18, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Are those the ordinary pencils which are used in our schools?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. If it were not so late, I should be glad to have the committee explain why these progressive advances are made from 15 and 20, to 30 and 45 per cent. I suppose it would be asking too much at this late hour of the evening to tax the chairman of the committee to that extent.

Mr. ALLISON. It is too late.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

358. Pencil leads not in wood, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to add as a new paragraph, to be numbered 358½, what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

358½. Photographic dry plates or films, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the present rate on the article?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. About 45 per cent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

359. Pipes, pipe bowls, of all materials, and all smokers' articles whatsoever, not specially provided for in this act, including cigarette books, cigarette-book covers, pouches for smoking or chewing tobacco, and cigarette paper in all forms, 50 per cent ad valorem; all common tobacco pipes of clay, valued at not more than 50 cents per gross, 10 cents per gross.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph in line 25, after the word "pipes" to insert "and pipe bowls;" in line 1, on page 89, after the word "clay" to strike out "valued at not more than 50 cents per gross, 10 cents per gross," and insert "10 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the amendment proposed by the committee, and I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "pipes," in line 25, it is proposed to insert "and pipe bowls made wholly of clay, valued at not more than 50 cents per gross, 10 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the committee amendment will not be adopted. The effect of it would be to absolutely destroy the American industry, not a very large one, it is true, but one employing a very considerable number of men. Clay pipes can not be made in the United States with a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem; and as the paragraphs which have just been passed over give 20 and 25 and 50 per cent upon industries which are of no more consequence so far as the labor in them is concerned, I think it is unjust and an unfair discrimination against the people engaged in this little industry.

We propose to impose 30 per cent, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests, upon common slate pencils and only 10 per cent upon clay pipes.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator call these articles of necessity or articles of luxury?

Mr. ALDRICH. Practically of necessity. They are, however, no more necessary than slate pencils or lead pencils. Does the Senator from Missouri think that clay pipes are any more an article of necessity than lead pencils?

Mr. VEST. I think clay pipes are an article of luxury in my part of the country; I do not know what they are in Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then you should not put a higher duty than 10 per cent upon them.

Mr. VEST. The McKinley act put a duty on these articles of over 50 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. The House provision put on the same rate, whatever it may have been.

Mr. VEST. No; 10 cents a gross, which I think was about 33.41 per cent. Under the House provision it was 50 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why does the Senate committee propose a reduction of from 33 to 10 per cent. below the House rate?

Mr. VEST. Because it is an article which is used by all classes of people here; it is to them an article of necessity, and the best reason in the world exists for making it as cheap as possible. The Senator says it is an article of necessity, and I accept him as the highest authority on the tariff question.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri, in paragraph 356, proposes to take an important article of common use from the free list and put a duty of 20 per cent on it. If this paragraph proposes to reduce an article that is not as important and not in as great use from 33 to 10 per cent, there is certainly no consistency in the action upon the two paragraphs.

Mr. GRAY. That amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not understand that.

Mr. VEST. I withdrew that amendment, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said he wanted to speak on cocoa matting, and the whole paragraph went over; but if it will relieve the Senator any we will withdraw the amendment and let it go back to the free list.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will only relieve me by having it go to the free list, where it belongs.

Mr. VEST. Let it go there.

Mr. LODGE. I want to say in regard to this heavy cut on clay pipes that if they are necessities, certainly the match which lights them is a necessity, and the duty on matches now stands at 20 per cent in the bill, and the duty on matches is raised in every case but one.

I have a table here furnished by the importers of matches, who have been consulted largely as authorities on this subject, and it appears that the duty on matches have been increased in some instances over the McKinley rate from 300 to 500 per cent, on wax matches particularly; and certainly if those increases were made on matches, I see no reason for making this immense reduction of duty on clay pipes, which the Senator from Rhode Island stated, as I understand, will stop the manufacture in this country.

The price of those pipes is so very small that the foreign importer will have to put them in the markets at the same price, and he would undoubtedly carry the duty. The only result of the reduction would be to destroy that particular industry, and at the same time these increased duties are put upon matches, which, I understand, although a small industry, employs many people.

Mr. PEFFER. I think this is a proper place for me to propose an amendment which I wish to offer, to put a duty on salt. I see that these miscellaneous matters are arranged in alphabetical order, and I will ask the committee whether I am correct in assuming that this will be the proper place to propose the amendment?

Mr. GRAY. Where?

Mr. PEFFER. Just before paragraph 360.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the Senator propose the amendment at the end of these articles, just before the free list.

Mr. PEFFER. I prefer to propose the amendment now, Mr. President, if this be the proper place. I wish to say that my amendment is to insert as a new paragraph:

359½. Salt, 5 cents per 100 pounds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Kansas for the purpose of offering the amendment after this paragraph is concluded.

Mr. PEFFER. I understood it was disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. With reference to the tremendous cut that is proposed on clay pipes, I desire to detain the Senate a single moment by calling attention to the fact that with a 50 per cent duty we imported 185,327 gross last year, the value of which was nearly $56,000. Now, it is proposed to reduce the duty four-fifths from the present rate, from 50 per cent and a fraction to 10 per cent.

It can not do otherwise than to utterly annihilate this industry. I do not know how extensive it is. I am not an authority on pipes of any kind, but it must necessarily, it seems to me, utterly destroy the industry; and the worst part of it is, that after we have imported all our clay pipes and given this work to foreigners instead of to Americans, the poor American citizen, whether he be a Yankee or an Irishman or a Dutchman, will pay his 1 cent for his clay pipe just the same. It is not going to reduce the price of pipes to the poor man who uses them, but it will transfer this industry from American soil to foreign soil. It is to take from us the very considerable revenue that comes in now under this 50 per cent duty.

If anybody can tell me who is going to be benefited by this proposed change I shall be very glad to get the information. It seems to me, while this is a very small matter, it is one nevertheless involving a principle that we ought to contend for; and the best interests of the country require that the duty shall not be reduced, certainly, to the extent proposed by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to insert as a new paragraph—

359½. Salt, 5 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, salt has heretofore been in the agricultural schedule, and if salt is put on the free list, it should be stricken from there, and can be inserted in some other place in the agricultural schedule rather than here. Of course it is not very material, but I want to make that suggestion to the Senator, if he desires to move the amendment to-night.

Mr. PEFFER. I can enter the motion now, and I wish to submit a very small amount of matter from the salt people in Kansas, and I might just as well do it now as in the morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I will suggest to the Senator from Kansas that I think the salt provision will lead to considerable debate, and if it will suit him to pass it over, I should like very much to get over this schedule to-day.

Mr. PEFFER. Very good, let it go.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

360. Umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades, covered with material composed wholly or in part of silk, wool, or goat hair, 45 per cent ad valorem; if covered with paper or other material, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words "or goat hair," in line 8, and insert what is printed in the small type following down to the words "ad valorem," in line 10, and then to strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, after the word "wool," it is proposed to strike out "or goat hair" and insert "worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, or other material than paper;" and after the words "ad valorem," in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph, as follows: "If covered with paper or other material, 35 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I simply want to call attention to a paragraph which, on page 34, comes into this bill in some mysterious way, and I think this is a pretty good place to speak of it.

The paragraph is as follows:

Umbrella and parasol ribs, and stretcher frames, tips, runners, handles, or other parts thereof, made in whole or chief part of iron, steel, or any other metal, 50 per cent ad valorem.

It crept into that schedule where all the manufactures of iron in my State are getting only 35 per cent ad valorem. I have had a great curiosity to know the history of it, and it has in no respect been allayed by the fact that the manufacturers of umbrellas and parasols are only to get 45 per cent ad valorem, less duty than is given upon the ribs, frames, tips, etc. I should like on some convenient occasion, when we have more time, to have explained how it was that that paragraph has crept into this schedule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suppose some Yankee who wanted to make those things got it put in.

Mr. PLATT. That will not do.

Mr. ALLISON. As to that explanation of the Senator, it seems to me that the duty upon the finished article ought at least to be as high as upon the parts.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The cost of the finished article would hardly have any relation to the cost of these items, which would enter into the construction of it. I do not see that that is inevitable by any means.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see how you can have an umbrella without a rib, and if you pay 50 per cent on a rib, it is probable that you will import the rib, and not manufacture it here. That would be my idea, although I may be wrong about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the umbrella cost $1.50 and the ribs 25 cents, 45 per cent on the umbrella would be very much more, according to the value, than 50 per cent of the cost of the parts.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator does not seem to get my point. We are providing here for umbrellas on the supposition that the manufacturer will make the umbrella and every part of it. If he undertakes to do that, he will find his neighbor importing a good part of these articles or manufacturing by his side with a greater protection than he receives.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the bill as it now stands imposes a duty of 50 per cent upon the umbrella frames, and a duty of 45 per cent on the covering, if of silk 45 per cent, and if covered with woolen or worsted it would pay 45 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator is certainly in error when he states that the umbrella would be admitted at 30 per cent. The provision, I see, is 45 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. You struck out paragraph 361?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Paragraph 361 has not been adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. Forty-five per cent is the proposition of the committee. I do not understand that the bill increases that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

361. Umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades, sticks for, if plain or carved, finished or unfinished, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. The language in this paragraph should be changed. The words "sticks for" should be put at the head of that paragraph, or else you are liable to have a construction given by some appraising officers that umbrellas and parasols are provided for as well as sticks.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think that is a correct criticism; and I move to transpose the location of those words, so that it will be clear that it means the sticks for umbrellas and parasols.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

362. Waste, not specially provided for in this act, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 19, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 18, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. THOMAS O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following was read:

SIR: I hereby name Hon. JOSEPH W. BAILEY, a Representative from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair for this day.

CHARLES F. CRISP, Speaker.

Hon. JAMES KERR,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, referring to an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for the completion of the United States custom-house and post-office building at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., transmitted by him on February 6, 1894, and recommending that the same be reduced to $15,000; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as stated:

A bill (S. 1515) to amend chapter 6, of Title XXXII, of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

A bill (S. 160) to fix the price of lands entered under the desert-land laws—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 814) for the relief of the representatives of Daniel C. Rodman, deceased, and others—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to ask that my colleague from Kentucky, Hon. W. J. STONE, who is sick, be excused for to-day.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEARD. I wish to ask indefinite leave of absence for the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. CARUTH, who received this morning a telegram from Louisville, summoning him home on account of sickness in his family.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GARDNER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. RICHARDS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE IN EIGHTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. REED. Before unanimous consent is granted I should like to know what are the grounds for this application. I think such a matter as this ought to be fully understood by the House.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. My colleague [Mr. CLARK] will make an explanation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain the situation in a very few minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to object to this measure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, of course, there is no use in making a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withhold the objection, however, until the gentleman can be heard.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The situation is about this: In the eighth circuit the court business has grown so much and the courts are so much behind the docket that it takes nearly the entire time of all the district judges, in the circuit, to sit as circuit judges, and they do not keep up with the work; so that practically we have had no district court in the eighth circuit for the last two or three years. Now, if it is the intention of Congress to transact the business of the country, then we ought to have this additional judge.

Mr. REED. How does this circuit compare with the others?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why this is one of the largest, considering the number of people in connection with its geographical configuration, of any district in the country. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] can tell all about it.

Mr. HULL. It should be stated also that it is a circuit that does the largest business of any circuit in the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; there are more cases pending in it now than in any other circuit in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. The remedy is to reduce the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made by the gentleman from Ohio.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH OMAHA AND WINNEBAGO RESERVATIONS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1995) granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian Reservations, in the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUNPHY. I object.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3291) to amend section 22 of an act to regulate commerce, as amended March 2, 1889.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 22 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and as amended March 2, 1889, be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following provisio:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent the issuance of joint interchangeable 5,000-mile tickets, with special privileges as to the amount of free baggage that may be carried under mileage tickets of 1,000 or more miles."

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Insert after the word "miles" in section 1 of the bill:

"But before any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, shall issue any such joint interchangeable mileage tickets with special privileges, as aforesaid, it shall file with the Interstate Commerce Commission copies of the joint tariffs of rates, fares, or charges on which such joint interchangeable mileage tickets are to be based, together with specifications of the amount of free baggage permitted to be carried under such tickets, in the same manner as common carriers are required to do with regard to other joint rates by section 6 of this act; and all the provisions of said section 6 relating to joint rates, fares, and charges shall be observed by said common carriers and enforced by the Interstate Commerce Commission as fully with regard to such joint interchangeable mileage tickets as with regard to other joint rates, fares, and charges referred to in said section 6. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier that has issued or authorized to be issued any such joint interchangeable mileage tickets to demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for transportation of persons or baggage under such joint interchangeable mileage tickets than that required by the rate, fare, or charge specified in the copies of the joint tariff of rates, fares, or charges filed with the Commission in force at the time. The provisions of section 10 of this act shall apply to any violation of the requirements of this proviso."

Mr. PICKLER. Let us have an explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois make some explanation of the bill first.

Mr. DURBOROW. I will be very glad to do so. If the Clerk will first read the report I will then supplement it with any additional information that may be required by any member.

The report (by Mr. DURBOROW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3291) "to amend section 22 of an act to regulate commerce, as amended March 2, 1889," report the same back with an amendment, and with the recommendation that the bill as so amended do pass.

Your committee is of opinion that there is nothing in the act to regulate commerce which prohibits the thing which this bill permits, and that the only object of the bill is to be declaratory to that effect. But they have deemed it proper to offer the amendment proposed in order to prevent the declarations of the bill from being made, under any circumstances, a vehicle of discriminations between any of the people in the United States who use interstate transportation. Should the amendment be adopted, there is no reason, your committee believes, why this bill should not pass.

Your committee further recommends that H. R. 1938, which is a bill in the same general interest as the present bill, do lie upon the table.

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one the passage of which is earnestly desired by commercial travelers all over the country. The interstate-commerce law, it is believed by the committee, does not really prohibit the sale and use of this class of tickets now, but the transportation companies have stated to the commercial travelers' associations that before they issue such tickets as the bill provides they prefer to have special authorization from Congress to that effect; they are perfectly willing to do it, but believe that it would make the law clearer if this amendment to the law, as proposed by the pending bill, shall be adopted.

The large body of men throughout the country who will use the tickets will greatly contribute to the commercial interests of all sections, and it is believed that the bill will give very great and needed relief in many directions. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have investigated the matter thoroughly and this is a unanimous report from the committee. It is desirable that this measure should be acted upon if possible to-day; and I have been requested to call it up by reason of the fact that the National Commercial Travelers' Association of the whole country is now in convention assembled at Milwaukee, Wis., and as they earnestly desire the passage of the measure it will afford them much pleasure if such action shall be taken to day, to be able to annouce it authoritatively to the convention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment recommended by the committee was again reported.

Mr. DURBOROW. I would, like to say, Mr. Speaker, with reference to this amendment that the committee drew the amendment very carefully, because the only objection to this measure was that in practical effect it might lead to unjust discrimination. It is believed by the committee that the amendment as reported will prevent anything of the kind and make it applicable especially as intended.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DURBOROW, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the bill (H. R. 1938) will be laid on the table.

JUDGMENTS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6979) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the first part of the bill be reported again. There was such confusion that it could not be heard.

The Clerk again read the first portion of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is an amendment reported by the committee. The Clerk will now report the amendment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is this bill before the House by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair directed the Clerk to read the bill and amendments, after which the Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BRYAN. I will explain the bill so that I think there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. PAYNE objected.

Mr. BRYAN. Will you allow me to explain?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make no objection to the bill itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH OMAHA AND WINNEBAGO INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUNPHY], who objected to the consideration of the bill for which I asked unanimous consent, has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] states that the objection which was made to the consideration of the bill called up by him has been withdrawn. The Chair again submits the request. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. The bill just read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the bill the title of which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1935) granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian Reservations, in the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has already been reported. The question is on its third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the consideration of bills raising revenue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves that the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McRAE. Is that motion in order until after the call of committees for reports?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being the third Monday of the month, there is no morning hour.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise a question of order on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana will state the point of order.

Mr. BYNUM. I will state the grounds of my objection. The Chair will find by examining clause 57 of Rule XI, that certain bills reported by certain committees are privileged matters. Clause 57 of Rule XI reads as follows:

57. The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: The Committee on Rules, on rules, joint rules, and order of business; the Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills, etc.

The only privilege provided in the rules for the consideration of bills is the provision contained in this rule, which provides that certain committees shall have the right to report at any time. Under the construction of this rule in the Thirty-second Congress, it was held and has been held continuously from that time to the present that the right to report at any time carried with it the right to have a bill considered at any time. So, instead of providing in the rules that certain bills shall be privileged to be considered at any time, the provision simply is that committees having jurisdiction of certain bills shall have the right to report at any time, which carries with it the right of consideration at any time.

I can find no other provision for the consideration of revenue bills. Now, I do not contend for one moment that this bill is not a revenue bill, but I maintain this position, that no other committee of this House has the right of privilege as to revenue bills, except the Committee on Ways and Means, and that revenue bills reported by the Committee on Ways and Means are the only ones that are entitled to privilege under the rules of the House.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that this House has the right to refer any bill to any committee; but that does not change the effect of the rules. I have no doubt but that this bill will be considered; and I do not raise this point of order for the purpose so much of antagonizing this same, as to settle this question, because if the Committee on Agriculture has the right to take the privilege of the Committee on Ways and Means, then every other committee in the House which might acquire jurisdiction of a bill which was privileged from some designated committee would be entitled to the same privilege, and the entire mode of procedure as prescribed by this House in its rules for the purpose of controlling and regulating its business would be completely overthrown.

It is well known to the Chair and to the House that under our present system there is no trouble in securing the consideration of any measure that the Committee on Rules and the House desire to take up. Formerly there was great difficulty in reaching measures which the House desired to consider. Our rules have been so modified, amended, and improved that the House has it in its power, with the consent of the Committee on Rules, to consider any bill which it desires. Therefore I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that there is not the slightest excuse for deviating from the strict construction of the rule as laid down by the House for the government of its proceedings.

There are certain reasons, Mr. Speaker, why this should be done. There are certain rules which must be strictly adhered to, and which are essential to the government and regulation and proper conduct of the business of the House; and it is as essential in preserving the order and the dignity and the regularity of its proceedings that we should adhere strictly to the construction of the rules, as it is that the doctrine of stare decisis be adhered to in the construction of the State statute and the enforcement of rights under the common-law rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is but one point which might be insisted as giving the Committee on Agriculture the right of privilege, and that is that this being a revenue bill, and having been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, it was subsequently by the House taken away from it, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that whenever the House lays down rules for its government it ties its own hands in the same manner that the people tie their hands when they prescribe a constitutional provision regulating their own conduct. The House has designated certain matters as being privileged. The only revenue bills that are privileged are revenue bills reported by the Committee on Ways and Means; not all revenue bills, but all revenue bills reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The very same is true in regard to appropriations, general appropriation bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations, not all appropriations. Also certain matters referred to the Committee on Printing, and certain matters to the Committee on Accounts are privileged. And therefore, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that revenue bills reported only by the Committee on Ways and Means are privileged, and that the general motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills is not in order, because that includes a motion broader than the rule prescribes as privileged. It should be a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, not a general motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills, because the latter motion may include bills which under the rule are not privileged.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be urged that the rules construed as a whole apply to all revenue bills, from whatever committee they may come. Rule XXIV, clause 6, provides as follows:

6. Unfinished business, if any, having been disposed of, motions shall be in order as follows:

First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its Calendar.

That provision, Mr. Speaker, is contained in a rule prescribing simply the order of business or priority of procedure, and must be construed in connection with the other rules of the House. Therefore the first motion is a motion to consider revenue bills, under the clause I have cited, which gives the privilege to revenue bills from the Committee on Ways and Means. I take it that that does not confer any additional power, so far as the question of privilege is concerned, than that which is contained in the provision I have already cited.

This I look upon as an important question. It is a well-known fact that the Committee on Ways and Means, as well as the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Elections, are selected, that the minds of their members are directed in certain lines of investigation, and that they become better equipped for those special matters than committees which are given jurisdiction of other matters, and therefore in the organization of the House there are certain policies to be carried out, and the committees are organized in that view, and the privilege is conferred upon the committee in connection with such special measures.

Now, if that is not true, Mr. Speaker, then we are at sea so far as concerns the measures that may come before this House for consideration. A number of bills may come from a committee that have had little experience in the investigation of the matter.

General appropriation bills might come from any other committee than the Committee on Appropriations, who devote their entire time and attention to the consideration of such measures. So revenue bills need not come from the Committee on Ways and Means, but might originate in other committees, who devote no time to the consideration of the general question of revenue, but simply desire to bring in some special measure to affect some special interest under the guise of a revenue bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, if entertained at all, must be restricted to revenue bills reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. I make the further suggestion to the Chair that it must be made by order of the Commitee on Ways and Means. It is not the individual right of any member of the House to move to take up a bill which is privileged only because it is reported by a certain committee. It is the province of that committee alone to determine when a motion shall be made to take up such a measure. In accordance with that idea, upon questions which may be called by a committee in the morning hour, it has been repeatedly held that no member of the committee can call up a bill in the morning hour unless he is authorized to do so by the committee reporting the bill. I take the same view of all these privileged measures. They must be reported by the committee having the privilege, and must be called up by the consent of that committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, upon the point which I did not elaborate, as to the reference of this bill by the House to the Committee on Agriculture, I maintain that whenever the House has established a code of rules prescribing certain privileges for certain committees, those rules must govern, and the mere fact that the House has the power to refer bills to any committee it may choose does not give to it the power to transfer the privileges which it has given to certain committees to other committees. To admit that right would amount to a complete abrogation of the rules and to a violation of the provisions prescribed in the rules by which they may be changed.

It is well settled that the people of a State, or of the United States, can not amend their constitution except in conformity with the modes prescribed in the constitution itself; and equally is it true that this House can not change its rules except in the mode prescribed by the House in the rules. Therefore, the mere right of reference, or the mere right to change the reference of a measure from one committee to another, does not carry with it the right upon the part of the House to transfer the privileges which it has conferred by its rules upon one to another committee when the latter has been denied such a privilege by the rule of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is one point of order now pending.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

Mr. BYNUM. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. The question I desire to submit to the gentleman from Indiana is whether he holds that this motion made by any member of the House on this particular day, under clause 6 of Rule XXIV, would be out of order if the member were recognized by the Speaker to make the motion?

Mr. BYNUM. By clause 6 of Rule XXIV a mere order of business is prescribed. Certain motions would be in order. Of course, a number of privileged questions may come before the House and they take precedence, according to previous rules. For instance, a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills, or of bills making general appropriations, would take precedence over a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider a bill from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Why? Because the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations have priority of privilege.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. The point I want to submit is this. If a gentleman were to rise this morning and ask for the regular order, and the Chair called the regular order, and the gentleman from Missouri, or any gentleman representing any other committee, were to rise and make a motion under subdivision 1 of clause 6 of Rule XXIV, and the Chair were to recognize him, would not that be in order without regard to the argument presented by the gentleman from Indiana as to privileged motions?

Mr. BYNUM. The order of business in the rule is intended to prescribe the order in which the business of the House shall be transacted, even as between privileged questions. There are several privileged questions that may come up, but the Chair would have to decide the order of their precedence under the order of business, and that is all the order of business is for. In order to determine which question had precedence it would be necessary to go back and look at the entire body of rules to see what authority was conferred upon the committees concerned.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think it necessary to reply at any length to the argument of the gentleman from Indiana. I will simply call the attention of the Chair to the fact that so distinguished a Speaker of this House as the Hon. John G. Carlisle held in the Forty-eighth Congress that a bill raising revenue, which had been referred by a vote of the House to the Committee on Agriculture and reported back from that committee, had all the rights and privileges of a revenue bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. After extended argument upon a point of order made against that bill, similar to the one made now by the gentleman from Indiana, the Speaker held as I have stated, and the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of what was known as the oleomargarine bill was entertained day after day until the bill was disposed of.

In the Fifty-second Congress the present Speaker of the House (who I think understands the rules of this House fully as well as the gentleman from Indiana) decided in the same way, not only once but repeatedly, by entertaining the motion made by me that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill similar in many respects to the bill now before the House.

Mr. BYNUM. Was the point ever made against that bill?

Mr. HATCH. The point was made and argued at the very beginning.

Mr. BYNUM. What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. HATCH. The antioption bill, in the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. BYNUM. I have examined the RECORD, and I find that no point of this kind was raised against that bill.

Mr. HATCH. I think the gentleman is mistaken, because my recollection is that on that occasion I referred the Speaker to the ruling made by Mr. Carlisle in the Forty-eighth Congress.

But whether the point was raised or not the motion was entertained by the Speaker day after day; and it was acted upon by the House. If the present occupant of the chair has any doubt whatever in his mind upon this question I shall be glad to get the RECORD of the Forty-eighth Congress and read it. The practice has been unbroken from that Congress down to the present time; and Mr. Carlisle stated in his ruling on the oleomargarine bill that the very highest privilege that a bill could have, coming from any committee, was acquired by a direct vote of the House referring it to that committee for consideration; and that when it came back to the House it had under the rule all the privileges thereby implied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] to Rule XXIV, which prescribes the order of business. The second clause of that rule provides that there shall be a call of committees for reports on all days except the first and third Mondays of the month. The fourth clause of the rule provides that after the call of committees for reports has been completed, or the hour has been exhausted, the Speaker shall again call the committees in their order for the consideration of such bills as each committee may see fit to call up. The fifth clause of the same rule then provides that——

After the hour under the preceding clause shall have been occupied, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

This being the third Monday in the month, there is neither the first nor the second morning hour, and there is no unfinished business to which the House can proceed. Now, the sixth paragraph of the rule provides that—

Unfinished business, if any, having been disposed of, motions shall be in order as follows:

"First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue."

The Chair thinks that it is not material what committee or what member of the House makes this motion. The motion itself is in order, without reference to the member making it. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Indiana that this is a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue. There may be, and there probably are, more bills than one on the Calendar raising revenue; and it is not possible for the Chair to determine at this point that, the House having resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue, the committee will then proceed to the consideration of a bill which may not be a revenue bill.

The Chair conceives that if that question can properly arise at all, it must arise in Committee of the Whole, because the motion here is a general motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue. There may be one, there may be two, or there may be several bills of that character on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole. And the House having resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, if the committee should then undertake to proceed with the consideration of a bill not a revenue bill, the point of order could certainly be made in the Committee of the Whole. With this view of the question, the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. SPRINGER. The parliamentary inquiry which I desired to submit was this: This being the third Monday of the month, and preference being given on this day under the rule to committees that may desire to move to suspend the rules, and after that has been exhausted by committees, the privilege being then accorded to individuals to make that motion—whether it is not now in order, even pending this motion of the gentleman from Missouri, for the Chair to entertain a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing any bill which may be designated, where a committee may have recommended that motion to be made?

The custom heretofore has been on the third Monday of the month for the Speaker to call the committees in their order for the purpose of preventing any conflict as to whether one committee or another should come in first. The committees having been thus called, the Chair would then recognize motions submitted by individuals for suspension of the rules. This day being set apart for a special purpose, it seems to me that special purpose should be first carried out, if desired by any committee. That appears to be the intention of Rule XXVIII.

As to clause 6, of Rule XXIV, which has been referred to by the Speaker, it seems to me a part of the general provisions of that rule relate to all days other than the first and third Mondays, and on all days other than those the business there specified is to be the order of business; but on those days, under the uniform practice, the committees have been called for motions to suspend the rules. And I submit that is now the order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the Chair would say that there is no rule providing that the Chair must at any time entertain a motion to suspend the rules. On the contrary, the rule provides that—

No rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month.

If he does entertain a motion to suspend the rules, the provision is that "preference shall be given on the first Monday to individuals and the third Monday to committees." But it is not obligatory upon the Speaker to recognize either an individual or a committee to move to suspend the rules. The provision simply is that the rules shall not be suspended except by a two-thirds vote, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend them at all except upon the first and third Mondays of the month.

Undoubtedly the Speaker could to-day in the exercise of his discretion, recognize the chairman of any committee, or any member of a committee on its behalf, to move a suspension of the rules. But the Chair has not done that. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri to make a motion which is now in order. And therefore the Chair thinks the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is not well taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair pardon me——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Suppose the House should vote down the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, there would not then be anything under the rules, I take it, to prevent the Chair from recognizing somebody to move a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There certainly would not be.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDZIER), there were—ayes 79, noes 72.

Mr. GOLDZIER. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. FORMAN and Mr. GOLDZIER as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 79, answered "present" 3, not voting 134; as follows:

Mr. CAUSEY with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. WHITING with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. GROUT.

For this day:

Mr. WELLS with Mr. GILLET of New York.

Mr. PAYNTER with Mr. HOOKER of New York.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. EDMUNDS with Mr. BARNES, on the antioption bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my vote, as I find I am paired. I should have voted in the affirmative on this proposition.

Mr. ENLOE. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. BOUTELLE. If he were present I would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the announcement of the result of the vote, the Chair desires to submit the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] for a reprint of House bill 7133, the present supply being exhausted.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering revenue bills, and the Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5442) to impose a tax on corporate and individual incomes, to increase the tax on distilled spirits, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, that bill has already been disposed of by the House. I do not know how it happens to be on the Calendar, but I move that it be passed over.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I object. I would like to have the bill read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Will the committee agree to pass over this bill?

Mr. BYNUM. I ask for the reading of the bill. We want to know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the bill has already been read. It will be reported again for the information of the committee.

The title of the bill was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Will the committee agree to pass over this bill?

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not understand that this bill has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is not customary to read a bill in full when objection is made to its consideration. The practice has been to read only the title of the bill.

Mr. BYNUM. We are entitled to know what the bill is, and to have it read in full.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the practice.

Mr. BYNUM. It has always been heretofore. I do not know what it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair differs with the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BYNUM. We are entitled to the full reading of all bills; even on the third reading, when the demand is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and conversation on the floor must cease. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that order is preserved on the floor, and the Chair wants this to be the last time he will have to make that request while he is in the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I would like to know what is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will let you know when he can get order on the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I think in the confusion the motion put by the Chair was not understood. If gentlemen will allow the Chair one moment, that he can hear what is going on on the floor, it will facilitate business.

If the Chair pleases, there are many gentlemen here who do not understand the motion put by the Chair to pass over the bill known as the income-tax bill, it having already been acted upon by the House as an amendment to the tariff bill, but by some means is still on the Calendar. My motion is to pass that bill over, in order to reach the House bill known as the antioption bill.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, there was an objection by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COBB] to passing it over, and the only thing the committee can do is to rise and report that objection to the House. It is for the House to instruct the committee.

Mr. HATCH. That was the rule in the former Congress, but the rule now provides that the committee itself can pass over a bill.

Mr. BYNUM. That is a mistake, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the fourth paragraph of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to passing over any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now rise, and the Chair will report the matter to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Chairman of Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having proceeded to the consideration of bills raising revenue, and having reached the bill (H. R. 5542) to impose a tax on corporate and individual incomes, to increase the tax on distilled spirits, and for other purposes, that being the first revenue bill on the Calendar, and the request having been made that it be passed over, and objection being made to passing over the same, that under the rule he reported the action of the committee to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that the committee having proceeded to the consideration of bills raising revenue, and having reached the bill (H. R. 5542) to impose a tax on corporate and individual incomes, to increase the tax on distilled spirits, and for other purposes, a request was made that it be passed over, to which objection was made. The committee has accordingly risen and reported the matter to the House. The question is, Will the House order the Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of the first bill? the negative of which, of course, would direct the committee to pass to the consideration of the second bill.

Mr. BYNUM. I suppose it is essential to have the bill reported to the House, so that we may know what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The provision of the rule is that the question shall be decided without debate.

Mr. BYNUM. That is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair thinks that the title of the bill having been read——

Mr. BYNUM. But the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole should have reported to the House what bill it is, in order that we may know whether we want to pass it over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The practice has been to read merely the title, and the Chair thinks the practice a reasonable one.

Mr. BYNUM. The Chair does not understand me. My point is that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole did not report to the House what bill was attempted to be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman did report that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I desire to say that I had the title of the bill read twice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the title of the bill, to the passing over of which objection was made.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5542) to impose a tax on corporate and individual incomes, to increase the tax on distilled spirits, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill be passed over in the Committee of the Whole?

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire and Mr. TRACEY demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 10.

Mr. TRACEY (sitting in his seat). No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that no gentleman rose in his place and addressed the Chair in accordance with the rule.

Mr. TRACEY rose.

Mr. HATCH. It is too late now. I have made the point of order, and it is too late. No gentleman can sit in his seat and yell any of these objections at the Chair. He must rise and address the Chair before the Chair can entertain the gentleman's proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly the rule does require that before any gentleman can submit any motion, he shall rise and address the Chair.

Mr. TRACEY. I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it, and the House orders the committee to pass over the first bill. In accordance with the rule, the House will now resolve itself, without motion, into the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] will resume the chair.

The House accordingly again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair.

TAX ON OPTIONS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining "options" and "futures," and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, under the rules of the House having the right to open and close this discussion, I shall content myself on this occasion with a plain, full, and frank explanation of the provisions of this bill, and what I believe to be the importance of its passage. To some extent it is a new departure in revenue legislation. It is not following in the tracks of all legislation for the raising of revenue that has gone before it; and coming from a committee to which it has been specially committed by a direct vote of the House, it is due to the House that I should explain fully and as frankly as possible the provisions and effect of this revenue measure.

The first criticism upon this bill is that it does not come within the lines or within the limitations of the constitutional provision in regard to Federal taxation. I have studied that question very closely, not only in connection with this measure, but with a similar measure now upon the statute books, known as the oleomargarine bill. I yield to no gentleman upon this side of the floor in my devotion to a fair and rational construction of the Constitution of the United States in regard to the question of taxation. I do not believe that the taxing power should ever be used except for the primary purpose of raising revenue; and I would not myself support any measure as a representative of my own people that had not for its foundation principle the raising of revenue for the Government.

That this bill in all its provisions is within the Constitution I assert with the utmost confidence, because I am sustained in that position by not only the action of the two Houses of Congress, but by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court has stated, and has held more than once, that the power of taxation in the two Houses of Congress was unlimited. The two Houses of Congress, that constitute the legislative branch of the Government, are the supreme power as regards the subject of taxation, and whenever their action is approved——

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman will allow me to state my position.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Certainly. I was only going to interrupt you to the extent of inquiring to what decisions of the Supreme Court you referred?

Mr. HATCH. I will come to that presently, and refer the gentleman to those decisions.

When the two Houses of Congress have acted and that action has been approved by the Executive power of the Government, and the statute becomes the law, the law of the land, there is no power in the courts of the country to go behind that statute and inquire into the motives of Congress or of any member of the two Houses as to the subject-matter of that taxation; and I refer my friend from Georgia to the well-known cases upon the State bank tax and the more recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the titles of which I will furnish the House before this debate closes, upon the oleomargarine bill, which has been twice before the Supreme Court.

Now, my position is, that the power over taxation and over the subjects of taxation, is within the two Houses of Congress, when that action is approved by the Executive power of the Government.

Now, some of our Democratic friends say that this power should never be used except in the strictest sense for the purpose of raising "revenue only," and for no other purpose; and that any revenue act of which that is only a secondary effect is undemocratic and unconstitutional. To that position I can not agree. In the exercise of my right and duty as a member of this legislative body, and representing an independent Congressional district of the State of Missouri upon this floor, I not only have the right, but it is my duty to select such subjects for taxation as will do the greatest good to the greatest number of people of the United States, and fall with the least burden upon the smallest number of the population of the country. Since I have been a member of this House I have voted to put matches upon the free list. Why? Because matches have become one of the necessaries of every-day domestic life of nearly every family in the land. Matches are of universal use and consumption, and they ought to be free. Yet the Government must have revenue; and if every member of Congress was to say in regard to everything in the present tax bill now pending before the other branch of this Congress, and that recently passed this House, was a necessary of life, and that we should put them all on the free list, we would have no revenue. I voted to tax opium and put quinine on the free list. I voted to put quinine on the free list, because it is of almost universal consumption, harmless in its administration within reasonable limits, and one of the ordinary remedies for certain diseases used in families throughout the length and breadth of the land.

I would not vote to put opium on the free list, because I believe that opium is a dangerous drug, that it ought to come in here through our custom-houses, and I believe in the wisdom of those laws of nearly every State of the Union, if not every one, that restricts the sale of opium to licensed druggists and pharmacists throughout the land. Opium ought not be of unrestrained use and unrestricted sale and purchase like matches or quinine; and, therefore, in the exercise of my judgment as a legislator, I voted to tax opium and voted to put quinine on the free list.

I justified my position in reporting the oleomargarine bill to the House of Representatives and its passage through the House and the Senate—that bill which is now the law of the land—upon the same ground that I justify myself in reporting this bill to the House. That ground is that I would raise revenue from the manufacture of an article that was a common adulteration and was palmed off at that time upon the people of the United States under the name of butter and by other fraudulent plans and devices. I voted to put a tax upon the manufacture of that article so that it could be regulated by the Government.

The effect of that legislation has been just exactly what I, in the Forty-eighth Congress, predicted it would be, namely, that it would be a benefit to the consumers of the commodity, because being placed under the ban of the Federal law the manufacture of it would go into the hands of reputable and competent dealers and manufacturers and its quality would be improved. That such has been the result no gentleman who knows anything about the facts will now question. There are now but few manufacturers of oleomargarine in the United States, and among them are some of the very largest and most reputable packers either in this country or in the world.

The quality of the article has been improved a thousand fold. All the little dead animal factories that were making it throughout the length and breadth of the land have been closed up under the operation of that law; and whilst I have no more admiration for oleomargarine as a food product than I had when I so persistently pressed that bill to its final enactment into law, I do not hesitate, in justice to the firms that are now manufacturing it, to state that the quality of it has been wonderfully improved, and I state that not only to their credit but in the interest of the consumers of the article throughout the United States and the world.

Now, in the selection of other subjects for taxation I find one that, like the poisonous drug of opium, or like the outrageous and villainous practice of manufacturing oleomargarine out of unwholesome and unhealthful articles and palming it off on the people under the name of butter—I find, I say, confronting the people of the United States and of the world to-day a system of commercial transactions in the great agricultural products of the country that, in my judgment, has been the bane of every board of trade in the United States, a violation of all the old commercial regulations and practices of a century before, and which, in my judgment, has wrought more injury and brought more disaster to the people who produce the great staple commodities named in the bill than any other commercial practice ever devised by the ingenuity and avarice of man.

Now, I state frankly that in my judgment the Congress of the United States, under our Constitution, has no power to regulate these sales upon boards of trade except by the exercise of the power of taxation. For myself I would greatly prefer the enactment of a substitute for this bill which was offered in the Senate during the Fifty-second Congress, which simply declared this gambling to be a misdemeanor and a crime, and fixed the penalty for these fictitious sales, but I do not believe that such a law would stand the test of the courts for an hour; and, on the other hand, I do believe that under the power to tax and under that power alone has the Federal Government the right to regulate these purchases and sales on the boards of trade. The bill that is before this committee for consideration is different from the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture in the Fifty-second Congress.

The foundation principle of it is different, and if I can get the attention of members of this committee I can explain this bill in a very brief time, so that there can be no mistake about it. The bill has, of course, been misrepresented. There has been a systematic misrepresentation of it from the time it was reported from the Committee on Agriculture down to this very hour. Not one gentleman out of ten who are listening to me now has taken the pains to study the bill and the report carefully, or to analyze its provisions. Several members have told me so themselves.

Within the last thirty minutes certain gentlemen came and asked me questions about the bill. I asked them if they had read it and they said they had not. "Well," I said, "I can not undertake to educate you now, unless you are willing to listen to what I have to say on the floor." Gentlemen have even published criticisms upon the bill, and when those criticisms were examined it was discovered that they were directed against the bill which was before the Fifty-second Congress and not against this one. Before this debate closes I may have something to say in reply to certain gentlemen who have run into the press in criticism of this measure in advance of any discussion of its merits upon this floor and have denounced it as "a combination of ignorance and anarchism." Those gentlemen will hear from me in possibly equally emphatic language before this discussion is concluded; but now I have a more agreeable duty to perform, namely, to explain exactly what this bill is.

I start out with the proposition that there is not a principle involved in this bill from the beginning to the end of it that has not been incorporated in the charters and rules of every board of trade in the United States. I challenge and defy any gentleman to produce the charter and the rules and regulations of any board of trade in the United States that do not recognize the fundamental foundation principle of this bill. What is it? In the first and second sections we simply define "options" and "futures." Every representative of every board of trade in the United States who appeared before our committee, either in this Congress or in the Fifty-second Congress, stated emphatically that to the first section of this bill they had no objection, but would support it. That is the section which defines options. I want to read it.

That for the purposes of this act the word "options" shall be understood to mean any contract whereby a party thereto, or any person for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, acquires the right or privilege, but is not thereby obligated, to sell and deliver to another at a future time, or within a designated month or other period, or any contract whereby, as vendee, a party thereto, or any person as vendee, for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, acquires the right or privilege of demanding and receiving from another at a stipulated price, at a future time, or within a designated month or other period, but is not thereby obligated to receive and pay for any of the following articles, namely: Raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, or pickled meat.

To that first section, I say, the representatives of the boards of trade who are opposed to the enactment of this bill into law interpose no objection. They put their entire opposition upon the definition of "futures," which is found in the second section.

Mr. COX. The trouble with those parties seemed to be that they could not enforce delivery of the article according to contract.

Mr. HATCH. I will come back and explain that. The second section is as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract whereby a party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, contracts to sell and deliver to another, at a future time, or within a designated month or other period, any raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, or pickled meat.

Now, in every board of trade in the United States there is an obligation on the seller of these commodities named to deliver them at the designated time; there is an obligation on the part of the purchaser to receive them. And in this bill there is not another provision that does not hinge around that one great principle of the measure. The only difference in the world between this bill and the regulations of the Chicago Board of Trade, or any other board of trade in the United States, is that this bill, if enacted into law, will compel that delivery in good faith and honestly, while to-day these boards of trade, after making their own rules, have builded up a system of evading those rules by allowing the transaction to be consummated without the delivery of a single pound or ounce of what is sold under the contract.

I again challenge any gentleman on this floor to produce the regulations or charter of any board of trade in the United States that do not contain such a provision; and then I challenge him to deny that the provision is violated in that board of trade every day and every hour.

"Anarchistic," they say this bill is. It is the first time I ever heard that the enactment of a law compelling the observance of laws was "anarchistic." I thought "anarchism" meant the breaking down of laws. Now, if it is right that the man who sells upon a board of trade 1,000,000 bushels of wheat, the sale to be consummated by delivery in the future, should deliver that wheat—if it is a fact that it has been so declared in the rules and charters of the boards of trade—where is the "anarchism" in this bill, which simply seeks to enforce that contract?

Now, the difference between this provision and the bill of the Fifty-second Congress is that any nonowner, any citizen of the United States who desires to buy and sell any of these commodities for future delivery, shall have the right to do it. The bill of the Fifty-second Congress restricted the sale to owners, or those who had acquired the right from owners to sell. All we ask of any man who goes upon a board of trade and offers 500 or 1,000 bales of cotton or a million bushels of wheat to be delivered in the future, is not that he shall be the owner or in possession of the commodity at the time he makes that sale, or that he shall have acquired the right from the owner to sell, but when the hour comes that the contract is to be consummated, that he shall actually deliver in good faith the wheat or the cotton that he sells. This delivery, of course, is constructive, either by warehouse or elevator receipt, or bill of lading, or actual delivery, at the option of the seller under the rules of the board of trade where the contract is made.

Mr. COX. I am very much interested in this point, and I hope the gentleman will pardon an inquiry. In the case the gentleman supposes, a man contracts to deliver the wheat or the cotton at a designated hour. Now, suppose the party that made the purchase is willing to release the seller from the obligation, does the gentleman mean to say that he would make the seller deliver the goods whether the buyer wants them or not? I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Missouri in regard to the principles of the bill; but I want to get at the exact working of its provisions.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will possess himself in patience for one moment——

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. HATCH. I will answer him not only fully but frankly and candidly. I say that no man in the United States has any right to go upon the boards of trade and make a sale or a purchase that is in such bad faith that when he comes to consummate it, he is going to destroy the value of the property of the people of the country.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. HATCH. That is my answer. And that is exactly what these men have been doing. They have contracted to deliver cotton and they have delivered "wind;" they have contracted to deliver wheat and they have delivered "wind." They have simply multiplied upon their sales-boards from day to day, to an exorbitant and outrageous extent, pretended sales of commodities that never existed; and in this way they have depressed prices to the producers throughout the land of the commodities thus sold.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. GOLDZIER. In every sale of the character which the gentleman describes there are two parties—one party who buys and another who sells—one party who is interested in depressing the price, as the gentleman says, and another party who naturally must be interested in raising the price of the product. Now, how can a transaction of that kind affect the price of the commodity?

Mr. HATCH. Well, that is an easy one. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOLDZIER. I would like the gentleman to give me an answer.

Mr. HATCH. That is one of the oldest "gags" in the argument of this whole question from beginning to end—that where there is a seller there must be a purchaser. Now, my friend is a good lawyer; I am not sure he knows anything in the world about the transactions of the board of trade; the less he knows about them the higher respect I have for him, especially the board of trade in Chicago. [Laughter.] But the gentleman ought to know that the seller is the man who has unlimited control—of what? Not of the actual commodity that he pretends to sell, but simply to offer to the supposed purchaser an option or a bet upon what the price of it will be in the future; and thus the selling indefinitely and in a magnified degree of these commodities upon the boards of trade depresses the price whatever the purchase may be.

Mr. GOLDZIER. How about the bet that the price shall go up?

Mr. HATCH. My friend, I will answer all these matters as I come to them. The man who bets that wheat is going higher has no control over the class of men who have walked upon the boards of trade in Chicago, as your own papers have stated, and sold from a million to a million and a half of bushels—yes, 3,000,000 bushels of wheat—within an hour and a half, when if they had been compelled to deliver that wheat they could not have delivered one-tenth part of it to save their lives.

Mr. GOLDZIER. If the gentleman will yield for just one more question, I will not bother him further.

Mr. HATCH. All right.

Mr. GOLDZIER. In the sales of which the gentleman speaks, the man who has that unlimited amount of "wind," as the gentleman calls it, at his disposal, can not make any earthly use of it, unless there is some other fellow who wants to buy the "wind." Is not that right?

Mr. HATCH. Well, that is easily explained and easily understood by every gentleman who has ever studied this question.

Mr. CRAIN. They can not "take the wind out of your sails."

Mr. HATCH. This bill will take the wind out of all their sales. [Laughter.]

The man, as I said before, who goes on the market to depress it, and whose only purpose in going on the market is to produce such an effect on a commodity that it will drop in price, because if it does not drop in price he loses, and the buyer is the man who is compelled to put up the margin; when the seller puts 3,000,000 or 5,000,000 bushels of wheat on the market in Chicago to-day that does not exist, and the sales of which are published all over the world as bona fide sales of wheat, when it is simply such a transaction as these boards of trade have denounced the bucket shops to be, the worst species of gambling known to the ingenuity of man—I say, when such a condition of affairs as that exists, it is time that the Government of the United States should step in and protect the people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all this bill seeks to do, and all that there is in it—every other provision simply clusters around this great principle to enforce it—is to prevent such transactions as that. There are but a half dozen sections of the bill that it is necessary for the House to consider to get a full and accurate statement of every single principle involved in it, because all of the remaining sections are those that look to the execution of the law if it goes upon the statute books; and the principle underlying the whole is the principle that whatever is sold for future delivery shall be in good faith delivered—not delivered as you deliver it to-day, on the board of trade.

Now, these gentlemen, when they came before the committee two years ago and the hearings were all published, every one of them contended that the rules of the boards of trade compelled these deliveries, if insisted upon or if anybody wanted to demand it. That is, that the purchaser had a right to demand the wheat that he bought, and the seller had the right to deliver it, and the purchaser was bound to accept it. But when you come to find out the facts you find that rule is not enforced; and I want some of those gentlemen when they come before this Committee of the Whole of the House of Representatives in denunciation of this measure and trying to defeat its passage, and especially those gentlemen who represent districts in the city of Chicago, to explain to the House and the country that damaging testimony that stands here printed in a House document—the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives during the Fifty-second Congress, when the president of that board of trade, a fair-minded and honorable witness as ever testified, as far as I have ever heard, stated in his cross-examination, in response to questions put by me, when he insisted that this was the rule of the board, and I asked how often it was enforced, he said as far as he knew during the entire hours of the regular board.

"What is the regular board?" was asked. According to his statement it met at half past 9 o'clock and closed at half past 1, or at 10 o'clock and closed at 1. I have forgotten the exact hours, and do not care to take the time to refer to it, as it is not material, but one or the other, and at that hour the board of trade closed its doors. The question was asked if that was the end of its daily session. "Yes," he said, "of the regular board." "Was there another meeting by the board of trade under different rules in the building?" "Yes, sir." "Was that meeting held in a room on the ground floor?" giving the size of it. "Yes, sir." "Who had admittance to that board of trade?" "None but members of the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago and their clerks." Guarded at every door by Chicago policemen, in that room from 1 o'clock until 5 o'clock in the evening the worst system of gambling ever known in the civilized history of man took place to the injury and the detriment of the producers of the great commodities of this country.

Gentlemen have said to me, "Do not say harsh things about these boards of trade. There are some very honorable men amongst them." I know that, Mr. Chairman, and I am glad to state it in this presence. I know of members of the Merchants' Exchange in St. Louis who would no more sell an option than they would play faro or deal faro. I know members of the Board of Trade of Chicago who are as far above the suspicion of indulging in this system of gambling as any merchants in the world, and my judgment is to-day that there is a large minority, if not indeed a majority on these boards, if they could be heard, who are opposed to this system of gambling known as "futures and options," where no delivery takes place.

I have the very highest admiration for a large number of the merchants in the United States, both on these boards of trade and those who are not on them. I look back to a period just after the close of the war, when under the constitution of my State I could not enter the courts of my State to practice my profession, and during that struggle, when we came back, I, with you [Mr. COBB], was a member of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis. That was before such a system of gambling was ever known on a board of trade, and a more honorable body of men I was never associated with in my life or ever expect to be; men whose words were as good as the bonds of any national bank in the United States to-day; aye, Mr. Chairman, as good as the bonds of the Government of the United States, and many of them are there yet. This system of violating their own rules and selling like gamblers on the boards of trade, has sprung up in the last twenty or twenty-five years, and, as I said before, has grown in my judgment into the most infamous system of gambling ever devised by mortal man.

No man on this floor has a higher regard for what is known as legitimate speculation in these products than I have. I would not, if I know my own heart and judgment, undertake to prevent it; and I would erase from that bill any single word or any sentence or paragraph in it that would interfere with the free and unhampered and legitimate speculation in the commodities produced by the farmers of the United States. I like it; I want to see every legitimate merchant who is willing to sell the farmers' product for present or future delivery, have the right to do it. But when he pretends to sell wheat or cotton I want him to deliver wheat or cotton, and not terminate the contract by some system that ends simply in a gambling transaction at last.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption for information?

Mr. HATCH. I yield for a question.

Mr. COOMBS. You demand the absolute delivery of the product which is sold. The party who is selling a commodity for future delivery must have a guarantee from the party to whom he sells that he will receive it. In case the second party is unable to receive the product on delivery, and the party who makes the sale has it for delivery, do you not involve the matter in additional possibility of loss in case there is a misfortune, by which the party purchasing can not receive the commodity? Do you not, in other words, complicate what would otherwise be a very simple transaction?

Mr. HATCH. Well, I am afraid my friend is one of that class of whom I have spoken, and that he has not read the bill.

Mr. COOMBS. No, I am honest in asking the question.

Mr. HATCH. Has the gentleman studied the bill carefully?

Mr. COOMBS. I have carefully studied it.

Mr. HATCH. I am sorry the gentleman has overlooked that provision. If the gentleman from New York sells to me to-day a hundred bales of cotton, to be delivered in the city of New Orleans on the 1st day of September next, at 7 cents a pound, he may not own any cotton, but he has a perfect right to sell it under the provisions of this bill.

The 1st of September comes around, and in the mean time cotton has gone up 1 cent a pound, and the gentleman says: "I can not deliver that cotton; I can not buy it at 7 cents. If I buy it I have got to buy it at 8 cents." The present plan is to settle that with the 1 cent difference; but under this section of the bill, if the gentleman refuses or fails to deliver it, he must pay 1 cent a pound to the Government for his failure to deliver. That has nothing in the world to do with his obligation to me. I have the same remedy under this bill, to compel the enforcement of that contract in the courts, that I would have to-day.

If the gentleman sells me a thousand bales of cotton for delivery in New Orleans on the 1st day of September, under the present laws of the country, if he fails to deliver, every lawyer in the House knows what my remedy is. Stated in a nutshell, it is to sue him for the specific performance of his contract, or for damages for his failure to deliver the article sold to me at the price agreed upon.

Mr. CRAIN. What is the measure of damages? Is it not the difference between the contract price and the market price?

Mr. HATCH. Of course it would be the difference between the contract price and the market price in New Orleans on the 1st day of September.

Mr. CRAIN. Very well; is not that what he has got to pay when he makes the bet, as the gentleman calls it?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. He may go and buy the cotton and deliver it, and avoid the penalty.

Mr. HATCH. Of course he can. My colleague [Mr. COBB of Missouri] talks like a merchant. He knows exactly what he would have to do to-day, and that is what every honest merchant in the United States ought to do, and what we seek to compel him to do. If he sells cotton let him deliver it, and if he has not got it let him go and buy it.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Suppose you do not want it?

Mr. HATCH. Then you have no business to sell it to a man who does not want it, and I have no right to buy it if I do not want it. You know you can compel me to take it if you want to.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Suppose the seller of this cotton, at the time he sells it, has actually the whole quantity of cotton that he sells, but between the time of the sale and the time of delivery his cotton burns up. You want to impose a punishment upon him for the misfortune that he has met. He must go and swell the market in buying other cotton in order to deliver it. Is that right?

Mr. HATCH. Now, there is another instance of a gentleman who has not read the bill. There is a provision in it as plain as the English language can make it. Possibly I could have made it plainer if I had put it in a half dozen other languages, but not in English.

Mr. GOLDZIER. How many other languages do you understand.

Mr. HATCH. I only understand one, and I am very proud of it. I was born an American, and never was ashamed of the fact anywhere in my life, wherever I was.

Mr. GOLDZIER. You would have no business to be.

Mr. HATCH. So cautious were we to cover the very case suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, that there is a provision in the bill that if any owner of cotton, or wheat, or other commodity, owning it at the time he makes the sale, has it destroyed by fire or casualty, or if it is en route to the place of delivery and is delayed by the act of God or the king's enemy, or any of the ordinary disturbances of transportation, all he has to do is to state that fact, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, absolves him from the payment of the penalty provided.

Mr. GOLDZIER. That answers that question. Now, suppose a man has a contract with another man upon whom he relies for the delivery of this cotton. The other party breaks his contract and fails in the delivery. Do you wish to punish that merchant or speculator, or whatever you may choose to call him, because, without his fault, it is beyond his power to make delivery?

Mr. HATCH. If he is relying on the promise of somebody else, and is not taking a sufficient guaranty for the delivery, of course under this bill he would be held responsible.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Then he has got to be punished.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. He gets back from his other man what you get from him.

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: If A sells to B and B sells to C, who is the consumer, and A fails to meet his obligation to B, thereby forcing a failure of obligation on the part of B, do A and B both have to pay the penalty to the Government?

Mr. HATCH. Not at all.

Mr. COOMBS. There is no such a provision in the bill?

Mr. HATCH. My time is almost exhausted, and I want to make this opening statement about the provisions of this bill. Now, this bill provides that these contracts shall be in writing. There is no hardship in that, for every board of trade to-day requires that they shall be in writing. It is true that it is a very brief statement. They make a memorandum, but it is always made in writing, and nobody will suffer if there is a written contract from purchaser or seller. It will be some little trouble in the beginning, I have no doubt, for legitimate traders of the board of trade to conform themselves to the provisions of the bill if it becomes a law, and that they shall have these blanks, which shall be filled up and signed, and will show identically the transaction, and that the bill of sale in duplicate shall bear a nominal revenue stamp.

Now, that feature alone makes this bill, as I designated it in the beginning, an absolute revenue bill, and that aside from the $12 license demaned of these dealers. That alone makes it a revenue measure, because every single commercial transaction on the boards of trade will bear that nominal revenue stamp provided by the revenue department. Now, when you come to terminate that contract, if it is terminated in good faith by the delivery of the commodity, no other tax is imposed on the dealer or seller. It simply bears the additional nominal revenue stamp of the deliverance of the contract, and that is an end of it. Now, if parties desire to evade the provisions of the act by settling this contract in any other way than by actual delivery, then there are these additional taxes provided for in the bill, so much a bushel on wheat and so much a pound on cotton and other commodities will be affixed by the revenue officer.

Mr. COX. That is where they do not deliver?

Mr. HATCH. That is where delivery is not made; but whenever the failure to deliver comes from misfortune, fire, destruction of the property, either at home or en route to the place of delivery of it, or it is delayed—all the casualties, in other words, of commercial transactions, are provided for and taken care of.

Mr. STRAUS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask one question.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. STRAUS. The purpose of your bill is to prevent speculation that has not a basis of actual merchandise. Now I want to——

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield to anything in the nature of argument. I have only five minutes; but if the gentleman desires to ask a question I will answer it.

Mr. STRAUS. A spinner buys a thousand bales of cotton at a time when the cotton itself is in the market, in order to procure the exact quality he requires. Now, he sells the cotton short in order to cover his wants monthly and have his cotton cost him the price prevailing when he needs it. Are you not, by preventing him from securing himself against speculation, doing the very thing you are aiming to destroy—that is, increased speculation?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman has very adroitly made that statement. I understand the whole transaction.

Mr. STRAUS. This is an actual transaction.

Mr. HATCH. Here is the transaction. Here is a man who goes into the market to-day and he buys cotton that he wants to manufacture, and he does not want it until next month.

Mr. STRAUS. That is it; possibly his wants for six months.

Mr. HATCH. He goes into the market and buys it; and not satisfied with that, he goes into the market and sells, and by that sale depresses the price on the other delivery.

Mr. STRAUS. You do not understand my question.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I think I do.

Mr. STRAUS. No, sir; the man buys a thousand bales of cotton. He needs 300 bales a month. In order not to speculate he sells cotton short in order to cover at the beginning of each month, so that he is not speculating.

Mr. HATCH. Now, if he makes a sale under this bill, and I understand it perfectly, if he sells cotton either short or long, and you may call it what you please, if he sells cotton for future delivery, he has got to deliver the quantity sold. Any sale not accompanied by delivery will be speculative gambling and an evasion of the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And it will have its legitimate effect on the price of cotton.

Mr. HATCH. That is it. There is nothing in the world in this feature against which there can be objection, and if gentlemen vote against that they may just as well vote against the whole bill.

Mr. STRAUS. I am voting against it on that account.

Mr. HATCH. I understand that. The gentleman is voting against the bill for the very reason I voted for it, because it interferes with the short sale, and I am supporting it, because, in my judgment the people want every sale in the United States confined to sales of actual commodities of those that are sold on the board of trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, rising as I do by the courtesy of the gentleman from New Hampshire, who yields me his precedence but not his time, I disclaim interference with the informal arrangement by which my friend (Mr. COBB of Missouri) controls the time in opposition to this bill.

Now, sir, I want to start off by joining with my friend from Missouri (Mr. HATCH) in the straightforward appeal that he has made to this House. I beg every member of this House to read this bill through—not to read merely the four, five, or six sections which my friend from Missouri thinks will be enough for you, but to read the whole bill. Read it through from beginning to end—and it will be too much for most of you.

If we could have a civil-service examination of the Democrats in this House upon this bill and be assured that they would all so qualify themselves as to try to pass it, there would be no question but that, without a single negative vote from the other side, we would overwhelmingly defeat it by our own votes. It is because this bill is undemocratic; it is because it is paternal; it is because it is unconstitutional; it is because it is intermeddling; it is because it sums up in one bunch nearly all the sins for which we have so long cursed and labored with the heresies of our brethren on the other side of this House that I, for one, am opposed to it.

Now, sir, it is very reassuring to be told, as we are told by the report upon this bill, that the bill is the result of long and patient investigation and study, that the committee have had it under consideration since early in the session. Why, Mr. Chairman, that statement is altogether too modest. Since the time when it was introduced as a Republican measure in the Fifty-first Congress, right down to the present time, long after it has been repudiated by gentlemen who first presented it, I suppose scarcely a day or an hour has passed but that my friend from Missouri has been giving this measure careful consideration, and if there is anything which proves that, it is the extent to which, by giving it consideration, he has changed his mind since he last explained this measure to the House.

On a survey of his work no one will question the further suggestion of the report that—

> The opposition to this bill will be different from that which had to be met in the bill which was before the last Congress. Every argument urged against that measure is met in this.

In fact, there is scarcely a shred left of the bill, which, two years ago, was pressed as perfect, and there is scarcely a single argument which could have been urged in support of the former measure which the bill as now presented does not repudiate.

Two years ago my friend from Missouri was breathing fire against all dealers in produce for future delivery, and was willing for the time being to throttle his Democratic tendencies, and adopt the most paternal methods to stamp them out. He proposed to make everybody who dared touch the accursed thing first pay a license of $1,000, and then proposed to fine him at the rate of 5 cents for every pound of cotton, hops, pork, etc., and 20 cents a bushel for all produce sold by that measure, and to make him give a bond of $40,000 to keep his books so that the Government could always "make the penalty fit the crime." Such was his position after the two years of consideration he had then been enabled to give the matter. Two years of further study have ameliorated his mental condition. He is now careful to explain that "legitimate speculation is the very heart blood of commerce;" and is as vociferous in defending contracts for future delivery as he was two years since in their condemnation. Two years ago the result of his study had convinced him that "most members of the exchanges deal in 'puts and calls,'" which he rightly brands as gambling of the worst sort; but now he tells us that "but a small percentage of the membership of any board of trade in the United States, save perhaps the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans, and the Cotton Exchange of New York, deal in 'speculative gambling' contracts."

If confession is good for the soul, and we can judge of his feelings by the wholesale renunciation of the views entertained by him two years ago which he has made, my friend from Missouri is doubtless the happiest man in this House. If this is his experience, as I have no doubt it is, I know he will thank me for the suggestion that he ask unanimous consent that the pending measure be referred back to him for further consideration. For, sir, if we are to judge of the future by the past the result would most certainly be that, by this date two years hence, his patient investigation and study would have obliterated the bill entirely, and my friend from Missouri would lead the Democrats of this House in opposition to any such scheme as this for extension of Federal powers, for paternal interference with the details of legitimate business, and for obstruction to that part of our commerce, the free transaction of which is most essential to the great agricutural interests of our country.

FLOUR.

I am sorry, however, not to be able unreservedly to congratulate my friend upon the progress he has made. As his bill was introduced, it included flour among the articles over which his watchful care was to be exercised. I understand that this article was omitted from the bill as finally reported by him upon information that this article was always sold by special brand of the miller who ground it. Personally I have not been able to understand why every facility should be given the miller to corner the wheat market, at the same time that the system of sales for the future delivery of flour was encouraged so as to keep anybody from cornering him. This, however, might be explained by the fact that the corresponding bill in the Senate, known as the Washburn bill, was composed under circumstances which did not exclude the milling interests from close consultation.

No such consideration, however, would commend such a course to my friend from Missouri, who is certainly more of a farmer than he is a miller, and I know he will appreciate my defense of his motives, at least, when I assure him that he is mistaken in his assumption regarding flour, and indeed that he must have been "stuffed" by wicked men with intent to lead him astray. It is true that the Washburns, and Pillsburys, and other great Northwest millers, do have their special brands, and, to a large extent, do actually manufacture the flour they permit to be sold under those brands. It is, however, equally true that our great exporters and jobbers, through whom is carried on our great foreign trade, are accustomed to make sales for future delivery, either by contracts providing that the flours delivered shall be equal to samples, or by brands of their own which have no earthly relation to any mill or miller, but which represent simply a standard grade which they carefully maintain, and to fill contracts for which they purchase flour indifferently from any source whatever that furnishes it in sufficiently good and uniform grades. In other words, while it is true that but a small proportion of the flour marketed is marketed by sample, it is also true that the practice of selling futures in flour by brands which are merely guaranties of quality, and which are filled by purchases afterward made, is so general as utterly to vitiate the gentleman's supposition. I have no question as to the sincerity of my friend from Missouri. If, however, one may judge from such a particular as this, it is evident that his opinion has been swerved by some one who was about a thousand times as much of a miller as is my friend from Missouri a farmer. [Laughter.]

I have such respect, sir, for the position of my friend, and I know that the House will rely so largely upon his judgment, that before I take up the special provisions of his pending bill I venture hastily to sketch his attitude from another standpoint. How radically different is his present bill from that of two years ago I have inadequately suggested. But, sir, when we come to compare the report that he made then with the one which accompanies the bill now under discussion, it is as surprising as pleasing to find that his present statement of the several objects had in view is almost word for word that with which he prefaced the one we were not permitted to discuss in the Fifty-second Congress. How valuable, however, is this statement, which is the backbone of the recent report, may be inferred from the fact that two years since it prefaced with equal grace a most full and contradictory explanation of a totally different bill.

THE CHARACTER OF THIS BILL.

Taking up the bill reported by the committee—the ruins of the really imposing structure presented by it a few years ago—I beg, sir, to call attention to a defect of that old bill which this new one has preserved and even exaggerated. In the first section is carefully defined what among business men is known as "privilege" dealing—gambling in "puts and calls," "straddles and spreads." I do not suppose that there is any one in the United States that will defend these. The very ones who engaged in them would be most prompt to admit that they are gambling, pure and simple.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would like to ask a single question. My friend is talking about "options," "puts," and "calls," and other transactions that I do not know much about. But I find that in section 5, page 4, of this bill there is a provision—and I am inclined to think it is a very valuable one, because I do not know exactly what it means [laughter]—that a "contango" agreement shall be in writing. I think that must be something very useful.

Mr. WARNER. I am coming to that section; and I am going to demonstrate that my friend from Missouri does not know—I will not say he does not know what "contango" means—but that he does not know what some other words there mean. It must be remembered, however, first, that these gambling transactions have nothing whatever to do with either the real produce or its price. They are simple bets as to what at some definite time in the future will be the price or variations in price of the article referred to. They have no more to do with actual supply and demand, which is the real criterion of price, than do the bets upon a horse race add to or take from the speed with which either of the horses completes his course. There is, however, no defense for them.

The only questions in this regard are, whether the evil is one which may properly be attacked by law, and, second, whether it is one the dealing with which comes within the legal powers of Congress.

I had expected, Mr. Chairman, to make somewhat of an argument on these questions, but from a Democratic standpoint the objects of this bill are so scandalous, and this was so well illustrated by my friend himself in his discussion of them, that he leaves me but little to do. He admits that his object is to enact by Federal statute a new provision of criminal law. He tells you that he prefers the proposition which was pending in the other House, which directly undertook that; and he then admits that such a provision would be unconstitutional, and that he has therefore gone at the business in this indirect and, if I may say it, un-Democratic sort of way in order to reach the same result. If any Democrat on this committee will weigh that admission, it will be just as impossible for him to vote for this bill with that intent confessed by its author as it would be for him to vote for a bill assuming jurisdiction of petty larceny in the States; and it is not a defense of gambling any more than it would be a defense of petty larceny to object to this unconstitutional and paternal attempt to interfere with and regulate by Federal enactment the local affairs of the several States.

If, on the other hand, the gentleman tells me that I ought to regard it as a sufficient excuse for the transaction, that he expects to get revenue from this measure, I ask him: "Why don't you get down and sweep the other gutters of life in order to raise revenue?" Why does the gentleman omit so many other sources of crime and depravity from which he might get revenue for the Government of the United States by traffic in human vice, human misery, and human weakness? If, Mr. Chairman, this had been suggested by a Republican, as it was four years ago, we would all have denounced it as a most immoral and scandalous proposition. If it had been proposed by a pagan we would have used it as an argument for standing by our foreign missionaries in their attempt to carry enlightenment to the far-off corners of the world, where poor degraded wretches were brought up with such sentiments and surroundings. But when it comes to a Christian Democrat [laughter], and he tells us that in order to interfere with the local and criminal jurisdiction of the States, as he admits we can not constitutionally do, he will find an excuse by levying a toll on crime; I can only urge that, remembering what the gentleman himself has admitted, you determine that question for yourselves when you come to vote on this proposition.

REAL MEANING OF "OPTIONS."

In the second section are properly defined the contracts of agreement in general use in many lines of business and which have come to be known as "futures." Right here it may be proper, in view especially of the way in which the draftsman of this bill has used the term "option" in the first section, and of the extent to which that word is frequently used to designate "futures" as such, to explain the real meaning of that term. For it should be understood that the numerous references to "options" which may be seen in our commercial papers do not refer to the gambling "privileges" described in the first section, but in general to the legitimate transactions known as "futures." One of the uses of futures is this: Millers, factory owners, contractors, and others, knowing far in advance that they will require large and definite quantities of raw supplies, find it to their advantage to contract far in advance for the delivery of those supplies at fixed prices, and thus to lessen the risk of any attempt to corner the actual wheat, cotton, or other product before they need it for use. And originally contracts were drawn, for example, providing for cotton to be delivered upon a definite date in a certain month in the future. It was soon found, however, that in the ordinary course of business the exact dates at which the more important contracts became due were generally known, and corners were engineered by those wishing to take advantage of the situation, which could be successful in their ends—that of fleecing consumer on the one hand and producer on the other—provided the available stock could be carried for a few days only, including the date at which the contract fell due.

In order to avoid this trouble, and to put it out of the power of speculators to corner the market unless they were competent to carry for a considerable time all available stocks, the following plan was devised: Contracts for future delivery were so drawn as to give to the seller the option of choosing, within a certain month named, the day upon which he would deliver the produce bought. From that time on, under such contracts, with ordinary caution on the part of the seller it was practically impossible to corner any given product except at a cost and risk which of themselves were a guaranty against the attempt. A January option, therefore, does not mean a gambling privilege, according to which buyer or seller has the option to carry out or to repudiate his contract; but it means a definite sale to a purchaser, who expects to receive the produce, by a seller, who is bound to deliver it, to whom, however, in order to take away opportunities for cornering the market by others, is given the option of choosing the particular day in the month named upon which he will deliver the goods sold. An "option," therefore, as generally referred to, is so far from being a gambling privilege that it is rather a special form of a contract for future delivery devised to reduce the gambling risk in legitimate business.

EXTENT OF INTERFERENCE PROPOSED.

This bill, sir, may be summarized as based upon two propositions—both grossly mistaken ones. The first one is that the administrative features are reasonable and tolerable, either from a business or political standpoint. On this point I can characterize, in no other way so completely as by quoting extracts therefrom, the utterly ruinous and paternal interference with the marketing of our principal food products in which it is proposed our Government shall engage.

SEC. 3. That all "options" and "futures" contracts and all transfers and assignments thereof shall be in writing and signed in duplicate by the parties thereto, and every "options" contract shall state in explicit terms the time when the right or privilege of delivering, or the right of demanding the delivery of the article or articles therein named, shall expire; and every "futures" contract shall state in explicit terms the quantity and the day upon which, or the last day of the period within which, the article or articles therein contracted to be sold shall be delivered; and in each such contract the party so contracting, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employee in making such contract to sell and deliver, shall state explicitly whether he is or is not as the case may be, the owner of the article or articles so contracted to be sold and delivered, or has or has not, as the case may be, theretofore acquired it or them by purchase, or is or is not, as the case may be, then entitled to the right of the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof; and any such contract not including such statements and not so made and signed shall be unlawful, but nothing contained in this section shall be construed to relieve any person or dealer in "options" or "futures" from the penalties and taxes provided for by this act.

SEC. 4. That whenever any "options" or "futures" contract shall be terminated by the absolute sale and actual delivery of the raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meats, or pickled meat embraced in or covered by such contract the person contracting to sell and deliver shall execute a bill of sale in which shall be specified the number of pounds of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, and pickled meat, the number of bushels of wheat, corn, oats, rye, and barley, delivered, together with the name, title, or designation, and place of business of the custodian, and the serial numbers and dates of the acceptances, certificates, receipts, freight or way bills, or other vouchers representing the quantity of each article sold and delivered.

SEC. 5. That whenever any "options" or "futures" contract shall be terminated otherwise than by absolute sale and actual delivery of the raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, bacon, dry-salted meat, and pickled meat embraced in or covered by such contract, or when such termination shall be delayed or postponed beyond the time designated by the contract, the cancellation, clearance, settlement, acquittance, contango, backwardation, privilege, waiver, ringing-out, or other agreement or arrangement by which such contract shall be terminated otherwise than by absolute sale and actual delivery of the article or articles embraced therein or covered thereby, or such termination shall be delayed, postponed, or obviated, shall be executed in writing and be signed in duplicate by the parties thereto.

SEC. 6. That special taxes are imposed as follows: Dealers in "options" or "futures" shall pay twelve dollars. Every person who shall, in his own behalf or as agent, broker, or employee of another, as vender deal in "options" or make, enter into, transfer, or assign any "options" contract, or shall by letter, telegram, or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, broker, employee, or partner, resident in any foreign country, make, enter into, transfer, or assign, or cause to be made, entered into, transferred, or assigned, any "options" contract entered into or terminated within the United States, shall be deemed a dealer in "options;" and every person who shall, in his own behalf or as agent, broker, or employee of another as vender deal in "futures," or make, enter into, transfer, or assign any "futures" contract, or shall by letter, telegram, or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, broker, employee, or partner, resident in any foreign country, make, enter into, transfer, or assign, or cause to be made, entered into, transferred, or assigned any "futures" contract, entered into or terminated within the United States, shall be deemed a dealer in "futures."

SEC. 7. That the original and the duplicate of every "options" contract and of every "futures" contract shall at the time of its execution have affixed thereto internal-revenue adhesive stamps representing taxes as follows, namely: For every ten thousand pounds or fractional part thereof of cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, dry salted meat, and pickled meat, and for every one thousand bushels or fractional part thereof of wheat, corn, oats, rye, and barley embraced in or covered by such contract, one cent. To each and every written or printed instrument and to the duplicate thereof, evidencing any tranfer or assignmennt of any "options" or "futures" contract, whether such transfer be by indorsement upon said contract and the duplicate thereof, or by separate written instrument, there shall, at the time such transfer or assignment is made, be affixed internal revenue adhesive stamps representing taxes as follows: For every ten thousand pounds of raw unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, dry salted meat, and pickled meat, and for every one thousand bushels of wheat, corn, rye, oats, and barley embraced in or covered by the contract, transferred or assigned, one cent. Every bill of sale executed at termination of any "options" or "futures" contract shall have affixed thereto an internal-revenue adhesive stamp of the denomination of two cents.

To the original and duplicate of every cancellation, clearance, settlement, acquittance, contango, backwardation, privilege, waiver, ringing-out or other agreement by which the "options" or "futures" shall be terminated otherwise than by an absolute sale and actual delivery of the articles embraced in or covered by such contract, or by which such termination is or shall be delayed, postponed, or obviated, shall be affixed internal-revenue adhesive stamps representing taxes as follows: For every pound of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, dry salted meat, and pickled meat embraced in or covered by such contract, one cent; for every bushel of wheat, three cents, and for every bushel of corn, oats, rye, and barley embraced in or covered by such contract, two cents. Every "options" contract that shall expire by limitation without an absolute sale and actual delivery of the article or articles embraced in or covered by such contract, shall, at the time designated by such contract for its expiration, have affixed to the copy thereof, which shall be retained by the vendor therein named, internal-revenue adhesive stamps representing taxes as follows: For every pound of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, dry salted meat and pickled meat embraced in or covered by such contract, one cent; for every bushel of wheat, three cents, and for every bushel of corn, oats, rye, and barley covered by such contract, two cents.

SEC. 8. That every person engaged in or intending to be engaged in the business of a dealer in "options" or of a dealer in "futures" shall, before commencing or continuing such business, give notice in writing, subscribed by him, to the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein such business is to be carried on, stating his name, residence, and if a company or firm the name and residence of each member thereof, the name and residence of every person interested or to be interested in such business, the principal place where such business is to be carried on, and whether of dealing in "options" or "futures," or both, and if such business is to be carried on in a city, the residence and place of business shall be designated by the name of the street and number of the building; and if the whole building is not occupied, the number or other designation of each story and the number and other designation of each room so occupied or to be occupied. Every person intending to commence or continue the business of a dealer in "options" or of a dealer in "futures" shall, on filing with the collector of internal revenue his notice of such intention and before proceeding with such business, and on the first secular day of July of each succeeding year, execute a bond in the form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned that he shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of law relating to the duties and business of a dealer in "options" or a dealer in "futures," as the case may be, and shall pay all taxes due and all penalties incurred or fines imposed on him for a violation of any of said provisions. Said bond shall be, with at least two sureties, approved by the collector of the district, and for a penal sum of three thousand dollars. Nothing in this act shall be construed to require more than one permit to or bond from any person dealing in "futures" contracts, nor to prevent a change of the principal place of business of such dealer in "futures" by first giving notice thereof to said collector.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of every dealer in "options" or "futures" to keep at his said principal place of business a book in which shall be recorded, on the day of its execution, the date of each and every "options" or "futures" contract made, entered into, transferred, or assigned by such dealer, in his own behalf or in behalf of another or others, also the name and residence and place of business of the parties to the contract or to whom transferred or assigned, the kind and quantity of the article or articles embraced in or covered by each such contract, the day when or the last day of the time within which the right or privilege of delivering or of demanding the delivery, as the case may be, of such article or articles as are embraced in or covered by any "options" contract shall expire, and the day when or the designated period within which delivery shall be made of the article or articles embraced in or covered by any "futures" contract, and said dealers shall enter in such book such other particulars as the Commissioner of Internal-Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. All contracts executed during the fiscal year shall be numbered consecutively, commencing with number one for the first contract executed on or after the first day of July, and no two or more contracts made during the same fiscal year by the same dealer shall have the same whenever any "options" or "futures" contract shall be terminated by the sale and delivery of the article or articles embraced in or covered by such contract, the bill of sale shall be numbered to correspond with the number of the contract and recorded in the book with name, title, or designation and place of business of the custodian and serial numbers and dates of the acceptances, certificates, receipts, freight or waybills, or other vouchers representing the quantity of each article so sold and delivered. Whenever any "options" or "futures" shall be terminated otherwise than by an absolute sale and an actual delivery of the article or articles embraced in or covered by the contract, or the termination thereof shall be delayed or postponed beyond the time fixed by the contract the cancellation, clearance, settlement, acquittance, contango, backwardation, privilege, waiver, ringing out, or other agreement or arrangement by which the "options" or "futures" is so terminated, delayed, postponed, or obviated, shall be numbered to correspond with the number of the contract and recorded in the book as in the case of a bill of sale where the termination is by absolute sale and actual delivery. Such book shall at all times be kept in the dealer's place of business and shall be subject to inspection by the collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by any duly authorized internal-revenue agent who may make memoranda or transcripts therefrom. And such further particulars shall be entered in such book as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall be the duty of every person required to keep the book provided for in this section to make a return monthly to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which any "options" or "futures" contracts required to be entered into such book shall be made, transferred, or assigned. The first return shall be made on the first secular day of the month next succeeding the date of commencing business, or within five days thereafter, and returns shall be made on the first secular day of every subsequent month or within five days thereafter. Each return shall be under oath and in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and shall show each "options" and "futures" contract made or entered into or transferred or assigned by such person in his own behalf or in behalf of others during the preceding month, together with all the particulars relative to such contract as are shown by the record, or which may be required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

In the quotations I have just given I have noted only those provisions which the vender himself is obliged to carry out. Other sections provide for a most complex and obtrusive system of Government espionage and a highly specialized system of penalties and criminal law to enforce the act, so that to the pestering of individuals it is proposed to add the multiplication of Federal officers and the elaboration of criminal law appropriately devised as a part of the new system of interference and espionage proposed by the bill.

There is no parallel in the world for such officious intermeddling, except in some of the tyrannical governments of Europe, where certain vices, being under police supervision, are looked after as carefully as my friend from Missouri proposes to look after the marketing of American produce.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Has the gentleman any idea how many thousand internal-revenue deputies would be required?

Mr. WARNER. The bill if enacted must fall by its own weight. No human being can do business if there are enough deputies about his door to keep track of what he is doing under this bill, and no self-respecting human being will do business with the prospect of such espionage as is here contemplated.

A great many years ago it was recognized that although there might be tares in the wheat field, yet it would be better to leave them grow together until the harvest. But my friend from Missouri [Mr. Hatch] introduces a new principle. He says: "No, I do not believe in pulling up the tares; that may hurt the wheat. All I propose to to do is to pinch each blade of wheat as it comes up, so that if to my enlightened thumb it feels like a tare I can put it down in my books"; and it would be just as possible to make a success of wheat-raising under those conditions as to attempt to do business in the marketing of American produce under the conditions prescribed by my friend from Missouri [Mr. Hatch]. Mark you, the gentleman in his present report explains that he is not against legitimate speculation. He explains that only a few of the members upon any of the exchanges—except the two wicked ones, the cotton exchanges of New York and New Orleans—do much in this line. Mind you therefore, that, in order to meet what he himself not merely confesses but demonstrates is an infinitesimal proportion of the business of this country, he proposes to stick his intermeddling hands into every legitimate transaction.

"RINGING OUT."

It is perhaps to the credit of my friend from Missouri that the provisions of his bill demonstrate his unfamiliarity with such legislation. It would be easy to take up section after section and show its absurdity. A single instance must, however, suffice here. By section 7 a penalty is provided for any "ringing out" of contracts for future delivery.

What my friend from Missouri fails to appreciate is that the "evasion" which he proposes to punish so severely is not an evasion of fulfilment of contracts which have been made, but simply an avoidance of unnecessary trouble and expense in carrying them out.

The process of ringing out is not a substitute for actually fulfilling a contract, but simply an expedient to avoid extra expense and trouble in fulfilling it. The "ringing out" is exclusively an arrangement by which brokers in providing for their numerous customers do so at the least expense to themselves. For example, supposing that my friend from Missouri should to-day order me at New York to purchase him, for shipment to Europe in November, a boat load—or 8,000 bushels—of wheat at $1 per bushel, and supposing that two weeks afterward my friend from Georgia should instruct me to sell for him at 98 cents per bushel a boat load of wheat deliverable at New York in November. Having placed both these contracts on change, it is not improbable that before their maturity they may have both gotten into the hands of a single broker who, discovering that he is obliged to receive from me a boat load of wheat in November and also deliver to me the same amount in the same month, notifies me of the fact and suggests that he is ready to receive the difference in price, and to consider the contracts as "rung out," that is to say, that together they have made a circle or ring, and met and canceled each other. In other words, "ringing out" is simply an adjustment between brokers to save the cost of transferring produce back and forth. The customer has nothing whatever to do with it. The man who bought the grain will receive it in November as he stipulated for. The man who sold the grain will have to deliver it as he stipulated for. The only difference is that, instead of each broker, through whose hands the contracts have passed, being compelled to attend to both the receipt and delivery of the grain, it has been arranged between them that there should be but one receipt and delivery, and that—since these can be most easily attended to by the one who has both to receive and deliver the same amount—that all others interested shall be excused from bothering themselves with it. The result is simply so much less trouble in handling grain and so much less of cost to come between the producer and consumer. There is nothing of gambling about it at all, and it is simply one of the methods by which business is facilitated.

In practice, among the hundreds and even thousands of members associated upon an exchange, these opportunities for cancellation naturally occur as a result of a series of contracts rather than of a simple interchange between two brokers. In every great exchange firm there is therefore some clerk whose business it is to keep track of all their contracts, both bought and sold, and, whenever possible to do so, to obviate expense of mutual receipt and delivery by interchanging against each other corresponding contracts for purchase and sale—the saving of time and expense being simply enormous and absolutely essential to enable expense of handling produce contract to be kept at a point sufficiently low to make them attractive for temporary investments. It is true that upon these cancellations differences are paid in cash. This again, however, is neither gambling nor has it anything to do with the purchaser or seller. It is simply a case where a broker, by the rules of his exchange responsible for his customers, finding that in dealings with another broker he is obligated to receive money for the credit of a customer, and to pay out money for the account of another customer, simply sends or receives the balances between the two amounts.

A MEMBER. How about "contango"?

Mr. WARNER. I will say that "contango" is not particularly wicked. It is not, however, the same transaction as "ringing out." It is a way temporarily to postpone settlement.

Mr. WALKER. It is the same kind of a transaction.

Mr. WARNER. It is, in a way, similar, but not the identical transaction involved in "ringing out."

Mr. PATTERSON. What is that transaction?

Mr. WARNER. It is an arrangement for postponing delivery of goods purchased. I have heard it most frequently used with reference to the public securities of different countries. I do not see any reason why it should not apply to produce, but it is not generally used in that way; at least I have not frequently so heard it.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. If I understand you the ringing-out process is simply a clearing-house process.

Mr. WARNER. That is all. The whole business is simply and purely one of clearing-house methods adjusted to the complex relation of contracts involving produce as well as money; the reasons for the methods adopted, the economies in their use, and the facilities given to the advantage of all concerned, and the utter lack of effect except to reduce the expense of doing his business upon the contractor or contractee being precisely the same as in the case of a clearing-house in its relations to banks and their individual depositors. A bank depositor draws a check addressed to his bank requiring the payment to a certain individual of a certain amount of money. This particular thing is, however, one of the most rare of occurrences. What the person does is to deposit that check in his bank, requesting its payment to such bank. What that bank does, however, is not to present that check, but to turn it into the clearing-house; and what the clearing-house does is not to present the check, but to add it with hundreds of other checks against the bank in question and offset it by the equally numerous credits in favor of the bank in question, and as a result receive from one or another of its members, and pay to one or another of its members, a balance, infinitesimal as compared with the total amount of its transactions, and having no special reference to anyone of them—this without in the slightest degree affecting the relations of any of its associated banks with their customers, whose accounts are kept in precisely the form that would be the case were the primitive method of settling each check by payment in cash at the bank upon which it was drawn in actual vogue.

I was about to say that it would be just as sensible to fine every drawer of a check for permitting it to be paid through the clearing-house. This, however, Mr. Chairman, would be an understatement, for the check involves money transactions alone. The multitudinous contracts thus "cleared" by the "ringing-out" process involves each the handling of enormous bulks of stored produce as well as the handling of the money involved. And, therefore, when my friend from Missouri proposes a penalty for the ringing-out of contracts this is much worse than if he should forbid any check to be settled otherwise than by separate payment in cash at the teller's window, as is the handling of a boat load of wheat more onerous than the carrying about of a check. The utter ignorance, not merely of the conditions with which he is dealing, but of the most common expedients of permitting business to be done in a civilized way, is the only excuse which my friend can urge. If he were to be charged with the intent to accomplish what his proposition would actually do if carried out, he would become an outlaw to be abated as an Apache or a dynamiter. Of course, I appreciate that he intends no such attack upon commerce. Such, however, is practically the attitude in which this bill places him, and the consideration to which, if he is to be taken seriously, the commercial world must consider him entitled.

THEORY THAT "FUTURES" ARE WRONG.

The second theory on which this bill is based is that deals for future delivery are immoral, and hence that any interference with them is presumably a good thing for the farmer and probably for every one else.

THE OBJECT OF "FUTURES."

As to this, I believe the real trouble to be that our friends are either unacquainted with the nature of the transactions with which they propose to deal, or on the other hand, forgetful of the conditions under which commerce and business have developed. I am led to these conclusions by the suggestion still frequently made, though not as often as it was two years ago, as in the mind of the speaker a conclusive answer to any defense of the contracts called futures, viz: That they are plainly an attempt on the part of a person to sell what he does not own. That is an entirely correct description, Mr. Chairman, one with which I shall not for a moment quarrel; and it is just because such is their nature that the business of dealing in futures is a natural and beneficent one, and will become more extended and more beneficent as our civilization develops and the processes of production and distribution become perfected as to one after another of our great staples. To the extent that dealings in futures are substituted for what is known as spot transactions is the gambling element eliminated from the business involved, the effect being in each case to relieve the one who participates in each stage of the transactions involved from all speculative risks except that particular one which, it being his special business to estimate, is for him legitimate and for any one else would be illegitimate.

Let me explain. If a jackal wants a shelter, he goes into a convenient cave. If a ground hog wants one, with somewhat more of intelligence directed to that particular object, he digs him a hole. If a savage feels similar need, with still advancing use of intellect, he puts together, or makes his wife do so, the materials of which his rude hut is constructed; or if he is a great chief and wants a bigger one he causes to be brought together the material, and when he has gotten them they are fashioned and put together as he may order. If, however, a civilized man wants a house, about the last thing he does—or about the first thing he is sorry for if he does do it—is to purchase the lumber, the stone, and the brick, and then hire the men to put up the house himself. The reason is plain. In direct proportion as we take advantage of civilized condition we have to deal with a greater and greater proportion of matters as to which no man can be an expert in more than one, and the man who undertakes to be his own architect and carpenter and to serve himself as contractor in every branch required for housebuilding is simply taking in each case a gambling risk about which he can know little or nothing. What he does do, however, is to go to a builder whose special business it is to arrange for the erection of houses in that locality and he contracts with that builder for his house—in other words, he buys a future in houses, deliverable six months, or a year, or two years hence.

Mr. PENCE. And what if he does not deliver the house?

Mr. WARNER. If for any reason he does not want the house, or he wants a different or better house, or if for any reason the two parties concerned come to a different conclusion than they at first contemplated, this beneficent Government—up to date—allows them to attend to their own business.

It is not assumed—it generally is not the fact—that the building contractor has a single foot of the timber, a single one of the stones, a single thousand of the brick, or, indeed, any of the material that he thus sells in the shape of a future in houses.

No one, however, would claim that this is a gambling transaction; every one, on the contrary, would appreciate that, so far from a gambling transaction, it was a legitimate process by which what would have been a speculative risk in the man who wanted the house, but who knew nothing about building, was transferred, to his great advantage, to a contractor who could legitimately assume the risk in question, for the very good reason that it was his particular business, in which he had carefully trained himself, so as to make the contract for him a legitimate business transaction. This, however, is only the first step. The contractor himself is not equally an expert in carpentry and mason work, in plumbing and gas-fitting, and decoration, exterior and interior. He, in turn, having made a contract for the future delivery of a house, calls in several tradesmen, each most conversant with the particular branch with which he is to deal, and the general contractor buys of one a future in masonry, of another a future in carpenter work, of another a future in plumbing and gas-fitting, of another a future in painting. And no one knows better than himself that no one of these has on hand a single item of the work he thus contracts to deliver. But, just as the owner recognizes the contractor as a man who can undertake the general risk for him much more cheaply and much more legitimately than he could undertake it for himself, just so the contractor recognizes each one of these several tradesmen as one who can undertake in his specialty much more cheaply and much more legitimately than can he the special risk involved.

Not merely the articles mentioned in this bill, but iron, copper, tin, cotton goods, butter, cheese, coffee, freights, and exchange are regularly contracted for long in advance by those who are thus enabled to make definite provisions for the particular industry in which they are engaged. Lines of cloths are sold in the same way long before their manufacture. Building materials are thus contracted for long before the timber is hewn or the clay dug. That the gentlemen who are pressing this bill have not heard of these futures and do not provide against them simply shows how little are they acquainted with the universal tendency of civilized business. That they have selected the cases which are best known and most universally practiced simply shows to me, sir, that in their misinformation they have so drawn their bill as to apply it to the very cases in which, on account of the market being universal and the information as to the supply and demand being most easily and most promptly secured, the possible good to be done by such a bill, even upon their own assumption, is the least, and the certain interference in legitimate business the greatest possible. Indeed, the future system is being gradually extended to cover every product in regard to which practical methods of grading and preservation are devised; and in every quarter where this has not already been accomplished the ingenuity of intelligent producers and dealers is exercised toward the solution of the problem. It is the universal experience that in proportion as the grading of a product can be perfected and the dealing in it systematized is the economy with which it can be handled between its production and ultimate use to the equal advantage of the one who produces it and the one by whom it is finally consumed.

ILLUSTRATION FROM COTTON TRADE.

Now take the case of the cotton manufacture. I can not but feel that the theory upon which this bill is drawn is that the cotton manufacturer, when he finds he wants cotton, takes a cart and goes around and buys it of the planter, takes it to his mill, weaves it into cloth, and then takes the cloth and carts it about, seeking some one to whom he may sell it. This does approach the primitive—the barbaric—method of doing this kind of business; and it is but fair to admit that under such circumstances there would be no trouble about dealings for future delivery. Such, however, as everyone knows, is not the case at present. The business of cotton planting, of cotton marketing, of cotton manufacturing, and of distribution of cotton goods is in each case a highly specialized industry, capable of engrossing all the enterprise, intelligence, and tact of any man, and as to which no prudent man wishes to undertake more than one at a time. In the case of the manufacturer, for example, the one thing with which he is conversant is manufacturing—the process by which, the cost at which, the time within which, given the material ready for his use, he can produce the cloth ready for sale. He does not know anything about cotton-raising. And it would be impossible for him to keep track of the relations between the supply and the demand of cotton, the development of transport and commercial facilities, and all the other data that are included within the province of the cotton dealer. He is equally unacquainted with the methods by which through wholesaler and jobber and retailer, in accord with the varying demands arising from varying conditions, his goods must be marketed to the ultimate consumer. What he does know, and the only thing it is safe for him to depend upon knowing, is the process of manufacture. The risks involved in this are the ones which it is his legitimate business to assume, for the precise reason that he appreciates and can handle them better than anybody else, so that what to anyone else would be a mere gambling venture is to him a business enterprise. How does he do this?

In general, as you know, the process is about as follows: The manufacturer is without capital except a small margin above that sufficient to enable him to run his factory. He goes to the factor at New York, Boston, or Philadelphia—the man who is specially versed in the methods of distribution of cotton goods. He consults with him as to the kind of goods for which there will probably be a good demand in the near future and as to the prices at which these goods can probably be marketed. He selects those as to which his experience suggests he can most surely make a profit, and thereupon contracts with his factor somewhat in this wise: The mill owner contracts to deliver to the factor, say, 10,000 pieces of goods per month for twelve months, commencing three months in the future, and the last delivery being fifteen months off. In turn, the factor contracts to advance funds to the mill owner from month to month at a rate not to exceed a certain rate per yard or per piece of the goods to be delivered, to market the whole product as advantageously as possible, and to render an account at certain dates, interest being charged and paid at a certain fixed and generally moderate rate. There is now left for the mill owner but one factor of anxious uncertainty in the situation. As to the manufacturing, he understands perfectly its different conditions, and as the price of cotton then rules, he knows there is a fair margin for safety and profit in the transaction. The price of cotton, however, may vary by 25 or 40 per cent in the course of the year. It is something which he is utterly powerless to influence.

After all these arrangements noted are made, he is still in a position in which, while a material reduction in the price of cotton may add greatly to his profit, a sharp rise in this price may bring certain ruin. Should he go on under these conditions his business is speculative, risky, illegitimate. There are just two ways in which he can avoid this: He can buy at once, by spot contract, the whole amount of cotton he will need for the next fifteen months, thereby necessitating the use of an enormous capital and excessive expense for interest, storage, handling, and insurance; or, going into the market, he can buy cotton in such amounts as he shall estimate he will need for delivery month by month in the future. His experience has taught him that the grades which are near the standard grade vary with such exactness in proportion as does the price of that grade, that he need not concern himself as to the precise grade he wishes; but that by making a present contract for future delivery, month by month as he estimates he will need the cotton, of a sufficient quantity of a standard grade, he can, on any month when such contracts mature, secure any marketable grade above or below that standard by simply paying the difference, if what he wants is a better quantity than the standard, or by realizing the difference in case the cotton he wishes to use is of a poorer quality.

In other words, by the system of dealing in futures the cotton manufacturer is enabled to do his business with but a small proportion of the capital he would otherwise need, and to do it upon a profit margin much smaller than would be necessary if he was obliged either to take the gambling risk involved in waiting until he needed the cotton before he contracted for it, or, on the other hand, in keeping idle the money and meeting the expense involved in the purchase and holding of the enormous amount of cotton required. And I need not add that in proportion to the cheapness with which the manufacture can thus be carried on, the smallness of the margin which manufacturers are willing to accept, the inducements which are thus given manufacturers by relieving them from all risks except the one which they are specially qualified to undertake, is the manufacture of cotton encouraged, the margin between the cost of the product and the cost of the raw cotton cheapened, the consumption increased, and the demand for and the price of the planters' product increased.

To subject such deals to the provisions of this bill not merely involves a harassing trouble and expense, but—since there is no necessary contract relation between the deals in standard grade he has thus made for future delivery, and his actual purchases of special grade, when he comes to need them—the manufacturer would be subjected to all the pains and penalties provided by this bill for gambling transactions. The only alternatives would be such additional complexity in the bill, and the practice under it as would make it impracticable, or such evasion by a system of "washing" contracts as would tend to drive straightforward men out of the business.

"FIRM OFFERS"—WHEAT EXPORTS.

Take our great agricultural export trade—that upon which, to a greater extent than upon any other branch of our commerce, depends the prosperity of the great agricultural classes of the country. Take the item of wheat, which perhaps is more characteristic than any other, except cotton. American wheat and other products of the kind are marketed in Europe and throughout the world by a system known as "firm offers." That is to say, in the afternoon of each day on the Produce Exchange at New York, or the Board of Trade at Chicago, the American broker sends cable advices to each one of his foreign correspondents—sometimes hundreds in number and in every part of the civilized world, especially throughout Europe—naming the price at which he will contract to ship them wheat, corn, or other produce, provided the acceptance reaches him before the noon of the following day. The European correspondent neither knows nor cares about the conditions which will probably govern the course of prices in the next twenty-four hours. But he does know the conditions which affect the immediate demand for wheat or other produce in his country or vicinity, or is in telegraphic communication with those who do know. The European dealer, therefore, calculating upon the basis of the offer made him, sends to his own customers throughout the province, or the country where his connections are, and offers to deliver them American produce at certain fixed rates in case their answer is given within a certain number of hours.

At the expiration of the time thus given each European correspondent knows whether he will be able to market at a profit the American produce that has been offered him at a fixed price; and before the close of business on the day succeeding that upon which the American broker has made his offer, there come back to him the acceptances from every part of the world of every man who, at the price named, cares to handle American produce. These acceptances are, of course, from but a comparatively small proportion of those to whom the offers were made. Advised of the amount he will be called upon to deliver, the American broker goes upon "'change" and purchases to cover the sales thus made, and having made his offers according to the best information in a matter in which he is an expert, the average result is a net profit to him on the transaction. By this process, without the employment of any extraordinary amount of capital, without assuming any risk except the one which he is best qualified to measure, and in return for the assumption of which he has named and received his compensation, the American broker has succeeded in offering at every spot in the entire world American wheat in competition with that from every other country.

If, however, he is not to be permitted thus to do business; if he is not to be permitted to sell wheat until he has bought it—for the sale is closed the moment the return telegram is received—this whole system of offering and marketing American produce must cease, except in so far as it shall be carried on by the few who are able and willing either to contract in advance for tenfold the amount of produce that they can possibly expect to market, and thereby tenfold increase their expense and risk, or who are willing to limit their offers to the few cases which would be possible if their aggregate is to be confined to the amount the American broker has contracted for. The result would be practically to stop the offering of the American produce in most of the markets in the world in anything like sharp competition with that from other countries, or so to increase the amount of capital required and the amount of risk involved as to require the exaction of a much larger margin between the price at which the firm offer is made and the price at which the produce can be purchased here. And as the former—the selling price abroad—is fixed by the level of the world's commerce, this would mean just so much lower prices to the American producer.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This bill does not do that.

Mr. WARNER. It is suggested by my friend [Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi] that the bill does not do that. It may be claimed that if the precise order is filled by the shipment of standard grade that the bill does not prevent that. But it must be remembered that every single one of these orders carried on in trade is negotiable; and when a Government contractor in Bristol, for example, wants to be sure that he will be able to get the wheat he does want at a price which will enable him to make a profit out of his contract, he buys No. 2 red wheat. And then, even though he does not want as good a quality, or even if he wants a better quality, he knows that when the time comes he can exchange or settle that contract in such a way as to secure without sacrifice just the quality he wants, the relation of the prices of the two grades being practically constant throughout the world. The case is the same as with cotton. The penalties of this bill would prevent perfectly legitimate transactions.

Now, there is the trouble with the bill of my friend from Missouri. His intentions are all right; but he does not know what he is about. He assumes that he knows what we mean when we contract, and that if we do not do the precise thing he expects us to do we are committing a crime which, under appointment from heaven, it is his business to look out for and punish; whereas this is legitimate business; and in a great measure, although contracts for future delivery of cotton, as well as wheat, are in what is known as the standard brand, this is the way by which, indirectly as I have mentioned, not merely the standard brands and grades but the whole great product, of all grades, is marketed to the purchaser.

INDUCEMENT FOR TEMPORARY INVESTMENT.

I have attempted to illustrate but two of the numerous features of deals for future delivery, the conditions of which are inherent in the natural process of the marketing and use of our chief agricultural staples. There is another consideration which most substantially affects their price, and by which, not as a matter of original intent, but as a matter of beneficent result, the producer and consumer alike are greatly aided. Under the old system of spot deals in the products now largely handled by sales for future delivery, the investment in them—as is still the case with every product not dealt in by futures—tended to be limited to those who were specially conversant with the circumstances of their production and use, and had an extraordinary amount of capital at their disposal. As fast, however, as an article became one genrally quoted on the exchanges and extensively dealt in for future delivery it became an attractive object for temporary investment, which is what, I presume, is meant by my friend from Missouri when he talks about legitimate speculation. That any product may be attractive for temporary investment—i. e., for the use of the vast amount of floating capital that is waiting permanent investment, or kept in hand by its owner as a safety margin in case his more risky ventures fail—certain matters are essential. The product must be a well-known staple, so largely produced and so generally dealt in as to be familiar to the general public; and the conditions of its supply and use must be such as to make it reasonably sure that it has an actual worth independent of all probable risks which can be realized at any time without extraordinary trouble or sacrifice.

These conditions are most nearly met in the case of our great agricultural staple; and to the precise extent that facilities for information, transportation, and trade have been perfected, our food product has become more and more the normal investment for enormous amounts of capital that, until lately, were left idle in banks or confined to investments in Government funds. An important effect of this development has been, first, greatly to increase the number of investors and the amount of capital available for investment in farm produce, and thus somewhat to increase, and even more, to steady its price; and, second, to reduce the margin of expense for handling farm produce between the producer and the consumer, and thus benefit both.

As to the former, the advantage of more numerous purchasers and more capital for investment in a given product, I shall not assume any special explanation to be necessary.

On the second point, however, a word may be in order. So long as the dealing in produce is confined to those who have chosen it as their main business, the average profit which they expect must at least be as high as the ordinary interest upon capital, plus the reward for whatever of risk is involved. Temporary investments, however, are made as an alternative for leaving capital idle; and therefore, provided the investment is one from which his capital can be easily and promptly withdrawn, the investor is willing to purchase the wheat or cotton involved on any terms which, on the average, will secure him a small fraction of the ordinary profits in his main enterprises. As a result of the presence, bidding for wheat to be delivered far in the future, of a vast amount of capital which will be satisfied on the average with profits at the rate of 2 or 3 per cent interest, the discount is lessened—that is, a higher price is offered to-day for the wheat which will be needed next December, than could be afforded by one who was making the purchase and sale of wheat simply his main business, and who therefore would insist upon discounting the expected future price to an extent which would give him 6 per cent or more interest as well as profits for his trouble. As a natural and desirable result, the great bulk of the ordinary business of handling and marketing the farm produce of the civilized world is done through the temporary investment of floating capital willing to serve its purposes at an interest from 3 per cent down to nothing, and eagerly competing for the chance to do so.

The difference, after deduction of all strictly transport and handling charges, between the old profit margin—which in former times used alike to reduce the price to the producer and increase it to the consumer—and that which obtains to-day is a practical illustration of the nature and extent of the universal benefit thus secured.

It may be urged that the great amount of business has of itself permitted a lower relative scale of charges and profit. But even this is, in its turn, directly attributable to the eagerness with which capital seeking temporary investment avails itself of the opportunities offered. If it is the result of this system—and it largely is so—that to-day there are five or ten purchases and sales of grain, including the great number made by those who have taken it only as a temporary investment, as compared with the far less number of those made in the main by special dealers a few years since, this simply measures the competition for employment of capital that has been the result of present methods, and indicates the inevitable lowering of interest and carrying charges that is the result of this competition.

The farmer is, therefore, directly benefited in the resulting cheapness with which his necessary business is transacted, while the extent of the competition for investment in that business measures the average reduction in the discount—greater for every month in the future—that will be made in naming a present price to the farmer from the probable worth of the wheat at the time when it shall be finally ground into flour.

Nor is this all. Such is the sanguine temperament of humanity that, in the case of any article thus made a natural subject of temporary investment, the tendency always is to offer more than conservatism would estimate as safe. It is a most striking and conclusive result of this that the New York market averages higher than the Liverpool market, and the Chicago market higher than the New York market, when cost of transport is considered—in other words, that the temporary investors on the average lose their interest and pay part of the transportation to boot, so that the Western farmer or Southern planter gets just so much more for his wheat or cotton.

This feature—an advantage alike to the producer and consumer of wheat would be simply obliterated by such legislation as that now proposed. Not only does the fact that the investments are temporary, and that the same wheat is sold over and over again within a few months, multiply the obstruction and expense involved by the provisions of this bill; but it is a fact that frequently—though not nearly so often as claimed—it is convenient for all parties concerned to settle by paying differences. I presume my friend from Missouri will agree that if a bona fide temporary investor occasionally wants to back out of his contract he should be permitted to do so if he can arrange with the one to whom he is under obligation. But the trouble is that if he wishes to do so once in ten times the penalty provided by this bill will destroy his chances of profit on the whole ten deals, and the result will be that no one will have to do with business subjected to such intermeddling, except the few gennine gamblers, who will arrange to evade the law, as they can easily do if they are unscrupulous enough.

Mr. COX. You have demonstrated in your proposition that in order to send the wheat and the cotton to the consuming market, you bring into use the floating capital, and that makes it much more beneficial to the consumer.

Mr. WARNER. It makes the interest charge less.

Mr. COX. If that is true, what is the man to do that has to buy the actual cotton?

Mr. WARNER. I must confess that my friend has touched a perfectly pertinent point. The man who actually proposes to speculate in spot cotton has to make his money out of the lower price he can compel the producer to accept and the higher price he can compel the consumer to give; and he is the man who would be hurt by this bill.

Mr. COX. Then the man who buys the cotton and pays the money for it and gets the cotton is the fool in the transaction?

Mr. WARNER. It is actually the fact that most money made in the business of marketing cotton consists in the commissions which are received from sanguine gentlemen, who at the end find they have invested their money and transported the cotton without receiving much, if any, interest. It is not profitable to-day, as it used to be in former years, for a man to go out and try to corner and control the crops of a single neighborhood, or to try to control the supply of a certain number of factories. If he tries to pinch the producer and the consumer in that way, the system of deals for future delivery will pinch him between them, and give the producer a better price, at the same time that the consumer gets his supplies more cheaply.

Mr. WALKER. I think some gentlemen have failed to quite see that this transportation is done practically for nothing, that the crops of this country are handled practically for nothing.

Mr. WARNER. I should not put it quite as strongly as that. I think they are handled practically for nothing so far as the interest charge is concerned, and very frequently the competition of capital does pay a part of the transportation.

Mr. WALKER. It brings the consumer and the producer right together.

Mr. WARNER. Right together, at the expense of these middlemen about whom I have been talking.

Mr. TALBERT, of South Carolina. How do those men make their money, then?

Mr. WARNER. The records will show that, of the thousands who do this great business and invest their money to move your crops from the different parts of this country to Europe, nine-tenths of them lose money, and not one-tenth of them have as much money when they get through as one-tenth of the nine-tenths have lost.

Mr. TALBERT, of South Carolina. They get rich all the same.

Mr. WARNER. I beg your pardon, they do not get rich. The brokers do well, who also at the same time are profited by the sanguine temperament of these gentlemen; but the man who, with the great competition of capital, actually goes to the Southern planters and buys their cotton and takes that cotton himself and tries to market it in Liverpool, paying all freight and charges, is the fool from whom his money will be soon parted; and I do not know of a man who has been crazy enough to do it lately.

Mr. COX. Is there not some way to protect him?

Mr. WARNER. This bill would do it. This bill would put the farmers at the mercy of the local factors, and it would put the factories under the thumb of men who will corner the spot cotton.

EXEMPTIONS PROPOSED.

I am aware that by a somewhat elaborate system of exemptions, my friend from Missouri believes himself to have left the capitalist opportunities for investment in every direction where it will help the farmer at the same time that he has cut him off from realization in every direction which is an inducement to capital. This is a marvelously astute plan—provided the capitalist is an ass and will walk into a hole for the farmer's benefit, knowing that he can never get out of it for his own. Until, however, there shall arise a new kind of fool—one who keeps his money until he lets the farmer fleece him—all such exceptions are simply ridiculous, and no capitalist will be attracted by legal permission to go into a speculation, by which somebody else will be assisted, at the same time that he is forbidden to get out of it in the way most likely to be of advantage to himself. If he can not sell or settle his futures as he pleases, he knows better than to buy them from the farmer or anyone else.

THE TEST OF EXPERIENCE.

No test of the pudding, however, is so conclusive as the taste, and nothing can be more conclusive than the tabulated experience of our principal markets under the development of the system of dealing in futures; and with one suggestion I shall quote the statistics I have lately had prepared. That suggestion is this: While the result is uniformly to demonstrate that so far from excessive dealings for future delivery being a detriment to the price of the products dealt in, the contrary is the result, and prices are actually found to be higher in proportion to the extent of such dealings in futures, I must not for a moment be understood to attribute to the extent to which futures are dealt in the whole of the more favorable market which coincided with the increase of such deals in futures. For, although the tendency of so systematizing a business as to make it attractive to a vast amount of capital that otherwise would be unavailable for its purposes is inevitably to cheapen the processes of such business and give better prices to the producer, yet in the long run the relations of supply and demand are the great determinant factors in the price of farm products, as in the case of everything else.

To a considerable extent, however, on account of the sanguine temperament that characterizes human nature, the extent of deals for future delivery is in a measure a consequence of high prices and at the same time a stimulus to higher ones. No one appreciates more clearly than I do that, since every investment in wheat has its corresponding sale and every sale its corresponding investment, the effect, so far as concerns the mere balance of sales and investments, is rather to steady the price than to improve it, such enhancement as comes from these deals being due to the competition of capital thus induced and the cheapening of interest and other carrying charges thereby resulting.

The most summary consideration of this table makes it evident that prices and future dealings are directly proportioned to each other, i. e., the more extensive the dealings in futures, the higher the price, and vice versa. Taking the summary for the several years, we have during 1888 sales of 1,560,000,000 bushels, including spot, at an average of 97½ cents per bushel; in 1889, 1,123,000,000 bushels of sales, at an average of 88½ cents; in 1890, an aggregate of 1,240,000,000 bushels, at an average of 96⅜ cents; in 1891, an aggregate of 1,700,000,000 of sales, at an average of $1.08; in 1892, an aggregate of 1,150,000,000 of sales, at an average price of 89⅜ cents; and in 1893 an aggregate of but 1,050,000,000 of sales, at an average of only 72⅛ cents. In other words, the greater the extent of the so-called speculation in wheat, the higher its price, and vice versa.

II.

There is another way of looking at the same question, and without special introduction I present the following table:

Prices at New York and Liverpool for spot No. 2 red wheat. Ocean steam freights from New York to Liverpool. Total sales of wheat, spot and futures, at New York City. Total wheat crop of the United States. Ratio of aggregate sales to crop, and amount of exports.

Crop year, July 1 to June 30.	Prices at New York of No. 2 red wheat (the standard grade) for spot delivery.				Prices at Liverpool for No. 2 red wheat, per bushel.			Ocean freights on wheat, per bushel, by steam, New York to Liverpool.			Total sales of wheat at New York, spot and future, for the crop year.	Wheat crop of the United States for the corresponding year, as estimated by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.	Ratio of sales at New York of futures and spot wheat to the wheat crop of the United States for the same crop year (times greater).	Exports of wheat and flour from the United States for the same crop year.
	Annual average price (crop year) per bushel.	Highest and lowest price actually sold for, with extreme range.			Highest and lowest prices quoted for spot delivery.			Highest monthly average.	Lowest monthly average.	Extreme range of monthly averages.

Unless I am mistaken as to the clear and conclusive character of this table, it needs but little explanation. The volume of trading in futures and cash wheat at New York has declined in the decade from three and one-seventh times the crop in 1883–'84 to two times, or actually less, in 1892–'93 and 1893–'94; that is, prices and volume of deals have decreased together.

Again the Liverpool market is usually lower than the New York market, freights and necessary charges being considered, and New York is likewise usually lower than the Chicago market, which is generally considered the home of speculative trading. Or to sum up the consequences of the excessive speculations in wheat, the cost of transporting wheat from Chicago to New York and from New York to Liverpool, and of the interests and charges involved in carrying it from the time it is received at Chicago until it is actually consumed, on an average of six months later, is so reduced by the competition of capital utilizing wheat futures as a temporary investment that the business is practically done for nothing, and the cost of all processes between the time when wheat reaches Chicago and the time when it is sold to an English miller is practically reduced to the cost of transportation alone, and the producer and consumer are alike benefited by being thus brought more nearly together and relieved from what otherwise must be the far greater charge of serving them both.

III.

In order to put upon record as well a clear exhibit of the business transacted, as to avoid the merging and thus losing even immaterial details in the figures of a general average, I shall add as an appendix to my remarks a table prepared by Mr. J. C. Brown, statistician of the New York Produce Exchange, to whom I am glad to acknowledge other indebtedness, showing the approximate sales on the New York Produce Exchange of contract wheat for future delivery for each month, and separately in each month for every other month, together with the monthly range and monthly average price of spot No. 2 red winter wheat, monthly during the same period from January 1, 1890, to June 1, 1894.

Though perhaps superfluous, a brief explanation may be proper. Taking the first line of the first table (in the appendix) the statement indicated by the figures is as follows: During January, 1890, spot wheat ranged between 84 2/16 and 87 1/4 cents per bushel, averaging for the month a price of 86 1/8 cents. During such month (January, 1890) there were sold for future delivery wheat as to which the seller was bound to deliver it in the month named, but as to his option as to the day of the month, 1,536,000 bushels for delivery during the same month, or January, 1890; 3,648,000 bushels for delivery in February, 1890; 4,136,000 bushels for delivery in March, 1890; 1,536,000 bushels for delivery in April, 1890; 32,104,000 bushels for delivery in May, 1890; 2,784,000 bushels for delivery in June, 1890; 2,656,000 bushels for delivery in July, 1890; 1,824,000 bushels for delivery in August, 1890; 136,000 bushels for delivery in September, 1890, and 768,000 bushels for delivery in December, 1890, the total amount thus sold during January, 1890, for future delivery being 51,128,000 bushels. There are many interesting details which might be noted here. Of these the most important, however, are the obvious increases of sales for delivery in July and September, and the extraordinary extent to which deliveries are contracted for May and December. As to July and September, this comes from the fact that the harvest of winter and spring wheat is expected to have developed by that time, while May and December are respectively months as to which the former is the earliest one for which it is probable that lake and canal shipments can arrive in time, and the latter, the latest one, not likely to be demoralized by the closing of our lakes and canals for the winter.

I am far from claiming that every figure in the appendix noted is significant upon the questions involved in this bill. Indeed, the one direction in which they are conclusive is as demonstration of the immateriality of such considerations when compared with the dominant one of the relation of general supply and demand, and the most important variance—that of temporary conditions of transportation.

To an extent, however, which I myself did not anticipate, I find that the apparent connection between the volume of sales and the price of wheat is not merely in the direction I have indicated—that is, toward the coincidence of extensive sales and high prices; but that this tendency is even more marked than I had supposed, and in this connection I submit a diagram (see page 6491), showing in graphic proportion the comparative course of average prices and volume of business, including sales for future delivery (which indeed constitute its far larger portion) in wheat upon the New York Produce Exchange for the last six years. It needs no explanation. It appears there so plainly that he who runs may read—unless he runs away from it—that, generally speaking, in proportion to the activity in dealings in wheat as measured by the extent of the very business this bill is intended to hamper, is the price which makes its production a profitable one to our farmers of the Northwest.

IV.

So much for the general argument upon this point. It may be suggested, however, that it would be more conclusive should I take the conditions which, because they now prevail, are those at once most serious and most practical. If the bill introduced by my friend from Missouri is thus to be judged, damnation awaits it. The price of wheat for May of this year, the great delivery month in the Eastern markets, has ranged from 56 cents to 61 1/2, averaging 58 3/8 cents per bushel. The sales for delivery during the month of May, 1894, on the New York market were as follows:

Contracts made in—	Bushels.	Average price.
		Cents.
July, 1893	180,000	83 1/2
August, 1893	910,000	83 1/2
September, 1893	2,685,000	83 1/2
October, 1893	31,445,000	78 1/2
November, 1893	37,090,000	73 1/2
December, 1893	19,765,000	72 1/2
January, 1894	29,690,000	70 1/2
February, 1894	83,820,000	65 1/2
March, 1894	68,185,000	63
April, 1894	51,555,000	63 1/2
Total	325,325,000	68

From this it is plain that, so far from the bears last summer, autumn, and winter having beaten down the price of wheat by sales for future delivery, it was the bulls instead who, on their faith in wheat prices, invested in wheat futures an amount sufficient to carry our total stock of wheat on hand, at prices averaging about 9 cents above what it was worth during the month of May, and who have found themselves the losers to the extent of many millions of dollars on account of the fact that they had to pay during May, 1894, a far higher price for the wheat which they had bought months in advance than, when the price came to be settled by supply and demand in that month, the actual wheat was worth.

In other words, the farmer who took advantage of the market afforded last September by the system of sales for future delivery obtained 24 cents per bushel more for the wheat that would have been called for by actual demand in May than he who held it until May received for similar wheat, when the price was fixed by actual supply and demand. If he sold in October he received, under the same system, 19 cents more than though he had waited until May. If he sold in November his advantage was 15 cents; in December, 13 cents; in January, 11 cents; in February, 6½ cents; and even after holding it until March or April, if he then took advantage of this system, he would have received 3¼ cents per bushel more than the average price in May as settled by supply and demand.

Mr. TERRY. That was before we repealed the purchasing clause of the Sherman law.

Mr. WARNER. Wheat which was sold for future delivery near to the time of the repeal brought the highest price, much higher than when it was afterwards fixed by the law of supply and demand.

Mr. SIBLEY. What about those who got only 35 cents a bushel for their wheat?

Mr. WARNER. Where were they?

Mr. SIBLEY. They were in Tennessee, the constituents of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. WARNER. They must have been waiting for this bill to pass.

Mr. SIBLEY. They have been waiting for something a long time.

Mr. WARNER. They ought to have sold their wheat last fall, for future delivery, when they would have gotten good prices.

And these figures develop another consideration, namely, that, instead of the dealings in futures fixing the price of spot wheat, it is, on the contrary, the growing certainty of the relation of supply and demand for any given date that, as that date draws nearer, determines the price at which futures then deliverable can be sold. The demonstration of our late experience is therefore absolute, first, that by the system of sales for future delivery the farmer has not been injured, but has been greatly advantaged as compared with what would have been his fate had he depended upon spot sales; and, second, that the price of spot wheat is really fixed by supply and demand, which, in its turn, as fast as its proportions develop, controls, and is not controlled by, the market for future delivery.

THE REAL CAUSE OF LATE LOW WHEAT PRICES.

But my friend from Missouri may remind me that the price of wheat is a serious and material matter, and may ask me to account for its serious decline during the past few years. I might retort by quoting from his own speeches and pointing to the price of silver and talking about Indian rupees and Indian exports. But I think he knows better than that now, as I certainly do. And knowing that it is supply and demand, and not rupee exchange or Hindoo proclivities, that govern the price of wheat—knowing, as I suspect he does, that so far from the decline in silver prices of late years having stimulated Indian exports of wheat, those exports have, on the average, been getting less and less instead of greater and greater, I simply quote here the statistics as to exports of wheat from British India, which show that the only year of late in which wheat exports have been as large as they were ten years ago was the year 1891–'92, when wheat was higher here than in any other year of late, and that exports of wheat from India have on the whole decreased since 1881.

I have done what I am afraid my friend from Missouri has not done, looked about the world to see what was the explanation of the fall in price of American wheat. There are a number of causes, sir, but they may all be characterized by the one which I shall call to your special attention.

ARGENTINE WHEAT DEVELOPMENTS.

The Argentine Republic has of late been developed for agricultural purposes, especially wheat production, with a rapidity which is comparable only to the promptness with which, when her broad lands were once opened to communication, Dakota became so important a factor in our own wheat supply. I append the statistics for the last twenty years, from which it appears that wheat exports from the Argentine Republic, starting at nothing in 1870 and not becoming constant in any degree until 1883, had risen to 18,000,000 bushels in 1892 and 39,000,000 bushels in 1893.

*Commercial reprint of Argentine official figures.

While the monthly bulletin for March, 1894, of the Bureau of American Republics estimates the exports for 1894 at 2,000,000 tons, or between 65,000,000 and 70,000,000 bushels.

The startling showing thus made of sudden and great increase in production is made more so by the data thus far received as to 1894. When I first made note of matter to be referred to on this discussion the Corn Trade News of May 14 was the latest number of that periodical showing wheat in transport. On page 1122 I find that there was at that date actually afloat in transitu between the Argentine Republic and Great Britain alone 1,500,000 quarters, or 12,000,000 bushels of wheat; and that there were also in transitu at the same time for continental ports 615,000 quarters, or 5,000,000 bushels; while the list of ships already chartered and yet to load was simply an appalling one. How great the entire shipment of wheat from the Argentine Republic to Great Britain and the continent will be during the present year is one which no prudent man will put below most extraordinary figures. All calculations have already been distanced, and not until the capabilities of the Argentine Republic and their rate of development have become more generally known than at present would it be safe to prophecy what is the future of wheat-growing in the United States. I am perfectly well aware that there is more than one consideration which may mitigate the result which now seems imminent. I suspect, indeed, that the unexpected increase of Argentine production may have so startled the business world as to have been more than discounted, and thus to have made prices unremunerative even to Argentine producers. There is, however, nothing sure as yet. The situation can not be handled by any obstruction interposed by our Government to the most economical and natural methods of wheat marketing by those who are engaged in it here.

There never has been a good time—there never will be—to enact any such legislation as that proposed by this bill. It seems, however, like the irony of fate that it should be pending at just the moment when its uselessness has been most thoroughly demonstrated by the course of late events, and when the damage to be done by its enactment will be of most fatal consequence to American wheat-growers, who are now facing the most serious crisis by which they have ever been met. How desperate is the condition which this bill would further aggravate may be appreciated when I note that under date May 28, 1894, I am advised that grain room to Antwerp had been taken the week before at Baltimore for nothing; that is to say, that one of our great grain-exporting points found so little demand for a commerce which in former years so profitably filled every outgoing vessel as to bring many of them back in ballast, that the comparatively few vessels which have brought cargoes to her found no grain to be carried eastward, except what they were willing to take as ballast alone and without any charge whatever for freight.

I do not know, sir, that I ever felt much like getting very indignant at Nero because he fiddled when Rome was burning, because, if anything is well established historically, it is that he was a good fiddler, and I do not suppose his fiddling helped the conflagration. [Laughter.] But now, just at the very time when our export trade in produce is in the very worst peril it has ever experienced, when it seems essential that every scope should be given our traders to handle their business in the most economical and easy way possible—at such a time as this, for my friend from Missouri—who, although he may know something about fiddling, does not know anything about dealing in wheat or cotton—to come in and propose his intermeddling expedients in order to harrass and put to further expense the men who are already almost driven out of business, is almost too much to view with equanimity. I know he does not mean it; I know he would not do a bit of hurt intentionally; but, sir, his is the calm assurance of a baby trying to mend a watch, or an anarchist arranging to fix a government. [Laughter.] The only trouble is that the gentleman is of age, and we cannot deal with him according to our sympathies, but must do so with regard to the merits of the measure he proposes to father.

It would fatigue criticism, sir, to attempt any adequate exposé of this bill and of the depths of misinformation disclosed by the report which accompanies it. And I care now to call attention to but one further consideration in this line.

THE BILL ENCOURAGES "CORNERS," OBSTRUCTS LEGITIMATE BUSINESS, AND LEAVES GAMBLING UNTOUCHED.

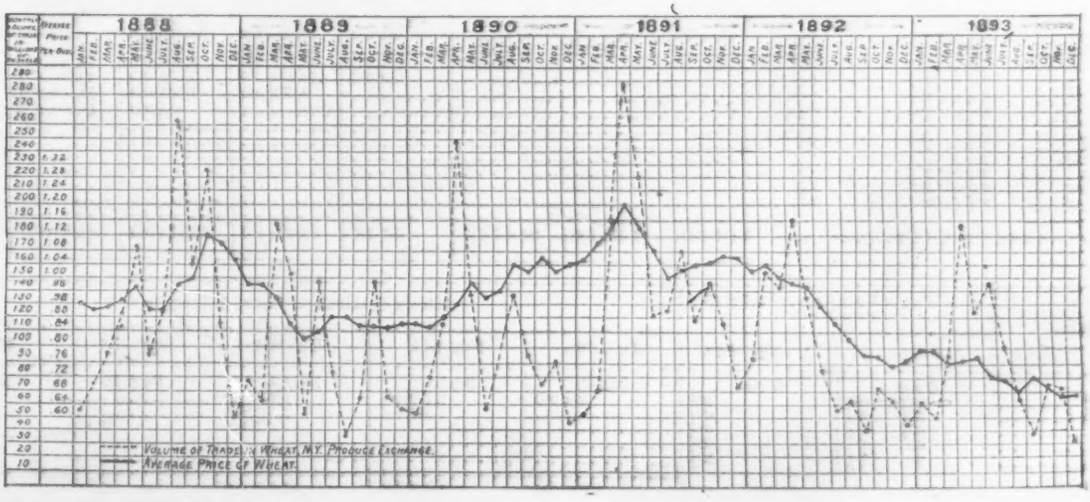
Every great speculation in produce which has brought disaster either to the producer, the consumer, or the speculator has been made effective by the purchase and withholding from market of the actual produce involved. If this law forbade this, and its enforcement could prevent thus forestalling the necessaries of life and industry, and demoralizing the business dependent upon their consumption, there might be some excuse for it. So far, however, is the bill before us incapable of producing this effect that it does not even pretend to attempt it, but, leaving untouched every opportunity for this crime against civilization, proposes to discourage capital from produce investments so as to make more easy and more disastrous the "cornering" of the actual product. The effect, therefore, is to discourage legitimate business and to lessen the amount of capital available for carrying the world's stock of produce, thereby facilitating speculation in it by those who shall actually attempt to forestall it, with the inevitable result, when the market breaks, of a time of lower prices than any which could otherwise have ruled.

The law, however, would be utterly ineffective to prevent gambling in farm produce. For the whole world is to-day a single market, and purchases are made from Chicago, at London, at Berlin, at Calcutta, as easily as they are at Duluth or New York. Legitimate business must be carried on and legitimate investments are made along well-defined limits of trade, and within comparatively narrow limits of locality. The gambler is indifferent as to the market in which he deals. The result, therefore, of the enactment into law of this bill would be to demoralize legitimate business in America. As to gambling, however, it would still be carried on by the same men in the same way, except that the nominal place of the fictitious sales and purchases would be London or Berlin instead of New York or Chicago—in the world's markets where the price of these products is fixed—and whence prices in America would be afflicted (if at all) precisely the same as though the fictitious sales were made here.

I have omitted, sir, to refer to the puerile devices by which it is attempted in the bill now pending to bring within the scope of this bill numerous classes of contracts which ordinarily would not be subject to the jurisdiction either of our Government or that of any of the States. I shall not assume that there is any member of this House to whom they will not upon reflection plainly appear to be the shams which they really are. I shall not dignify them by the notice involved in an argument against them. As a lawyer, however, I will summarily state—what will be concurred in, I believe, by every brother lawyer in this House—that no client of mine who is willing to do his business through foreign offices will ever be in the least degree troubled by them. When we shall all have become wonted to the methods I shall suggest he will be so little bothered by anything which my friend from Missouri has concocted that he will not have even unpleasant reason to remember his existence. But to the American citizen who must do his business here, I can offer no such guarantee.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

As to the broad question of constitutionality, a similar reason would prompt me to let the obviously unconstitutional character of this legislation develop itself from the arguments of those who ventured to defend it. But, sir, I have another reason—and to me even a better one. The ends proposed and the means suggested are so far outside of what seems to me desirable and tolerable, that questions of technical constitutionality are of little moment. To one like myself, who has the little regard for the intent of this bill and the utter abhorrence of the means proposed that I entertain, it is worse than frivolous to urge in addition that it is unconstitutional. On the other hand, with anyone who, thoroughly understanding the scope of this measure, shall deliberately conclude its end to be laudable and its means proper, I do not care to discuss questions of constitutionality. There is no earthly reason in my mind why, bent upon such an errand, he should allow himself to be restrained by either law, morals, or common sense.



If there is any man, calling himself a Democrat, who, after fully understanding this bill, needs to consult the constitution or any other document in order to know whether he shall favor it or not, then, sir, either he or I is in the wrong party.

The bill is simply a meddling one. If enacted into law, it would be worse than worthless for the aims it professes and which, in simple charity, are all those which I attribute to the conscious intent of those who promote it. It is so outrageous that if enacted it must promptly produce such a revulsion as shall blot it from the statute books. Were it a Republican measure, I should have it photographed and exhibited as a horrible example of the consummate folly of blind paternalism. As it is, I can only appeal to those of my Democratic friends who may have the least intention of supporting it, to keep on studying it until they are sure they understand it. This being done, not merely is the measure before us foredoomed, but the disgrace of even the presentation of another of its character ever averted from our party.

The chairman of the committee reporting it has admitted that the bill is an attempt to interfere with what he concedes to be legitimate business in order virtually to apply Federal criminal law to a matter which he confesses is none of the business of the United States Government. And in order to dodge the Constitution, he proposes another evasion; and under the assumption that this subject belongs to the Committee on Agriculture, brings in a revenue bill, and interferes by an unconstitutional use of the taxing power.

It seems to me, sir, that as representatives of the various sections of this country, we should not merely avoid interference with the legitimate business of citizens, but that, as Congressmen of the United States of America, we should confine the exercise of our functions within that range of both criminal and civil law that is confided to our jurisdiction. As Democrats we should remember that the welfare of this country demands less rather than more of Federal interference; that we come here not to extend paternalism but to abolish it; and that our office is rather to repeal bad laws than to make worse ones. [Loud applause.]

[Mr. BRYAN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. How much time has the gentleman from Nebraska remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seventeen minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield that to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. I reserve that time, and move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the anti-option bill (H. R. 7007), and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OATES, until August 8, on account of important business.

To Mr. NORTHWAY, for one week, on account of business engagements.

And then, on motion of Mr. HATCH (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. HARE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the bill (S. 1076) to release a certain limitation existing in an act of Congress touching the Episcopal Church at St. Augustine, Fla.; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1107), was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported adversely the bill (S. 1583) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery; which, with the accompany report (No. 1108), was ordered to be printed and indefinitely postponed.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, and a resolution, and a memorial of the following titles were introduced, and severally referrred as follows:

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 7478) to secure adequate compensation for the right to construct, use, or extend, and operate street railroads in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HEARD: A bill (H. R. 7479) to secure uniformity in the names of minor streets in the cities of Washington and Georgetown—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of 8 citizens of Lisbon Falls; of 15 citizens of Rangeley, and of 35 citizens of Lisbon Falls, all in the State of Maine, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BUTLER on the 14th instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submited by Mr. BUTLER on the 14th instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HUNTON on the 15th instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2138) authorizing the Minneapolis Gaslight Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2139) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River from a point within the limits of the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, known as Eagle Point, to the opposite bank of said river in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2140) granting a pension to Katharine K. McCartney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit a resolution; which I ask may be read, printed, and lie over. The resolution was read and ordered to lie over, and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare and report, as soon as practicable, a bill providing for the establishment of a system of public savings banks, to be conducted under the surveillance of public officers in connection with the Post-Office Department.

BERLIN SILVER COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] coming over from a previous day.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. VOORHEES was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee of the Senate have authority to translate the proceedings of the Silver Commission held at Berlin in February and April, 1894, and report the same to the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will explain the resolution in just a moment; and I am very glad to see the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in his seat. The papers that I ask to have translated, to be submitted to the Senate and published as a document, are the daily reports of a commission on the silver question which sat in Berlin. I understand from the brief examination I have been able to make, with my ignorance of the German language, this commission was composed of the most scientific and learned men, really the savants of Germany, Austria, and France, on the silver question. I am led to believe that their report is a most valuable contribution to the cause of silver money and its rational and proper use among the nations of the earth. I consequently ask that the Finance Committee be authorized to have it translated and submitted to the Senate.

I will state in this connection that from the investigation I can make, the expense will be inside of the limit of $500. There is no doubt about that. It is thought by some that it will not be over $250, but it will be inside of the limit. With these remarks I trust the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Indiana if this is the conference which adjourned but recently, in which Dr. Arendt took part?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it is. I see by the proceedings that it ran to the latter part of April, beginning some time in February. It was suggested to me at my seat yesterday by Senators that they thought the matter had already been translated, and we had seen it here. In point of fact it has not been in this country at this time more than forty-eight hours. There have been references to it in the newspapers.

Mr. TELLER. There has been no translation. A very worthless synopsis of the general work of the commission has been published, but nothing of any importance.

Mr. QUAY. I think the resolution ought to be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the proceedings will be published. I think it is a very valuable work.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the resolution ought to be adopted, and that we ought to have the benefit of the information contained in the proceedings of the conference.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will simply state that I shall see that a competent person is employed to make an acceptable translation.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. TELLER. The bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed from the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take land in severalty on the west 40 miles of the present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians of June 15, 1880, was yesterday ordered to lie on the table to be called up perhaps this morning. I ask that it may be continued on the table. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] is not yet here to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be announced.

YANKTON INDIAN AGREEMENT.

The bill (S. 1538) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yankton tribe of Sioux or Dacotah Indians in South Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect, was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

LUCY BROWN.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother of Aaron B. Divinny, late of Company B, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

The bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically salsola kali tragus, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over. It may as well go to the other Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, on objection.

PUNISHMENT OF FRAUDS.

The bill (S. 1320) to provide for the punishment of certain frauds was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in line 5, after the word "mails," to insert "or in any other manner;" so as to read:

That any person who shall by fraud, deception, or false pretenses practiced through the use of the United States mails, or in any other manner, procure to be sent into the District of Columbia any produce, goods, wares, or merchandise, with intent to cheat or defraud, may be prosecuted therefor in the courts of the District of Columbia, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000 and by imprisonment not to exceed five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONS ENGAGED IN PROTECTED INDUSTRIES.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business No. 448, being a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are, or who may be claimed to be, affected by tariff legislation, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN, May 15, 1894, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are, or may be claimed to be, affected by tariff legislation; the total number of persons engaged in such industries whose wages are not, or will not, be affected by tariff legislation, and the proportion of the population of the United States who depend upon the foreign market for the sale of their products, classifying such industries respectively; such information to be based on the census of 1890. Also, that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and required to inform the Senate of the total number of such persons who are native-born citizens of the United States of America, the total number who are naturalized citizens, and the total number of such persons who are aliens; and at what ratio, if any, alien mechanics and laborers have been taking the place of native and naturalized citizens of the United States in the protected industries of the United States.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, resumed the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is such a motion pending, I think.

Mr. MORRILL. There is. I have heretofore moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska, who has seemed anxious for the passage of this resolution, that I do not object to calling for any information that is now contained within the records of the Treasury Department. If the Senator has knowledge that a committee or a board of experts have made a report covering these points of inquiry, there could be no objection to calling for that report. Whether it was wisely ordered or unwisely ordered, there would be no cavil about the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit the information if he has already compiled it.

But the Senator knows very well the objection stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and also by myself, to a resolution wherein the Senate seems to order the collection of information upon certain points, ascertaining how many people in this country have their wages affected by a protective tariff, and to what extent foreigners have taken the place of native citizens in protected industries. It is not within the proper function of the Senate by a resolution of the Senate alone to direct such an investigation to be made. It is a subject-matter of legislation. It is not a call for information.

Therefore, there has been objection on this side of the Chamber to the passage of a resolution which would seem to impose upon the Secretary of the Treasury a duty to do something of this kind. It imposes upon him, according to the language of the resolution, almost the necessity of forming an opinion, which opinion he has not already formed. I submit to the good sense of the Senator from Nebraska that it is not wise, neither is it competent, for the Senate by its own action to direct this whole ground to be covered by the procuring of statistical information not now in existence, and by the formation of an opinion thereon not already formed.

I repeat to the Senator, if he will modify his resolution so as to call for documentary evidence already existing or for a report on these subjects already made, I for one shall make no objection to it; but I do stand here to object to a resolution of the Senate which undertakes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to gather information which he has not already gathered, to compile information which he has not already compiled, for the purpose of forming an opinion which he has not already formed.

I trust the Senator from Nebraska sees the distinction. I think it is a sound distinction.

Mr. MORRILL. My motion was not made in any hostility to the resolution, but in order that the resolution might be perfected so as to call for exactly what is wanted. I think it needs verbal amendment in several places, and it can only be done in a committee where both protectionists and free traders are fully represented.

Mr. LODGE. I should be very glad to have this information in the form of the request of the Senator from Nebraska. I think it is very valuable and would be extremely convenient. But do not statistics of population come properly under the head of the Bureau of the Census? They must be all there, and they only need to be collated and put into different form. I do not know where the Secretary of the Treasury would have them. It seem to me, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, that it is imposing an immense work on a Department to which the inquiry does not strictly belong. The census has gathered all the statistics of population, and I suppose it would only require a new classification to give us what we want. I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he would not better reach the result desired through the Bureau of the Census than through the Treasury Department?

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly hope that the objections to the passage of the resolution will be withdrawn. They appear to me to be purely captious, and to illy conceal a purpose on the part of some Senators on the other side of the Chamber to defeat any information upon this important subject. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has made it his duty, seemingly, to studiously object to the consideration of this resolution. The resolution calls for vital information. It is not without precedent at all; for in 1886 the Secretary of the Treasury appointed three different persons to compile information of this precise character based upon the census of 1880, which is found in Appendix D of Mr. Manning's report for the year 1886. The information is valuable, according to my way of thinking; and I believe that the Treasury Department has the means of furnishing us with reasonably accurate information upon the subject.

I can realize very well and very fully that gentlemen who believe and who teach the doctrine that protection comes to the home of every American citizen, regardless of his occupation, can wage war upon a resolution of this character, which will have a tendency if properly answered, in my judgment, to show the reverse of that claim. I am not a believer myself in that doctrine. If it be possible to obtain information that is reasonably accurate and reliable, showing the exact number of persons in this country who are engaged in gainful occupations and whose wages are directly affected by legislation, I think the Senate and the country are entitled to that information, and I think it will be information essential to enable every Senator to intelligently cast a vote upon the pending tariff bill, or upon any other tariff measure that may come before us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to interrupt the Senator. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. The committee were kind enough last night to pass over, on my suggestion, paragraph 356, matting and mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan, to which I desire to offer an amendment. I move to strike out that paragraph and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 356 and insert:

356. Matting made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 12 cents per square yard; mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 8 cents per square foot.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. LODGE. I will state that it proposes a restoration of the McKinley rates.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the manufacture of cocoa matting and mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan is not a large industry. It has grown up in this country under great difficulties. It has been obliged to compete with the very lowest form of labor, the cooly labor of the East and the convict labor of certain prisons. It has had a hard struggle for existence, but it is estimated by the president of the Mat Makers' Union, in Brooklyn, that there alone they have some five hundred men employed. The exclusion of the convict-made goods has relieved them from one important point of competition, but they are still exposed, if they are not given a proper duty, to the competition of the labor in India, perhaps the lowest paid labor in the world.

There is no reason in the nature of things why this industry should not be domesticated here, and why it should not give employment to large numbers of men. They are not engaged in making a necessary of life; but they are engaged in a very useful employment, and I propose to show by the testimony both of the manufacturers and of the workingmen themselves engaged in the industry that the proposed change offered by the Finance Committee means the absolute destruction of this industry and the throwing out of employment entirely of the men who now earn a living in it.

I have here a letter from one of the makers of mats. I will say that these are small firms; that there is no large aggregate of capital in the business, except in the case of one person, who is principally, I am informed, an importer, and therefore favors a reduction of duties. This letter is dated June 18, 1894, and was sent me by a representative of the United States manufacturers as set forth in their various petitions. It makes the following statement:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18, 1894.

To the honorable Senators of the Finance Committee having in charge the tariff bill now under consideration:

SIRS: Referring to the proposed change in Schedule N, miscellaneous manufactures, paragraph 356, which now reads, "Cocoa matting, 12 cents per square yard; cocoa mats, 8 cents per square foot," and which it is now proposed to change to 20 per cent ad valorem, we would herewith beg to give a few particulars regarding this industry, which is comparatively a new one in this country, and the enactment of the present law has only made it possible, since its enactment, to compete with India coolie labor.

Taking cocoa matting, the average cost of producing this in United States is from 10 to 12 cents per square yard. The proposed change in the new tariff, of 20 per cent ad valorem, of value of matting made in India, costing from 6d. to 12d. per square yard, cost and freight New York, would average about 3.6 cents per square yard duty.

The cost of making such matting in India would not exceed 1 cent per square yard (native workmen get there only 3 cents to 6 cents per day and less); this, with above duty, would make these goods stand, including cost of making in India and the duty at 20 per cent, laid down in this country, 4 to 4.6 cents per square yard against 10 to 12 cents per square yard cost to make in United States; so that the cost of making these goods in India, including the duty of 20 per cent, is about one-third of cost to make in United States.

Taking cocoa mats, the average cost of producing these in United States is estimated at 6 to 8 cents per square foot, viz, for cost of making only by American skilled labor.

The proposed duty of 20 per cent ad valorem would mean on the India value of these goods about 1¾ to 2 cents per square foot duty, perhaps somewhat less (if values in India continue to decline). Add to this the cost of making with coolie labor in India not over 1 cent per squar efoot (but rather under this), would make the foreign or India product cost here, duty paid, including India coolie labor, not over 2¾ to 3 cents per square foot, or say about half to one-third of the cost to make in United States, including duty. So it must be plain to you from the foregoing that if this proposed duta of 20 per cent ad valorem on mats or matting is made a law, it can only result in the complete stoppage of this industry in our country.

The benefit of low cost of producing in India these staple articles of household use as imported by our foreign competitors has, however, never been, nor will it ever be, given to the consumer, and these said importers and foreign manufacturers have practically had a monopoly of forty years of this business prior to 1890. It was only when the existing law was enacted that our American mills could in any way compete with the coolie labor of India. Formerly the importers and foreign firms charged fancy prices, while now that these goods are made in the United States the consumer (and these goods are used in nearly every household in this country) gets the benefit of the lower price of door mats and mattings, which is now fully 30 per cent lower than when the said foreign firms had the monopoly of the business, and it was made possible for them to have this under the tariff of 1883 (20 per cent) and prior.

With the present duty of 12 cents per square yard on matting and 8 cents per square foot on cocoa mats, our manufacturers have taken heart and have embarked in the promotion of this industry in the United States, which business has been now so extended that we need no longer look to the natives of India or the cheap labor of Europe to supply us with these commodities.

Should, however, the existing tariff be changed back to where it formerly was (prior to 1890), i. e., 20 per cent ad valorem on this basis, it would be impossible to compete with the India made, or even European convict-made goods, and the importers and foreign manufacturers could safely and easily reduce and regulate their prices for a time sufficient to kill or stifle our newly created industry in this country, and after having done this, again get complete control of this trade for another thirty or forty years, as they formerly did, and on their own terms, unless, indeed, we were to transfer our manufacturing interests to India, and manufacture there; which, taking into consideration that the industry has only gotten on its feet after considerable expenditure of money, labor, etc., based on the existing law, can not very well now be done.

We can not therefore contemplate without serious apprehension such a change as is proposed in the existing tariff on the articles cocoa mattings and cocoa mats, and we ask in fairness, and in the interest of the number of people employed in this business in the United States, that the present rates of duty on cocoa matting, 12 cents per square yard; cocoa mats, 8 cents per square foot, remain as it is. If it must be modified, and can not be left as it is, we pray that the duty be made a specific one of 9 cents per square yard on matting and 6 cents per square foot on cocoa mats.

This would be fully 25 per cent reduction on the existing specific duties, and under this rate it will be barely possible to make these goods in the United States. And since only our foreign competitors have in view the abolition of this duty, and the manufacturing community of this country is vitally interested in its maintenance, the modification proposed of 20 per cent ad valorem would mean, as said before, the complete stoppage of this business in the United States.

Therefore, in view of the various lengthy petitions received from the mills in this country and signed by the numerous working people, as well as the representative citizens of the various cities and towns in this Union, we would most respectfully submit this matter for your careful consideration, believing that you will do our American interests and the working people engaged in this business justice, and protect them against the India coolie labor.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN W. GREENE.

Representing United States manufacturers as set forth in the various petitions as signed by them from Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, etc.

The article known as floor matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commonly known as "Chinese or Japanese matting," is, we believe, not made in this country at all. It has been proposed in paragraph 356 to classify these cheap straw mattings and the heavy substantial cocoa door mats and matting alike. There is, however, no similarity whatever. Our domestic cocoa matting and mats needs adequate duty against the coolie labor, while the straw matting can evidently only be made profitably by coolie labor of India and China.

That is the statement in behalf of the manufacturers. I now desire to read and put into the RECORD a statement made in behalf of the workingmen engaged in this industry, signed by D. J. Curnen, ex-president of the Mat Workers' Protective Association, of 319 Plymouth street, Brooklyn:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 9, 1894.

DEAR SIR: In their own defense the workingmen of the cocoa mats and matting industry respectfully present the real facts regarding the condition of their small industry and beg your kind consideration in their behalf as American citizens.

The petition submitted asking for a reduction of duty on the above-named articles contains many misrepresentations which we are in our own defense obliged to expose and contradict, a review of which shows the purpose of this old firm of importers; that purpose is a reduction to the old rate, 20 per cent, which they enjoyed for such a long period it has enabled them to become very wealthy at our expense.

We were obliged for a long time to witness shiploads of their coolie-made goods landed here in an unfinished condition, finished here, and placed on the market, and we had to remain idle half our time.

They wish to resume and continue this state of affairs, and in justice to us and our families, you should not permit them by giving them the desired reduction.

The firm of Darragh & Small claim to be the largest American manufacturers. There is no factory in Brooklyn or elsewhere in the United States run under that firm name; the factory to which they refer is that of Jos. Wild & Co., in which, from their manner of doing business, we believe they have some slight interest or private understanding.

They claim they employ upwards of 200 men; the fact is, there are not 100 employed, and near all of them have been for a long time on three and four days a week and some on less.

In the face of this condition of affairs they claim their cooly-made goods does not compete with the American-made goods; they claim their imported matting is peculiar in make and superior in quality and can not be produced here. The fact is, all the grades are made here and of better workmanship, as our facilities are far in advance of that of India, but of late years they have taken steps to increase and perfect their facilities by sending on their skilled foremen and improved machinery to better train the coolies.

They claim that only the labor of eight workmen is involved; the fact is, about five hundred is involved and we are entitled to consideration instead of a few wealthy importers who care nothing for the suffering they may bring to men who have devoted all their lives to the business.

They claim their imported matting sells for 70 cents a yard; the fact is, it has been offered for 38 cents a yard. The same quality made by us sells for about 55 cents a yard. We submit the comparative cost of production in the two countries. A roll of best cocoa matting made in India: Weaving, 2 rupees or 70 cents; general labor, 30 cents; total, $1. Same in United States: Weaving, $2.95; general labor, $3.15; total, $6.10. One dozen best quality mats made in India, 6½ cents each, total, 75 cents. One dozen best quality mats made in United States, 51 cents each; total, $6.12. Total cost of a roll of India matting, $9; freight, $2; duty, $1.80 ad valorem; total, $12.80. Total cost of same quality made in United States, $17.80. Total cost of one dozen best quality mats made in India, $5.80. Total cost of one dozen best quality mats made in the United States, $12.51.

Thus you can see at once why they want to manufacture in India, where labor can be hired for 3 cents to 10 cents a day. This trifling cost of labor is why they want the duty reduced. You may think it is impossible for the native coolies to live on this small sum. The reason they do so is that they have no ambition but merely to live; their food consists of rice and native fruits, which grow there in abundance.

The importers who have petitioned for the reduction know fully the sad condition of prices in the market, made so by their cooly goods and the goods made by convict labor in the penitentiaries of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, which we have been fighting against for nine years past and during which time we were obliged to submit to short time and very short wages.

The fact that they want a reduction proves they are willing to pay 20 per cent duty and yet underbid convict labor.

Do not give the importers an advantage that would give them the market and place us idle and in want.

Equalize the cost of labor in India and the United States. This will do us justice, and justice is all we ask. The rate in the present law about enables our employers to compete with the cooly goods; please let it stand.

A reference to the large importations of cocoa mats and mattings under the low rate previous to present law, confirm the facts we submit to you. That the rate in the present law is not too high is proved by the amount imported under it.

We appeal to your sense of common justice not to put us on a par with coolies of India.

Hoping to see your name recorded in our favor, on behalf of my fellow-workmen of the cocoa mats and matting industry.

Most respectfully, yours,

D. J. CURNEN,
Ex-President Mat Workers' Protective Association,
319 Plymouth Street, Brooklyn.

Hon. HENRY C. LODGE.

Mr. President, that is the case as stated by the manufacturers and by the workmen employed in this industry. They are obliged to face this cooly competition. If this duty goes into effect a few firms here will export American machinery to India, and will there make these cocoa mats and matting at the prices of Indian labor, which is anywhere from 6 to 14 cents a day; and with that they will take complete control of this market; there will be no domestic competition and no check upon them; there will be no advantage, in the long run, to the consumer, but these men will be cut out of their industry; their employment will be taken from them.

If all industries had been treated alike in this bill, I should not think of making this argument in behalf of the cocoa mat and matting makers, because I am only too well aware that a small number of Northern workingmen engaged in an industry of this kind have no claim for regard in this bill. But when I see some of the protection that is given to other industries in the bill, I can not imagine why these men should not have the same chance. I yesterday referred briefly to the matter of the duty on matches. It is not a large industry. It is in a close trust. I think there is a firm in Maine, one in Massachusetts, one in Brooklyn, one in Detroit.

The duties in the McKinley act were supposed to be high, amply protective duties, and yet I find from this circular which is supplied to us by an importer—and importers are generally considered by the Democratic party as the best authorities on American industries—that the duties on matches have been raised with a single exception over all the McKinley rates. I find that the large Tiger match, as it is called, has the same duty; the small Tiger match is slightly decreased; the large safety match has an increase of 100 per cent over the McKinley act; the wax matches in their different grades range from 300 to 500 per cent increase over the McKinley rates. I will print this circular with my remarks to illustrate it more in detail.

MATCHES IN THE WILSON BILL.

It being generally understood that the new tariff bill had been framed with a view of reducing the duties which are now being enforced under the McKinley tariff, we beg most respectfully to submit to your honorable committee that under Schedule N 324 of the Wilson bill, or of the bill now under consideration in the Senate, if passed in its present form, matches (excepting the lowest grades, which remain taxed about the same) would be subjected to an increase of duty ranging from 100 per cent to 500 per cent as compared to present duties.

The effect would be that only the very cheapest and commonest kind of matches could in future be imported, which would be disastrous to our interests, for it would prevent us altogether from importing the higher grade wax matches, which we have introduced into this country at considerable expense and trouble, and which are not manufactured here to any extent.

As we have every reason to believe that the proposed increase in the duty on matches was quite unintentional and caused by the change from the specific to ad valorem system, we take the liberty of placing before you the relative duties on such lines as we are in the habit of importing most extensively, which will show that while there is no reduction made under the new tariff, in nearly all cases the duties have been raised, in some instances over 300 per cent over and above the rate chargeable under the McKinley bill.

Begging your honorable committee to give this matter your favorable consideration, we are,

Yours very truly,

S. HOFFNUNG & CO.,
Agents for Messrs. Bryant & May, Limited, London, England.

Comparative statement of duties on the most popular styles of Messrs. Bryant & May's matches.

Bryant & May's—	Factory cost.	McKinley duty.	Proposed duty.
Large Tiger matches	$2.75	$0.54	$0.55	Duty same.
Small Tiger matches	.44	.10	.08	Slightly decreased.
Large safety matches	1.00	.10	.20	Increase 100 per cent.
Wax matches:
1,000	17.00	1.22	3.40	Increase nearly 300 per ct.
500	9.00	.52	1.80	Increase over 300 per cent.
"Sportsman"	2.62	.10	.52	Increase over 500 per cent.
Advertising	1.75	.10	.38	Increase over 300 per cent.
Lips	1.30	.10	.26	Increase over 250 per cent.
Flamers	1.68	.10	.33	Increase over 300 per cent.
Tiny	.60	.10	.12	Increase 20 per cent.

MATCHES IN THE WILSON BILL.

We find that schedule N 324 in the proposed new tariff bill reads as follows: "Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, 20 per cent ad valorem," which may have been intended as a reduction of the McKinley tariff, but which we desire to point out will have just the opposite effect. Schedule N in the McKinley bill reads as follows: "Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, per gross of 144 boxes, containing not more than 100 matches per box, per gross 10 cents; when imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each, per thousand matches 1 cent."

To illustrate, we will therefore first consider matches packed in boxes containing less than 100 matches, and afterward those packed in boxes containing more than 100 matches. The above indicated change cause a reduction only on such goods which cost at the factory in a foreign country 50 cents per gross boxes or less, if such matches are packed in boxes containing less than 100 matches per box, as 20 per cent of 50 cents is 10 cents, so that in this case the proposed ad valorem and the now levied specific duty would be the same.

On all matches, packed in boxes containing not more than 100 matches per box, costing more than 50 cents in a foreign country, the new ad valorem duty of 20 per cent will be higher than the old specific duty of 10 cents per gross. To illustrate this, we beg to mention that we import very largely a very superior wood safety match packed in boxes containing less than 100 matches, the average number of matches in a box being 73, which costs at the factory 1s. or $1, on which the duty to-day is 10 cents. The proposed new law would increase this duty to 20 cents, or 100 per cent, and would seriously interfere with, if not entirely stop, the importation of this line.

It is, however, the high-class article of wax matches which would be most affected by the proposed change in the tariff, as they are considerably better and more expensive than the wood matches. We ourselves import about twenty different styles of wax matches, nearly all of which are packed in boxes containing less than 100 matches, as we find that matches are transported more safely if only a comparatively small number is packed in a box; most of our styles are packed, some in wood, some in tin boxes, containing from 30 to 50 wax matches per box. Of all these wax matches packed as just described, there is not one single style which costs at the factory in England less than 2s. 6d.—60 cents—per gross boxes, and they run as high as 14s., or about $3.50 per gross boxes.

These two prices are at present about the lowest and highest market values at the factory in England for the high-class grade of wax matches packed in boxes containing not more than 100 matches per box which we import; and all these goods now pay duty 10 cents per gross boxes. You will see that a change to 20 per cent ad valorem would mean an increase of the duty to 12 cents on the cheapest lines, and to 70 cents per gross on the highest-priced goods, where to-day the duty is only 10 cents per gross boxes on all the lines. If this proposed 20 per cent ad valorem duty on the goods above described should become a law it would stop their importation altogether and entirely ruin our trade and business, for the building up of which we have spent much time and large sums of money. We have no doubt that it is not and has not been the intention of the framers of the tariff bill to increase duties out of all proportion and to stop importation, as we understand the general purpose and intent of the bill to be to reduce duties wherever possible.

We now come to consider the matches described in the McKinley bill, Schedule N, as follows: "Imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each;" that is, matches packed in boxes each containing over 100 matches. The wood matches imported containing more than 100 matches in a box are usually packed in boxes containing about 380 to 400 matches, and are known in the trade as "Nominal 500's." There are also imported boxes containing about 200 and 300 matches, though not to a very large extent. The duty on the so-called "Nominal 500's" under the present law is between 50 and 60 cents per gross boxes (1 cent per thousand matches). The value of these matches at the factory is about $2.50 to $2.75 per gross boxes, so that the proposed duty of 20 per cent ad valorem on these goods would be between 50 and 60 cents, or about the same as the present specific duty.

In wax matches, however, which are largely imported in boxes containing about 350, as well as in boxes containing about 850 matches (known to the trade as nominal 500's and nominal 1,000's respectively), the difference between the present specific duty and the proposed ad valorem duty is enormous. Under the present tariff the two kinds mentioned pay a duty of about 53 cents and $1.22 respectively. The value of the nominal 500's wax matches at the factory in England is from $8 to $9 per gross. The duty on these under the proposed law would be $1.60 to $1.80, or an increase of over 300 per cent in duty. The value of the nominal 1,000's wax matches at the factory in England is from $15.50 to $17 per gross, and the duty on these under the proposed law would be $3.10 to $3.40, or an equally large increase, viz, 300 per cent.

It is evident from these figures that such an enormous increase in the duty would absolutely do away with the importation and consumption of wax matches, for which after years of labor and considerable outlay we have succeeded in creating a demand; we may also mention that these goods are not manufactured in this country to any great extent.

We trust that the committee on the new tariff bill may in justice to existing interests such as ours, see fit to fix the duties on wood and wax matches on a basis at least as favorable as those at present in force (under the McKinley tariff), which puts a duty of 10 cents per gross boxes on matches packed in boxes containing less than 100, and of 1 cent per thousand on matches packed in boxes containing more than 100 in a box.

S. HOFFNUNG & COMPANY,
Sole agents for the United States and Canada for Messrs. Bryant & May, Limited, London.

The point I wish to make is that here is this increase given on the production of an article of such common consumption as matches. I am not prepared, as a protectionist, to question that it is necessary. I have no desire to break down or injure the match industry in this country, but I do say that the distinction to be drawn between the men who make matches and the men who make cocoa mats or clay pipes is to me wholly indefensible.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that there are numerous articles in the bill now before the Senate whereon the duties have been increased from those in the McKinley act?

Mr. LODGE. I took the figures from the circular of S. Hoffnung & Co., agents for Messrs. Bryant & May, limited, of London, England, which I suppose was sent to every Senator. They are the great match manufacturers of England. They gave a statement of the duties imposed. The table is on the second page, and they give the duties in cents, showing the actual rise by the 20 per cent ad valorem imposed by the pending bill. They involve apparently a very large increase in the case of wax matches, although they keep the same rates as the McKinley rates on wooden matches with one single exception, where there is a slight decrease.

Mr. President, the point I make is not that these rates are excessive. I dare say that the committee, in their further inquiry, have found that it is necessary to give just that protection on matches in order to properly protect the persons engaged in the industry and to guard them against a competition which they can not stand. The nature of that competition was pointed out yesterday by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I have no question of the exactness of his figures. I do not quarrel with any proper protective rates that the committee put on, but I do say that it is absolutely unfair to give this protection to a small number of match companies which have their factories in Maine, Massachusetts, Delaware, and Michigan, and their workingmen, and then absolutely destroy the industry of the matmakers and makers of cocoa mats and matting by throwing this market open to the control of the importers of cooly-made goods.

The same injustice exists in the matter of clay pipes, where the result could not be any increase to the consumer and where our industry is destroyed by the rates imposed in the present bill. If it is just to give to the match-makers the protection which the bill affords, then it is simple justice to give the same protection to all the other small industries. This picking out of one industry here and there and giving it all it desires and cutting down on all sides of it industries equally deserving, is something which can find no defense either in the doctrine of free trade or in the doctrine of protection.

I ask leave to modify my amendment by making the rates 9 and 6 instead of 12 and 8. I have reduced them to the very lowest line under which the manufacturers and workingmen say it is even possible for them to exist, and in that form I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified as suggested.

Mr. VEST obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question before the Senator from Missouri proceeds?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Did I understand the Senator from Massachusetts in his statement to claim that putting Chinese matting on the dutiable list would in any way interfere with the manufacture of the persons whom he represents?

Mr. LODGE. These matting-makers state that the Chinese matting, which it is proposed to take from the free list and put on the dutiable list, is not made in this country at all. I do not know whether they are correct in that statement. It does not interfere with them or their product in the least. It is only the cocoa mats and matting with which they are concerned. They now have a specific rate on those articles.

Mr. PLATT. They would have no objection, then, to placing the Chinese matting on the dutiable list?

Mr. LODGE. They do not care whether it is on the dutiable list or the free list. It does not affect their industry.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a few moments further?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I do not like to talk about anything in this connection as to which I am not thoroughly informed; but a manufacturer in Connecticut, a Democratic friend of mine, undertook the manufacture of a matting in this country to come in competition with the Chinese matting, using certain American weeds or grasses not now utilized, and there being no duty upon it, he found it was impossible for him to succeed. He always thought that with a moderate duty on Chinese matting he could succeed and produce from American materials a matting which would serve the same purpose as Chinese matting.

It is, perhaps, some six months ago that he told me he had to abandon his business because he found that he could not compete with Chinese matting, which came in free, but he felt that if there were a reasonable duty upon it he could compete with it and produce as good matting as the Chinese matting. I simply make this statement, not understanding very much about the matting business. The instance I have stated, however, is a matter which is within my personal observation.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I stated yesterday on behalf of the committee that we were entirely willing that Chinese matting should go back to the free list. It is a very cheap article and is used largely now in this country. We saw no reason, under the arguments made by the Senator from Rhode Island and others, why it should not go back to the free list, and we adhere to that opinion.

Now, I wish to say a few words in regard to what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] so persistently and energetically advanced to-day. The McKinley act put 71 per cent duty upon cocoa matting, which for twenty years before that time had borne a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem. We put 20 per cent on cocoa matting and 20 per cent upon matches.

All this agitation about the increase of the duties upon matches above the rates in the McKinley act comes from the fact that under the ad valorem of 20 per cent upon the higher-priced matches known as wax matches, and only used by the rich and luxurious classes, the ad valorem is higher than the specific under the McKinley act. Upon the common matches, which are used by the large body of the people, there is no advance in duties at all. It would be preferable, perhaps, if the duty were smaller, but the allegation (and that is the intent of all these statements) that the duties upon ordinary matches which go so generally into consumption have been put up, is not true.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from Missouri class the wooden safety match as an ordinary match in common use? The Senator was speaking of common matches as distinguished from wax matches.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course these matches are very cheap and go into ordinary use. Everybody's experience will bear out the suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. On the wax match the duty has been doubled.

Mr. VEST. One rarely sees these wax matches. They are used by ladies, possibly, in their boudoirs, or by some dude in his dressing room.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, Mr. President, they are used by a poor fisherman like me.

Mr. VEST. I might make an issue with the Senator on that point. I should not say he is a poor fisherman, because I know he is a good one. But I merely mean to say, without making any strict issue with the statement of the Senator from Maine, that we do not use these wax matches. In the West one does not see them. The safety matches are generally used, and the common matches, which are now sold generally at 1 or 2 cents a box, and can be found anywhere, in any country store. Those are the matches, in which our people are interested. We have not advanced the duty upon them. We have attempted to make the duty equal by putting 20 per cent upon both articles.

But, Mr. President, I do not want to take time. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, however, to a communication which is found on page 1191 of the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. The communication is from the largest cocoa-matting manufacturers in the United States, Danagh & Smail. They state that they are the largest manufacturers; that they employ over two hundred hands; that the duty ought to be 20 per cent; that there is no reason for advancing it; that the duty under the McKinley act is excessive and monstrous; and they asked the committees of the two Houses to put this article at 20 per cent ad valorem, and we complied with their wishes.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. VEST. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to say about Mr. Small, that the Senator from Missouri evidently did not listen to the statements which I read. They controvert that precise petition. It is against that that these arguments are directed. They say that Mr. Small employs only one hundred men, and only for a portion of the time; that he is an importer of matting, and that the manufacturing part of his business is small. The other manufacturers and workingmen protest against it as being in his interest as an importer to bring in these goods. They protest against it on the ground that he has petitioned for it.

Mr. VEST. I only know that Danagh & Small are the largest manufacturers of these goods in this country. My experience leads me to adhere strictly to the rule that when manufacturers ask for a reduction of duty which is against their ordinary interest, it should receive the largest weight with the framers of a tariff bill who believe that the burdens should be lessened upon the consumers as far as can be done.

The Senator from Massachusetts says these statements are not true, and he quotes other manufacturers. These are reputable people. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] knows them. I have some private letters from them addressed to their Senators in which they combat the position of the Senator from Massachusetts, and reiterate the statement that 20 per cent is enough. They do not ask for any more. They had 20 per cent for twenty years prior to 1890, and they say that since the McKinley act went into effect their business has fallen off. They would rather have a duty of 20 per cent, and I am entirely willing to give it to them, for I think it is in the direction in which legislation ought to go.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt that the business of the firm referred to has fallen off. They bring over here from India a matting partially made, nearly completed, and have it completed here. Their principal business is that of importers. Of course these patriots want the duty reduced.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Massachusetts say this statement is false?

The undersigned, the largest manufacturers——

Mr. LODGE. I say it is contradicted by all the other manufacturers and by all the workingmen employed, who took up this very point and discussed it.

Mr. VEST. They say they employ two hundred hands.

Mr. LODGE. Those persons say this proposed change is in the direct interest of this large firm and it takes from them their employment.

Mr. VEST. It is impossible that they could be anything but the worst sort of falsifiers if they are simply importers. They employ two hundred hands.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say they were simply importers. I said they brought these things in from India partially completed and complete them here, which gives very limited work to only about half the number of workingmen they claim to employ. The workingmen state that the employment is for only three or four days in a week on the average. Of course, it is to the interest of this firm to get their imported matting in as cheaply as they possibly can.

Now, on the matter of matches I do not want to be thought to have misstated the rates. On the large Tiger match, as it is called, which is a wooden match in common use, the duty under the McKinley act is 54 cents a gross; the proposed duty is 55 cents a gross. On the small Tiger match, also in common use, a wooden match, the McKinley duty is 10 cents, the proposed duty is 8 cents. That is the only duty in which there is a reduction. It is a reduction from 10 cents to 8 cents. On the large safety match, which is a match in common use, and also a wooden match, the duty is 10 cents under the McKinley act and 20 cents under the proposed law.

All the wax matches, as the Senator from Missouri admits, are enormously increased in their rates. Those are matches which are very largely used elsewhere, and which are coming here I have no doubt.

As I have said, and I reiterate it, I did not bring this matter in to say that the matchmakers were unduly protected, but to show that the discrimination in favor of one industry and against another, especially in favor of an industry where there is a close trust and against industries where there is none, is very unfair.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Massachusetts mean to be understood as saying that the duty on the common lucifer match is too high in this bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do not. I have not questioned these rates at all. I simply say that to give an ample and an increased rate on matches, and then deny it to the maker of clay pipes and the maker of cocoa matting, is a gross injustice. The rate ought to be the same on the other articles; that is all.

Mr. FRYE. I tried very hard yesterday to get the duty increased on the common lucifer match, and failed as a matter of course. I find on looking at the RECORD this morning that I was made to say (and very likely I may have said it; I presume I did) that the complaint of my correspondent was against the Senate committee's reduction to 10 per cent. It was not. It was against the original House bill at 20 per cent ad valorem, declaring that that was entirely too low, and that they could not manufacture matches under it. The letter which I read was dated March 11, and therefore it must have referred to the House rate of 20 per cent rather than to the Senate committee's 10 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment may be read as I have modified it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 356 and insert—

Matting made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 9 cents per square yard; mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 6 cents per square foot.

Mr. LODGE. I call for a division on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VEST and Mr. JONES. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I will transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], so that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and myself can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], who has been unavoidably called away from the Senate. If he should not come in during the day I will let this announcement stand for the day. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH] has been called from the Chamber for to-day and is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. GORDON. By an arrangement with the junior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] and vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to transfer my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], so that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] and myself can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already called the attention of the Senators in charge of the bill to the discrepancy between paragraphs 21 and 45, and I should like to have that corrected now. Paragraph 21 imposes a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem on ink and ink powders, while paragraph 48, which is the general clause, provides for a duty on paints, colors, and pigments from which ink and ink powders are made of 25 per cent ad valorem. Either the 25 per cent in paragraph 48 ought to be reduced to 20 per cent or the 20 per cent in paragraph 21 should be increased to 25 per cent. I called the attention of the Senators having charge of the bill to the matter and I understand they are willing to make the correction. They have not stated which they would prefer.

Mr. VEST. I suppose that the duties upon paints and colors ought to be reduced to 20 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly the articles from which ink is made ought not to be higher than the duty on the article itself. I am assured by a very prominent firm in Cincinnati that this would be very injurious to the manufacturers of ink and ink powders, but they are perfectly willing to pay the same duty for the pigments they use in their work as the duty imposed upon the product they manufacture. If that is the desire of the Senator from Missouri, I move that in paragraph 48 the duty be reduced to 20 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Yes, strike out the word "five," after "twenty," in line 20, page 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 20, in paragraph 48, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" as as to read, "20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the reduction on pigments, but we do not want to reduce the duty on all other paints and colors to 20 per cent.

Mr. VEST. That must either be done or else the other duty must be raised. We do not want to raise the duty.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that both clauses produce considerable revenue, and that it would be better to raise the duty, in paragraph 21, to 25 per cent. That would come up to the average rate on all the other articles in that schedule.

Mr. VEST. If the duty in paragraph 21, on page 4, should be raised it would read:

Ink and ink powders, printers' ink, and all other inks not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would be a handsome duty.

Mr. VEST. We do not want to make that increase. We think that duty is high enough already.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the present duty on both items is 30 per cent, and if it is reduced it ought to be reduced either to 25 or 20. I think it would be better for revenue purposes to make it 25. It is a duty that affords revenue on this article now.

Mr. VEST. I sugggest to the Senator from Ohio to let his first suggestion obtain.

Mr. ALDRICH. We shall have to resist that very strenuously, because it would not only reduce the duty on pigments that go into the manufacture of ink, but it would make a reduction on all paints and colors. It is the basket clause of the paint and color schedule.

Mr. VEST. I understand that. We can either do that or make a separate paragraph and say:

Upon all pigments used in the manufacture of ink or ink powders, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to that proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Then put it in paragraph 21.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing to accept that. The only point is that I am informed the manufacturers of printers' ink import certain oils that are not produced in this country. I do not know what the nature of them is. It extends to oil, but the pigments are the principal thing they use in the manufacture of ink.

Mr. ALDRICH. The suggestion of the Senator from Iowa I think would be better, to add to paragraph 21:

Pigments used in the preparation of ink and ink powders, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 21 would then read:

Ink and ink powders, printers' ink, and all other ink not specially provided for in this act, and pigments used in the preparation of ink and ink powders, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the amendment in that form.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it would be better, but it would be very difficult for the customs officers to say what pigment was introduced for that purpose. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to put up the rate in paragraph 21 to 25 per cent now, and he will have it in power at any time to correct the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. That is better, because then it will leave paragraph 21 open to adjustment afterwards. As paragraph 21 is now, it could not be changed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will agree to a duty of 25 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Of course it will have to be settled hereafter. I will agree to 25 per cent in paragraph 21. We can adjust it either in the Senate or in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, paragraph 21 is considered as amended by the insertion of the word "five" after "twenty" in line 20. The amendment to paragraph 48 is withdrawn, the Chair understands.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. VEST. It is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. As we are making corrections, I ask the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to paragraph 190, on page 43. I understand the committee have made a further examination of the proviso in paragraph 190. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to modify that paragraph by striking out "but each of the above products," etc., beginning in line 15, down to and including the words "United States," in line 18.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee will agree to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 190, line 15, after the word "ad valorem" strike out—but each of the above products shall be admitted free of duty from any country which imposes no import duty on the like products when exported from the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask the Senator from Arkansas to turn to page 45, and on line 4, perhaps after paragraph 198, to insert as a new paragraph, 198½:

Eggs, 3 cents per dozen.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We will agree to that amendment also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as a new paragraph on page 45, before paragraph 199:

198½. Eggs, 3 cents per dozen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday, at my request, paragraph 308, page 77, was passed over, and I ask that it be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

308. Parchment papers, surface-coated papers, and manufactures thereof, cardboards, lithographic prints from either stone or zinc, bound or unbound (except illustrations when forming a part of a periodical, newspaper, or in printed books accompanying the same), and all articles produced either in whole or in part by lithographic process, and photograph, autograph, and scrap albums, wholly or partially manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "thirty;" so as to read, "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the entire paragraph and insert what follows in lines 6, 7, 8, and 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 308 and insert:

Parchment papers, and surface-coated papers, and manufactures thereof, cardboards, and photograph, autograph, and scrap albums, wholly or partially manufactured, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I also move to add what I send to the desk, both provisions to constitute paragraph 308.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The residue of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Lithographic prints from either stone or zinc, bound or unbound (except cigar labels and bands lettered or blank, music, and illustrations when forming a part of a periodical or newspaper and accompanying the same, or if bound in or forming part of printed books), on paper or other material not exceeding eight-thousandths of an inch in thickness, 20 cents per pound; on paper or other material exceeding eight-thousandths of an inch and not exceeding twenty-thousandths of an inch in thickness, and exceeding 35 square inches cutting size in dimensions, 8 cents per pound; prints exceeding eight-thousandths of an inch and not exceeding twenty-thousandths of an inch in thickness, and not exceeding 35 square inches cutting size in dimensions, 5 cents per pound; lithographic prints from either stone or zinc on cardboard or other material exceeding twenty-thousandths of an inch in thickness, 6 cents per pound; lithographic cigar labels and bands, lettered or blank, printed from either stone or zinc, if printed in less than ten colors, but not including bronze or metal leaf printing, 20 cents per pound; if printed in ten or more colors, or in bronze printing, but not including metal leaf printing, 30 cents per pound; if printed in whole or in part in metal leaf, 40 cents per pound.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the paragraph relating to lithographic prints is entirely satisfactory to me, and I believe it has been agreed upon by the parties in interest. It is especially satisfactory for the reason that it recognizes the principle of specific duties. The paragraph relating to parchment and surface-coated papers I should like very much to have amended, so as have specific rates substituted for ad valorem, as has been done in reference to lithographic prints. With that end in view, I move to strike out the words "thirty per cent," at the close of that paragraph, and insert the words "five cents per pound." I desire to be heard briefly on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, paragraph 308, it is proposed to strike out "30 per cent ad valorem" and insert "5 cents per pound."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have here a memorial of the manufacturers in this country of parchment and surface-coated paper, which I desire to put in the RECORD. The first part of it is an argument in favor of dividing the schedule. As the committee has divided the schedule, making lithographic prints a separate item, I shall omit reading that part of the memorial, but will have it inserted as a part of my remarks.

The memorial is as follows:

To the CHAIRMAN OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: We, the undersigned, manufacturers of surface-coated papers and cardboards, representing an invested capital of $5,000,000 and giving employment to 3,000 American workmen at fair and commensurate wages, respectfully urge your honorable body to change paragraph 308, Schedule M, of the tariff bill, recently passed by the lower House of Congress, as follows:

"Parchment papers, surface-coated papers, and manufacture thereof, cardboard, 5 cents per pound"— thereby separating the above manufactured goods from lithographic prints, etc., as our manufactures do not stand in any relation to these works of art, though they may be executed on paper, which, however, represents only a minimal part of the value of these art productions.

We further desire this separation on the grounds that surface-coated papers and cardboards are of sufficient importance to be treated separately in the tariff.

The tariff bill, just passed by the House, proposes to reduce the duty on our products from 35 per cent ad valorem to 25 per cent ad valorem, a reduction of almost 30 per cent, which we consider extremely unjust and inequitable, inasmuch as this same tariff does not afford us an equal relief on our raw materials. This is quite evident if your honorable body will kindly refer to—

Schedule A, relating to chemicals, oils, and paints.

Paragraph 17, glue, leaves the present duty of 25 per cent ad valorem at the same rate.

Paragraph 36, blues, such as Berlin, Prussian, and Chinese blue, etc., the present rate of duty of 6 cents per pound is maintained at the same rate.

Paragarph 46, all other paints and colors and pigments, etc., the present duty of 25 per cent ad valorem is also left undisturbed.

It appears, therefore, that while under the new tariff our product is to be reduced almost 30 per cent, the main raw materials are left at the old high rates, thus not affording the American manufacturers any relief whatsoever.

It is further a well-known fact that under the present rate of duty on surface-coated papers and cardboards at 35 per cent, no protection is afforded to the American manufacturer, as may be seen from the records, which will show that the importations of surface-coated papers have steadily increased from year to year, until the present time. We find that ordinary surface-coated papers are brought to this market and are here sold with a fair profit to the importer at less than they cost to produce in the United States. The main reason for this state of affairs is to be looked for in the difference of wages paid to our workmen as compared with those paid in Europe.

The following is a schedule of wages paid:

	In United States.	In Europe.
Ordinary workmen, per week	$9.00	$2.50
Machine tenders, per week	14.00	4.42
Foreman, per week	21.00	7.20

The difference in wages paid here and in Europe is almost four times greater.

We request your honorable body further to change the proposed ad valorem duty to a specific one, as it is well known that manufacturers in Europe have been and still are sending their product to this market at less than their regular prices. While the German and Belgian manufacturers have formed a trust to sell surface-coated papers at 8 marks, or 9.60 francs, in England, these same manufacturers, or this trust, send the very same goods to this market at 5.85 marks per ream. It is impossible for the custom-house examiner to know of such facts, and furthermore it is impossible for him to determine the actual value of these foreign products.

We could produce evidence that very similar-looking papers vary quite considerably in price, and that it is impossible to determine the actual value of these papers unless they are submitted to an expert. It is, however, a well-known fact that unscrupulous importers have taken advantage of these difficulties and have fraudulently undervalued their importations.

For this reason, we would respectfully urge your committee to change the duty on our products to a specific duty of 5 cents per pound.

Schedule M, paragraph 306, would then read:

"Parchment papers, surface-coated papers, and manufactures thereof, card boards, 5 cents per pound.

"Lithographic prints," etc., etc.

We hope we have been able to prove to your committee—

First, that in the new tariff, as passed by the House, surface-coated papers have been unjustly discriminated against.

Secondly, that an ad valorem duty does not afford sufficient protection to the United States against fraud.

We therefore hope that you may consider our proposition favorably, but if it appears impracticable to make such a change at present, we would request that the duty on surface-coated papers be left at the present rate of 35 per cent ad valorem, as this is hardly sufficient to cover the difference in labor between the United States and Europe.

These memorialists represent, as I understand, almost the entire manufacturing interests in this line in the United States. I think these gentlemen have made a good argument in favor of a specific duty in preference to an ad valorem duty, and an inquiry made satisfies me that 5 cents per pound is not an excessive rate. I hope that the amendment may be adopted. I will say that, if it is not adopted, I shall then move an amendment restoring the rate of duty as it is in the existing law.

Mr. PEFFER. I beg to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire how much his amendment proposes to increase or diminish the rate of duty provided in the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not been able to determine that offhand. I shall make a little investigation, and perhaps shall be able to answer the inquiry in a few moments.

Mr. PEFFER. I should say, in addition, that my preference is always for specific duties, but I do not wish to increase any of the rates above those provided for in the bill, except upon articles of luxury. Of course, if the Senator's amendment does not increase the rate provided in the bill I have no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. So far as I know, no computation has been made on that point, and I am unable to answer the Senator's question; but I think the rate of 5 cents per pound will be practically the same as proposed by the bill, the chief advantage being that it is specific.

Mr. ALDRICH. Next to the correct application of the principles of equity and consistency to its different paragraphs, I think simplicity is the most desirable element to be sought in the enactment of a tariff. The amendment which is proposed by the committee in regard to photographic and lithographic prints is about as wide a departure from simplicity as it is possible to imagine. I should be very glad to know in what way this schedule is to be enforced, and I should be glad to have some sort of explanation as to what change it proposes in the existing law, and what the effect of these various rates will be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move to strike out the word "thirty," and insert "thirty-five;" so that it will read "35 per cent ad valorem;" and I desire to be heard a moment on that.

I find that under a duty of 35 per cent, which is the duty in the existing law, last year there were imported into this country of the classes of papers mentioned in this paragraph $1,855,980 worth, almost $2,000,000. These papers came in from Germany and other countries in competition with American manufacturers under a rate of duty of 35 per cent ad valorem. It does seem to me, in view of that fact, that the proposed cut of 5 per cent from the existing rate will be a very severe blow to the manufacturers of those classes of papers in the United States, and I can not myself understand why it should be made.

The people of New Hampshire have some interest in the manufacture of these papers, as have the people of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, New York, and other of the Northern States. I do not know that I have any grounds upon which to base the hope that the Democratic side will make this concession; but, in the interest of American labor, as well as in the interest of revenue, it seems to me we ought not to disturb the existing law. Perhaps I am incorrect in saying in the interests of revenue, because, if the rate is reduced, I apprehend the importations will be increased to such an enormous extent that possibly we shall get more revenue than we now get, but if we get it, we get it at the expense of the manufacturers and workmen of the United States. I hope the slight concession I ask on this item will be granted, and that the old rate of duty may be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. By consent of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], who is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], we will transfer pairs, and therefore I vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to state for the day that the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is absent from the Senate because of illness. He stands paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. CAMDEN. I again announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Morrill,	Shoup,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the committee amendment be stated.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was about to ask whether the committee amendment on this subject had been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment as printed in the bill has not been considered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is by way of substitute, to strike out the paragraph and insert:

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it the paragraph which follows, beginning with parchment papers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, but the second paragraph is different from that as printed on page 78, the Chair will inform the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask that that may be read, for the purpose of saying something upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph as proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment as proposed by Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that that amendment as now offered has been printed hitherto. It is not the amendment printed on page 78 of the bill, is it?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The first paragraph of the proposed amendment, I will say to the Senator, is as printed in the bill on page 78. The subsequent part relating to lithographs has not yet been printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rose to congratulate the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] upon the rapid progress which his committee is making in the application of the principle of protection to American industries. This clause is much more carefully and scientifically constructed than the provisions of the present law. The present law imposes an ad valorem duty upon all these articles of 35 per cent. Ad valorem duties are vicious; ad valorem duties tend to fraud. Discriminating specific duties are of the very essence of a wise system of protection. The system of specific duties is complicated; it is difficult; but all things in human life which are worth anything are difficult. So the principles of protection, the great American principles, the great Republican principles of protection can not be applied to the thousands of complicated industries of the United States without labor, without effort, without scientific study, and without a careful application of those principles.

That has not been done with reference to lithographic prints hitherto. It was not done under the McKinley act; but the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] have thrown their minds upon this subject, so that they have carefully classified all the various lithographic prints—class 1, class 2, class 3, class 4—and have given specific rates to these various classes of lithographic work, and they have done it faithfully, patiently, assiduously, and scientifically, and when this bill becomes a law, if it ever does become a law, there will be one species of industry in this country where, thanks to the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the provisions relating to it have been correctly, elaborately, and scientifically constructed upon the true principle of protection——

Mr. VEST I am afraid there is something wrong about this amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. And not upon ad valorem duties, which lead to frauds, but specific duties. I congratulate the Senators upon the progress they are making. I shall now listen to the Senator from Missouri with pleasure.

Mr. VEST. I say I have great doubt about this paragraph now, after what the Senator from New Hampshire has said about it, and after the laudation by the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I fear I may cause the Senator from Missouri to retract. I have succeeded in that way two or three times, and I have been very successful in developing the principle of give and take, offer and back out, upon which the two Senators have constructed this bill; but, fortified as they are on the one side by the Senator from New Jersey, and on the other side by the Senator from New York, I know they will not back out to-day.

They may back out in the committee of conference, they will not back out here in the Senate. They will not back out under fire, Mr. President, any more than they did when it was demonstrated to them that by postponing the duty on sugar until January 1, 1895, they were giving $35,000,000 as a donation to the sugar trust. They then said: "It will not do to back out under fire; we can withdraw these little amendments if anybody criticises them and asks to have a specific duty applied in some other direction, when it is applied in a direction which meets with favor from the committee; but it will not do to back out here in the Senate now under the charge that the sugar trust is to have $35,000,000 by postponing the sugar duty until the 1st day of January, 1895; we will take care of that in conference."

I rose to congratulate the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas. I felt in an amiable frame of mind toward them, and I should have continued so, but for the fact that the Senator from Missouri had interrupted me to make his usual threat of withdrawing the paragraph which is so in accordance with the principles of protection that my heart swelled within me and led me to thank the Senator for the good work that at that particular time he was doing in accord with the principles of protection. That is what I rose to do, and also to say that I can not understand why in the world the two Senators will not apply that same principle to parchment paper.

Why will they not apply it to parchment paper and surface-coated paper and manufactures thereof, and photographic and autographic and scrap albums as well as apply it to lithographic prints? They have improved upon the McKinley act, as I say, in reference to lithographic prints; and lithographic prints, which are pictures, works of art, they propose to let in by a specific pound rate. Parchment papers, surface-coated papers, and photographic papers are to continue to come in under this inferior, this injurious, this pernicious method of an ad valorem system of duty.

Mr. President, in all sincerity and with much love and affection for those two Senators, I ask them why they can not apply this principle of specific duties, carefully discriminated, and scientifically applied to lithographic prints also, so as to protect American parchment papers made by American labor?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the principal charge made against the framers of the act of 1890 was that in the preparation of that act manufacturers were permitted to write the schedules and to fix the rate of duties. That charge was entirely without foundation, but in the particular item now under consideration, I am afraid, if the exact truth were known, it would appear that the manufacturers have prepared this new paragraph.

I can not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] from his inner consciousness had evolved a scheme providing a difference in rates between papers eight-thousandths of an inch in thickness and twenty-thousandths of an inch in thickness. I think the manufacturers, the lithographers of the United States, must have prepared this schedule. In fact, as I understand, it is in print as a schedule prepared by the tariff committee of the National Lithographers' Association.

I do not object to that. I believe that a Committee of Congress, having these matters in charge, should consult with the people who know most about the business connected with the articles upon which the rates are to be fixed, and I am very glad that the committee have adopted this schedule of the Lithographers' Association. I have no doubt it is a correct one, but I suggest to these Senators that, if this principle was applied all through the bill, we should have a tariff bill of 10,000 pages at least, and one which would require at least 10,000 appraisers to enforce it.

If these minute subdivisions of rates were to be applied to all the thousands and tens of thousands of articles covered by this tariff bill, we should never get through with its consideration, and we should have great difficulty in collecting duties under it.

I feel like joining with the Senator from New Hampshire in congratulating the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas upon the progress which they are making in adopting adequate specific rates in these various paragraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask to go back to paragraph 314, on page 79, in order that I may move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, paragraph 314, line 12, after the word "thirty," it is proposed to insert "five;" and at the end of the paragraph to add "bristles, sorted, bunched, or prepared in any manner, 7½ per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

314. Hair pencils, brushes and feather dusters, 35 per cent ad valorem; brooms, 20 per cent ad valorem; bristles, sorted, bunched, or prepared in any manner, 7½ per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. For convenience, I suggest to the Senator that he make the rate 8 per cent ad valorem, which is only a difference of one-half per cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Seven and one-half per cent is a reduction of 25 per cent on the present rate.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but it will be more convenient in computation to make it 8 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There will be no difficulty about Democratic custom-house officers making that computation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa propose an amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I shall not interfere with the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 85, paragraph 347, there was an error made, which I now ask to correct; and for that purpose I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 347, line 20, before the word "inches," it is proposed to strike out "fourteen" and insert "seventeen;" in line 21, after the word "over," it is proposed to strike out "fourteen and not over;" and in line 23, after the word "pairs," to strike out "over 17 inches in length, $3.75 per dozen pairs."

Mr. ALLISON. It is proposed to make two classifications instead of three, as I understand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the paragraph read as it will read after being amended as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the paragraph as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

347. Ladies' or children's, of sheep origin, with exterior grain surface removed, by whatever name known, not over 17 inches in length, $1.75 per dozen pairs; over 17 inches in length, $2.75 per dozen pairs; men's, of sheep origin, with exterior surface removed, by whatever name known, $4 per dozen pairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was passed over, when I was not in the Chamber, early in the consideration of this bill, the article of sponges, which is proposed to be reduced by this bill from 20 per cent ad valorem to 10 per cent ad valorem. This is a subject which caused much tribulation in 1890, when the rate was fixed at 20 per cent.

I am very much opposed to the reduction, I will state to the Senator from Arkansas; and I should like to move to restore the 20 per cent rate, to make a few remarks, and to have a vote upon the amendment at such time as may be convenient to the Senator; but I desire to do so when the Senators from Florida are both in the Chamber, for I count upon their valuable and necessary assistance to protect the sponge industry, which is an important industry in Florida. I shall accommodate myself to the wishes of the Senator from Arkansas in taking up this subject; but I certainly want, in some way, to secure the attendance in the Chamber, when it is being considered, of the Senators from Florida.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to taking the paragraph up whenever the Senator from New Hampshire desires to take it up, either now or at any subsequent time. He may take his own time for that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall ask to take it up at some time when the two Senators from Florida are in their seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

FREE LIST.

SEC. 2. On and after the 1st day of June, 1894, unless otherwise provided for in this act, the following articles, when imported, shall be exempt from duty:

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, on page 89, line 19, after the words "Sec. 2," to strike out "On and after," and insert "After;" and in the same line, before the word "day," to strike out "first" and insert "thirtieth," so as to read:

After the 30th day of June, 1894, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the fixing of the date should go over for the present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

363. Acids used for medicinal, chemical, or manufacturing purposes, not especially provided for in this act.
364. Aconite.
365. Acorns, raw, dried or undried, but unground.
366. Agates, unmanufactured.
367. Albumen.
368. Alizarin, and alizarin colors or dyes, natural or artificial.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to paragraph 368 is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that, of course, but I have had several letters suggesting that all coal-tar dyes should be put on the free list or all should be taxed. There are certain other dyes, as I understand it, which are practically in competition with these dyes, which are not yet on the free list. I wish to call attention to paragraph 443, page 98, in connection with this, wherein coal tar, etc., preparations and products of coal tar, not colors or dyes, are put on the free list. Now, these alizarin colors and dyes, I understaud, are used for the same purpose practically, and are in accord with other coal-tar dyes, and it seems to me if one is put upon the free list the other should also be upon the free list.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. These alizarin colors have been on the free list all along I understand. We simply leave them where we find them.

Mr. ALLISON. I know they have been on the free list, but in the existing law certain colors are specified, page 361.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose that all the colors enumerated in the act of 1890 would come in free under the language here used by the committee. That is my understanding of their action. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if that is not his understanding.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; I understand so.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand. In connection with that, before we pass from the paragraph, I desire to have read a letter which I have just received upon this subject. I will have it put in the RECORD, so that we may see what we are doing about these colors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

178 FRONT STREET, NEW YORK, June 15, 1894.

SIR: It has come to our notice that a firm of importers of coal-tar dyes have written a large number of mills asking them to urge upon their representatives in Congress that the coal tar dyes sold by them as alizarin orange, alizarin yellow, alizarin green, alizarin blue, alizarin brown, alizarin black, etc., be admitted free of duty.

We beg to call your attention to the history, as we understand it, of the classification of these alizarin dyes.

About fifteen or twenty years ago, when artificial alizarin was first discovered, the Badische anilin and soda fabrik, represented in this country by Pickhardt & Kuttroff, took out patents for the production of artificial alizarin, but shortly after another firm discovered a method so much superior to their patented method that the Badische Company abandoned their mode of manufacture, we are informed.

At this time, artificial alizarin was selling throughout Europe at about 30 cents per pound, and aniline dyes, as coal tar dyes were then known, paid a duty of 50 cents per pound, and 35 per cent ad valorem.

Messrs. Pickhardt & Kuttroff succeeded in getting a decision sustaining their patent in a distant circuit court, and secured injunctions restraining everyone from importing, dealing in, or selling artificial alizarin in the United States. By unusual skill they succeeded in keeping this case from reaching the Supreme Court for about a space of seven years, and when the case reached the Supreme Court the patent was declared by them to be void. At about the same time they secured their first judgment in a distant circuit court, they succeeded in getting Congress to put artificial alizarin on the free list, on the ground, we suppose, that it would be a benefit to the textile industry of the country to have the tax of 50 cents per pound and 35 per cent ad valorem removed.

When Congress removed this tax of 50 cents per pound and 35 per cent ad valorem the firm of importers representing the Badische Company put their own tax of $1 per pound on the article, so it was selling here at about $1.30 per pound, while it sold throughout Europe at 30 cents per pound. This continued for about seven years, during which time the importers have levied a tribute on every consumer in this country, putting them at a disadvantage as compared with European consumers.

Since the Supreme Court gave their decision breaking the patent monopoly the price dropped to a par with that in Europe, viz, from $1.30 to 30 cents per pound, and by competition has gradually come down now to 14 or 15 cents per pound for artificial alizarine or alizarine red.

In the two tariffs preceding the tariff of 1890 it was provided that alizarine, natural or artificial, should be free, and in the tariff of 1890, or the "McKinley bill," to the surprise of every importer of coal tar dyes, in the free list it was found that after the words "alizarine, natural or artificial," another sentence had been added, reading as follows: "And dyes commercially known as alizarine orange, alizarine yellow, alizarine green, alizarine blue, alizarine brown, and alizarine black." Now, those dyes thus enumerated in the free list are coal tar dyes, and this firm succeeded by the insertion of this clause in getting in a large number of their coal tar dyes free of duty, while a very much more important class of coal tar dyes, imported by us and known as diamine dyes, have had to pay the regular aniline or coal tar dye duty. Those other coal tar dyes imported by us, and known as "diamine red, diamine yellow, diamine blue, diamine green, diamine orange, diamine black, diamine violet, and diamine brown," are not produced in this country, nor are they likely to be produced here.

Our point is, that the above two classes of coal-tar dyes differing only in being separate classes of coal-tar dyes, should be treated alike, both free or both taxed. There is obviously no propriety in basing a discrimination with respect to the duty they shall pay, on the commercial name. The class of coal-tar dyes, commercially known as diamine dyes, are certainly of as much importance to the consumers as the coal-tar dyes commercially known as alizarine dyes, and we venture to ask you to use your influence to see that these dyes be treated as they deserve to be, exactly alike, both free, or both taxed, we do not care which.

Respectfully,

WM. J. MATHESON & CO., LIMITED,
B. D. BACON, Treasurer.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I am not familiar with the difference between these diamine dyes and other coal-tar dyes which are now put upon the free list by this arrangement and which were on the free list under the act of 1890, but it seems to me if diamine dyes are not produced in this country and come in competition with other dyes or colors which are put upon the free list, they ought to be treated in the same way. Not vouching for the accuracy of that information, but calling the attention of the Senators in charge of the bill to statements there made, I hope, with the writer of the letter, that the two articles will be treated alike or some reason given why they should not be.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state the reason why the alizarin colors named in the act of 1890 were put upon the free list. It appeared from the testimony of every one interested in the question that these alizarin colors could not be made in the United States at the rate of duty which had been imposed upon alizarin colors and dyes, and that the imposition of a duty in this case was simply imposing a burden upon the consumers of these particular dyes in the United States. There was no difference of opinion in the committee who then had this matter in charge as to the desirability of the duty being removed.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Iowa assents to that proposition. Now, whether these dyes which these rival manufacturers make come within the same category I do not know. I do know that the dyes in question are not made in the United States, and are not likely to be made in the United States, and I think the committee have wisely acted in allowing them to remain upon the free list. Whether the free list ought to be extended so as to include other dyes which can not be made in the United States, I am not certain. That is a matter which I suppose the committee will take up later on.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee was very strongly inclined to add coal-tar dyes to the free list in connection with these alizarin dyes, and the most vigorous opposition was made by the persons interested in the business and by their friends in the Senate and out of the Senate. It was stated that large amounts of money had been invested in developing the production of dyes from coal tar, that it was done to a much greater extent in Germany than in this country, and that we would be destroying an industry which deserves consideration.

We found the provision as it is in the bill, alizarin dyes free and coal-tar dyes taxed. We reduced the tax on coal-tar dyes somewhat in the proportion we reduced taxes upon other things and left the paragraph as it stands, because we were not prepared to say that the coal-tar dyes could safely be put upon the free list with the alizarin dyes, and we have no idea of taking alizarin dyes off the free list and putting them on the taxable list.

Mr. ALLISON. This firm, which seems to be a reputable firm of merchants, states that these diamine dyes are not made in this country at all, and that they come in competition with the dyes which have been put by the bill upon the free list. It seems to me worthy of consideration whether we should not make such a provision as will deal fairly with those people, as well as with the consumers of the articles in our own country, where there is no production of the article here. I call attention to it for the purpose of doing at a later stage what seems to be just in the matter.

I do not know whether there are colors or dyes made in this country which come in competition with these diamine dyes. Somebody ought to know whether that is the case or not. If so, I shall not ask that they be put upon the free list; but if not, then I see no reason why one class of coal-tar dyes should be put upon the free list and another class excluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Senate. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

369. Amber, unmanufactured, or crude gum.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "amber," in paragraph 369, line 7, I move to insert "and amberoid," so as to read:

Amber and amberoid, unmanufactured, or crude gum.

Mr. PLATT. Let me inquire what amberoid is?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The statement was made by a custom-house officer that it is some imitation of amber and looks very much like it, but it is difficult to be distinguished from it. There is some difficulty about classification in connection with it. I know nothing about it personally.

Mr. PLATT. I have a fear that it may include a manufactured amber made in this country by taking little bits of amber and making them up into larger pieces. I do not know that it is true, but I merely speak of it in this connection. I suppose the committee do not desire to put a manufacture of amber on the free list. I am not sure that I am correct, but I know that that manufacture is carried on in this country.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That would be a manufacture of amber.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand this is an imitation, or something that is taking the place of amber, and is not a manufacture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

370. Ambergris.
371. Ammonia, carbonate of, muriate of, or sal-ammoniac and sulphate of.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 371.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

372. Aniline salts.
373. Any animal imported specially for breeding purposes shall be admitted free: Provided, That no such animal shall be admitted free unless pure bred of a recognized breed and duly registered in the book of record established for that breed, and the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe such additional regulations as may be required for the strict enforcement of this provision.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 373, to insert at the end of the paragraph:

Any cattle, horses, sheep, or other domestic animals which have strayed across the boundary line into any foreign country, or where such domestic animals have been or may be driven across such boundary line by the owner for pasturage purposes, the same may be brought back to the United States free of duty under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment, and move to insert:

Cattle, horses, sheep, or other domestic animals, which have strayed across the boundary line into any foreign country, or have been or may be driven across such boundary line by the owner for pasturage purposes, together with their increase, may be brought back to the United States free of duty under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALLISON. That seems to be a pretty broad provision. It would enable our own people, of course, to carry their domestic animals across the boundaries free and breed them, keep them there as long as they desire, and then return them free of duty. I am afraid such a provision might lead to some confusion at least, if not fraud. I should be glad to have the Senator from Arkansas, who is undoubtedly familiar with the situation which requires some such provision, state what the effect of it will be. I take it it applies only to our Mexican border.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is intended to apply only to the Mexican border. There are large ranches along the boundary from the Rio Grande west, where I understand it is a physical impossibility for the owners of stock to prevent the stock wandering across the river and going on the Mexican side.

I understand that on occasions when long droughts prevail, in some localities it is a matter of absolute necessity that stock shall be driven from the location of the ranches across into the pastures on the other side and kept there for such length of time until they can be safely brought back to this side. The intention of the amendment is simply to provide that stock which may be driven or which may stray across the border for that purpose shall be returned without paying a duty. If the provision I propose is open to any abuse, I shall be glad to have it limited so that there will be no danger from it.

Mr. ALLISON. It looks to me as though the effect of the provision would naturally be to make free intercourse between this country and Mexico as respects these animals. It will of course be impossible for customs-house officers to distinguish between an increase in the number of animals and the original exportation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That would have to be established, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know enough about the subject to make any criticism upon it. I suppose there is some necessity for a provision in the nature of the amendment proposed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand this provision was submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] to the Treasury Department, and that it has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in its present form.

Mr. PALMER. The last remark of the Senator from Arkansas answers the point I was about to make, whether the Secretary of the Treasury has the power to prevent abuses. The Senator's explanation is satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand the Secretary of the Treasury has the power.

Mr. HARRIS. I chance to know that in Northwestern Texas it has been frequently absolutely necessary for a ranchman in time of great drought to drive his stock some times hundreds of miles to find water and pasturage so combined that the stock can have the benefit of both. Occasionally they are compelled to cross the Rio Grande and find pasturage near enough to the Rio Grande to get the benefit of the water.

I take it for granted from what the Senator from Texas, who prepared the amendment, said to me yesterday, that it is intended to provide for that exact case. From my little knowledge of the stock business I do not think there can be any difficulty or danger of any traffic, because every herd has its brand and is easy of identification, and therefore the stock that is driven across would have the privilege of being driven back.

Mr. ALLISON. Having had the whole question elucidated by my friend from Tennessee, I withdraw any further opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary read as follows:

374. Animals brought into the United States temporarily for a period not exceeding six months, for the purpose of exhibition or competition for prizes offered by any agricultural or racing association; but a bond shall be given in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; also, teams of animals, including their harness and tackle and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries to the United States with their families, and in actual use for the purpose of such emigration under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and wild animals intended for exhibition in zoological collections for scientific and educational purposes, and not for sale or profit.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend paragraph 374, on page 91, line 4, after the word "agricultural," to strike out "or racing."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

375. Annatto, roucou, rocou, or orleans, and all extracts of.
376. Antimony ore, crude sulphite of, and antimony, as regulus or metal.
377. Apatite.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 378, in the following words:

378. Apples, green or ripe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 379, in the following words:

379. Apples, dried, desiccated, evaporated, or prepared in any manner, and not otherwise provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

380. Argal, or argol, or crude tartar.
381. Arrow root, raw or unmanufactured.
382. Arsenic and sulphide of, or orpiment.
383. Arseniate of aniline.
384. Art educational steps, composed of glass and metal, and valued at not more than 6 cents per gross.
385. Articles imported by the United States.
386. Articles in a crude state used in dyeing or tanning, not specially provided for in this act.
387. Articles, the growth, produce, and manufacture of the United States, when returned after having been exported, without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means; casks, barrels, carboys, bags, and other vessels of American manufacture exported filled with American products, or exported empty and returned filled with foreign products, including shooks when returned as barrels or boxes; also quicksilver flasks or bottles, of either domestic or foreign manufacture, which shall have been actually exported from the United States; but proof of the identity of such articles shall be made, under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the exemption of bags from duty shall apply only to such domestic bags as may be imported by the exporter thereof, and if any such articles are subject to internal tax at the time of exportation, such tax shall be proved to have been paid before exportation and not refunded: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any article upon which an allowance of drawback has been made, the reimportation of which is hereby prohibited except upon payment of duties equal to the drawbacks allowed; or to any article manufactured in bonded warehouse and exported under any provision of law: And provided further, Then when manufactured tobacco which has been exported without payment of internal-revenue tax shall be reimported it shall be retained in the custody of the collector of customs until internal-revenue stamps in payment of the legal duties shall be placed thereon.
388. Asbestus, unmanufactured.
389. Ashes, wood and lye of, and beet-root ashes.
390. Asphaltum and bitumen, crude or dried, but not otherwise manipulated or treated.
391. Asafetida.
392. Bacon and hams, beef, mutton, and pork, and meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in this act.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend paragraph 392 by striking out "beef, mutton, and pork," after the word "hams."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the amendment of the committee, and move to strike out all of paragraph 392 after the word "hams."

Mr. PEFFER. I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether the motion to strike out the paragraph is to be resisted on the other side. I hope it will be accepted. I do not know why bacon and hams should come in from other countries in competition with our farmers and the men who prepare them here. Will the committee consent to strike out the whole paragraph?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed from the committee will be first submitted to the Senate; that is, to strike out a part of the paragraph. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to strike out all of the paragraph after the word "hams."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, to strike out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. Agriculture in general has been unfairly treated I think in this bill. Here is an article the farmers are very much interested in—bacon and hams; and I submit it is a proper subject for at least a revenue duty. At the proper time, if the amendment I now propose is carried, I expect to move to vote to place it upon the dutiable list, and I shall ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. VEST. The effect of this amendment, unless the Senator has some specific duty to propose otherwise, would be to put 20 per cent upon these articles. We bring into this country forty-odd thousand dollars' worth of Westphalia hams. They are a peculiar article of that genus.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why should they not pay a duty?

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Then let the paragraph be stricken out.

Mr. VEST. We send out 82,000,000 pounds. It does not amount to anything. It is merely leather and prunella.

Mr. ALLISON. It costs 19 cents a pound.

Mr. VEST. I know it does.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the unit of value. It seems to me the importers can afford to pay 20 per cent. The duty ought to be higher.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] to strike out the paragraph as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary read as follows:

393. Balm of Gilead.
394. Barks, cinchona or other, from which quinine may be extracted.
395. Baryta, carbonate of, or witherite, and baryta, sulphate of, or barytes, unmanufactured, including barytes earth.
396. Bauxite, or beauxite.
397. Beeswax.
398. Bells, broken, and bell metal broken and fit only to be remanufactured.
399. All binding twine manufactured in whole or in part from New Zealand hemp, istle or Tampico fiber, manilla, sisal grass, or sunn, of single ply and measuring not exceeding 600 feet to the pound.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment of the committee to paragraph 399 be stated.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand there is a committee amendment to strike out the word "manila."

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a Vest amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas will observe that it is an amendment to be proposed, not an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The word "manila" should be stricken out. It is a committee amendment, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment which was intended to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Perhaps the Chair is correct.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am glad we have a discriminating Presiding Officer who is able to tell the various classes of amendments which have been offered to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas move to strike out the word "manila?"

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not. I understood the Senator from Missouri was to move to strike out that word and insert "manila twine not exceeding 650 feet to the pound." I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri proposes to move the amendment or not. I have no suggestion to make.

Mr. VEST. I did intend to move it, but I understand there was an amendment pending to strike out the word "manila," and after it was carried I proposed to move to insert—and manila twine not exceeding 650 feet to the pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 399, page 94, line 2, after the word "fiber," strike out "manila," and after the word "pound," in line 4, insert:

and manila twine not exceeding 650 feet to the pound.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will give some explanation of his proposal to take manila out of the general scope of the paragraph and insert 650 feet to the pound instead of 600. That seems to be a distinction that has some reason for it, but I do not know what it is.

Mr. VEST. This was suggested upon samples which were exhibited to us, showing that unless this amendment was made it would not carry out the intention of the committee as to admitting binding-twine free; it would let in rope. There is a difference, the experts assured us, in regard to the quality of this twine, which is regulated according to length. I have the samples in the committee room if it is necessary to produce them here. We were satisfied that statement was true, and that we would render the rest of the provision inoperative as to free binding-twine unless we made this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows.

400. [Birds, stuffed, not suitable for millinery ornaments, and] bird skins, prepared for preservation, but not further advanced in manufacture.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words inclosed in brackets.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the following words at the beginning of paragraph 400.

Birds, stuffed, not suitable for millinery ornaments, and

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

401. Birds and land and water fowls.
402. Bismuth.
403. Bladders, and all integuments of animals, crude, salted for preservation, and unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this act.
404. Blood, dried.
405. Blue vitriol, or sulphate of copper.
406. Bologna sausages.
407. Bolting cloths, especially for milling purposes, but not suitable for the manufacture of wearing apparel.
408. Bones, crude, or not burned, calcined, ground, steamed, or otherwise manufactured, and bone dust or animal carbon, and bone ash, fit only for fertilizing purposes.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 409, in the following words:

409. Bone char, suitable for use in decolorizing sugars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

410. Books, engravings, photographs, bound or unbound, etchings, maps, and charts, which shall have been printed more than twenty years at the date of importation, and all hydrographic charts and books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original scientific research, and publications issued for their subscribers by scientific and literary associations or academies, or publications of individuals for private circulation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to add at the end of paragraph 410: "And public documents by foreign governments."

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to inquire of the Senator if foreign governments admit our documents free of duty. Ought there not to be a clause making it reciprocal?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think they do. The Secretary of the Treasury suggested this amendment.

Mr. QUAY. I move further to amend the paragraph by striking out all after the word "charts," in the second line, on page 95, down to the word "or," in line 5. I move this amendment at the suggestion of Pressmen's Union No. 4, of the city of Philadelphia, in pursuance of resolutions which I send to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ROOMS OF TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION, No. 2,
124 NORTH NINTH STREET,
Philadelphia, December 19, 1893.

To PRESSMEN'S UNION, No. 4:

At a stated meeting of this Union held on the 17th instant the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted. As the matter referred to is of vital importance to our craft we solicit your aid in order that our fellow-workmen may not be made sufferers by the passage of the free-book clause in the proposed tariff bill.

Whereas, in the tariff bill to be reported from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, "all scientific publications, either of individuals or of institutions," are placed on the free list; and

Whereas this phraseology can and probably will be construed so as to admit free of duty all works, popular, technical, and educational, on physical, natural, medical, historical, sociological, mental, and moral science, constituting a very large portion of the current publications of the day: Therefore

Resolved, I. That we view with alarm the prospect of the interference with our labor which this clause will effect if the bill shall become a law in its present shape.

II. That we respectfully but earnestly request the omission of the said clause from the free list, believing as we do that no discrimination of the kind proposed can be so phrased as to prevent abuses in the administration of the law which were not contemplated by its framers.

III. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the members of the Committee on Ways and Means and to the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress, and that the latter be respectfully urged to prevent by every means the enactment of the said objectionable clause.

IV. That copies of the above preamble and resolutions be forwarded to the officers of the International Union, to our sister unions, and to the different trade organizations with the request that they take immediate favorable action; and that they forward the same to their central labor councils for similar action.

GEORGE CHANCE, President.
WM. J. SLOAN, Recording Secretary.

Mr. QUAY. I ask for a vote on the amendment. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, on page 95, after the second word "and" and before "books," strike out—books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original scientific research, and publications issued for their subscribers by scientific and literary associations or academies, or,

So as to make the paragraph read:

410. Books, engravings, photographs, bound or unbound, etchings, maps, and charts, which shall have been printed more than twenty years at the date of importation, and all hydrographic charts, and publications of individuals for private circulation.

Mr. HOAR. I confess that the phrase in the paragraph as it stands, "devoted exclusively to original scientific research," conveys no clear meaning whatever to my mind. I should like to ask my honorable friend from Missouri (who I suppose is as capable of answering such questions as anybody in the Senate) if he will mention a book which is devoted exclusively to original scientific research that he thinks of in this world? I do not think of one. I suppose no mathematician, no chemist, no biologist, no metaphysician could write a book which might be said to be devoted exclusively to original scientific research; though I will say, with no disrespect to the Senator, it is possible there might be some English books on political economy, the scientific research of which is entirely original and was not borrowed from anything else in heaven or on earth. I can not conceive of any book which that phrase aptly describes.

Mr. VEST. I should think that the very celebrated publication, Darwin's Origin of Species, ought to come under this definition. I will state to the Senator frankly my idea about it. We discussed the matter in the committee. This was intended to apply not to collations or to books which were prepared from other books, but original publications, original scientific research, that is, where an author gave the result of his own researches, not copying from anybody or not collating from other authors. That was our idea in regard to it, and it was no doubt the idea of the House of Representatives. If any more apt language can be discovered of course we would be very glad to adopt it. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts will disagree with the intention of this proposed legislation.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that in describing what belongs to science, we ought not to use the most unscientific and inexact phrase in the whole bill for the purpose. Darwin's researches, which the Senator speaks of, can not be described as a book devoted to original scientific research. He may have used in a thousand ways all the research which had preceded him; it may have been a collection of other men's researches.

I understand of course what the Senator has in mind, but I do not see how when a man gives the result of the scientific researches of all ages and all time openly it can be announced as a theory of his own, or described as a book devoted exclusively to scientific research. I think this is a puzzle, I will not say anything about Democrats, but I think it would puzzle all Republican appraisers, or whatever officers are to deal with it, whom I have ever known. If you should say books relating to natural science, to mathematics, or to science, that is one thing.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him if this language is found in any preceding tariff law?

Mr. HOAR. I do not find it in any. It is a new phrase.

Mr. PALMER. If it has not already received the construction of the revenue officers I think the words are ambiguous.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether a book like Lecky's History of England, or Walpole's work, now in process of publication, might not be held to be a book of original scientific research?

Mr. VEST. I should hardly think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are certainly original books, and they are books of research.

Mr. VEST. Waiving the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts that there can be no trouble amongst Democrats, because we are so ignorant, I take it, we can not——

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; I beg the Senator's pardon. I carefully avoided anything that could possibly be an imputation by saying that I do not know any Republican appraiser who would not be puzzled by such a phrase. I do not undertake to speak for any other person.

Mr. VEST. Let me make a suggestion. I know exactly what I want to accomplish. Whatever the House of Representatives intended by using this language, I want to exempt from duty all scientific works. I did not object to the word "original" in the way I understood it, and that was that the provision should not apply to collations, as I have stated, simply works of labor without any original thought, like a dictionary, for instance, like one of these gazetteers, which is the lowest order of literary work so far as intellectual effort is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Missouri will pardon me, my friend, the illustrious scientific man who died last week, Prof. Whitney, was the author of the Century Dictionary; and I do not suppose there is a work anywhere which contains the result of more original scientific research than the Century Dictionary.

Mr. VEST. I will modify the statement. I meant the higher order of intellectual effort, which is that which originates a system of thought—that which is not borrowed from any other source. But I have not the slightest objection to strike out the word "original," and say "devoted exclusively to scientific research," because so far as my ideas are concerned, you can not make this sort of legislation too broad. I think every nation in the world is entitled to the thought of every other nation.

Mr. LODGE. The first part of this clause excepts all books printed within twenty years of the date of importation. That has been the general provision, I think, in the tariff laws, and it is directed of course against books printed in the English language. Books in other languages are admitted free. The reason of it undoubtedly is to give protection to the printers and the men who are engaged in the material production of books in this country.

The objectionable feature of this new clause is that there is one particular class of works singled out to come in free. If it is right to let in free books which contain scientific thought, it is just as right to let in all other forms of original literature. There is no reason I can see for singling out science, letting it in free and keeping a duty on works of history, or poetry, or drama, or fiction, or theology, or any other subject.

Mr. HOAR. Or morals.

Mr. LODGE. Morals, or ethics, or the great social questions which are now filling men's minds and on which there is a great deal of modern literature in England. There is no more reason for picking out scientific books than for picking out any other class of literature. Either we should let in all books free and give no protection whatever to those engaged in the material production in our own country, or we should put a duty on all books published within twenty years and give protection to those engaged here in the material production of books. I think that is fair, and that is the principle recognized in our copyright law.

The Senator from Missouri said he does not want to keep out foreign thought on any subject. No one does. Under the copyright law foreign thought comes in free, and is protected here just like our own authors. It is a wise measure. Nothing keeps out the ideas contained in those books. The only provision is that the men who print them and bind them and make them shall have protection on English books printed within the last twenty years. If that is to be extended to books generally, it is an injustice to put in a loose clause like this excepting scientific books.

There is no more reason for excepting science than there is for excepting anything else. I think the argument made in the petition presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the loose construction which this would cause is a very forcible one. It does not seem to me that that argument applies to publications issued by scientific associations for their subscribers or anybody else, for those works are not reprinted here as a rule and have a very trifling circulation. There would be no work given here, if a duty was put upon them, to books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original research. I can not see on what ground it is justified to except the one particular class of books. It seems to me a class discrimination. I do not see any reason for doing it whatever. If the committee desires to make them all free, that is another and broader question, involving a question of principle, but to select this single class does not seem to me to be fair.

Mr. MORRILL. I have an impression that this paragraph in relation to the admission of books free more than twenty years after their publication was introduced many years ago as a favorite hobby of Senator Sumner. I rather thought it was wrong, for all that is necessary to be done in the case of any of the standard works of literature of the foreign country is just to put the date twenty years back, and the works of Shakespeare, Dryden, or Scott, or any other of the distinguished authors of Great Britain can be brought here in the finest kind of binding. I think the whole provision in relation to this matter is wrong and ought to be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. The original provision respecting the admission of books without duty provided that the books should not only be printed twenty years ago but bound and manufactured twenty years ago; so that it was an easy matter for our customs officres to distinguish the binding of the ancient books. Now, it is proposed to strike out the provision as respects binding, and merely require that they shall have been printed twenty years. I think that the original clause which has passed through many tariff laws, providing that the books shall have been printed and bound or manufactured twenty years ago, should be retained.

That is the first criticism I make upon the change proposed by this paragraph. I think we ought to insert the provision which has been in the tariff laws for many years, that the books shall be printed, bound, or manufactured for twenty years. I agree wholly with the Senator from Massachusetts that it will not be an easy thing for any appraiser or collector to draw the line with reference to books devoted exclusively to original scientific research. In any event, these words should be stricken out.

Mr. VEST. Which words?

Mr. ALLISON. "Books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original scientific research." That, I submit, is a provision which could not be executed with any degree of accuracy by anyone who is likely to have control in our custom-house or anywhere else, because what would be a book of exclusive scientific research to one man would be an ordinary book to another.

Mr. HOAR. It would have to be left to a jury, then.

Mr. ALLISON. It would have to be left to a jury, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests. Under this new law the question would have to pass into the courts and be subjected to the personal examination of judges. To the next clause I have no objection; that is, "publications issued for their subscribers by scientific and literary associations or academies." I do not think those productions are reprinted as a rule in this country. It is a common thing for scientific and literary associations to have quarterly publications.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to modifying my amendment so as to retain the clause the Senator has just read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania also propose to strike out after the word "academies" the words "or publications of individuals for private circulation?"

Mr. QUAY. I do not. My amendment ceases at the word "or."

Mr. ALLISON. That clause is impossible of execution. Here is a person in Europe who publishes an edition of a thousand copies, if you please, for private circulation. How is that fact to be ascertained in this country? If a gentleman publishes a book for a limited circulation and sends it to his friends, it seems to me the ordinary rule of paying duty ought to be followed.

Mr. HOAR. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this phrase applies to books for private circulation. A person may have a book published to give to his friends, or to be sold.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, I may order a book from a book publisher in London. That would be a book for private circulation and it would be so considered. At least no customs officer could say that it was not for private circulation or for a public purpose or for use in a public library.

Mr. LODGE. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that there is an entire class of books not adapted to general circulation which would come in free under that clause, such as Burton's Arabian Nights, the publications of the Villon Society, the limited edition of Payne's translation of the Arabian Nights, and other works of that character.

Mr. HOAR. I speak of books sold to subscribers only.

Mr. LODGE. They are limited mainly to private circulation. Burton's translation of the Arabian Nights, which is a somewhat notorious book on account of the character of the notes, would come in free under this clause, and the last poems of Tennyson would have a duty upon them.

Mr. ALLISON. I think everything in the paragraph should be eliminated except the clause relating to publications of scientific societies abroad, and we ought to restore the phraseology of the existing law which is, "which shall have been printed and bound and manufactured more than twenty years ago." The ancient binding and manufacturing will as a rule enable the customs officers to distinguish between a modern book with an ancient date and a book actually manufactured more than twenty years ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as modified.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, after the word "charts," strike out the words:

And books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original scientific research.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as modified. (Putting the question.) The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. VEST. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. If the yeas and nays are to be taken upon the question——

Mr. VEST. I will be entirely frank about this matter—I am willing to modify the language so as to carry out our object, but I am not willing to have the paragraph eliminated in this way. I do not agree with the Senators on the other side that there is no good idea contained in this proposed enactment. I am emphatically and decidedly in favor of admitting free of duty all scientific works. I would go a great deal further if I could. I would favor the introduction of all books into this country free. I think they ought to be entirely free. If there is anything in the world that ought to be free it is the advanced thought of the age and the right thought of all ages. I do not appreciate the argument of the Senator from Iowa that we ought to stand on a question of binding. If a book was bound twenty years ago, and has become injured by time he wants to let it come in the country free of duty. It is not the binding that we care anything about; it is the essence of the book printed.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] said that under this provision there would be frauds; that the printing would be modern and the date ancient; and I suggested that there was a safeguard in the old clause which provided that they must be books that had been printed and bound or manufactured twenty years ago, and it is not so easy to counterfeit a book thus appearing as to counterfeit a date simply in the printing. That was all I suggested about it; and I think for that reason the words "bound or manufactured" should be restored.

Mr. VEST. If I were looking simply to the manual work of dollars and cents involved in the printing, I might appreciate the argument in regard to binding and printing, but what I want to do is to let in books, good books of all countries, to elevate the people, books that are valuable to public thought in every country. I would do anything that I could as a legislator to allow such books to come to this country, and to go from this country abroad.

My objection to this paragraph, if I have any, is that it is too narrow. It ought to go further than books of scientific research. It is not possible that as American legislators we are to be governed simply by the question of giving a few dollars to the printers or binders of this country if we thereby sacrificed the general interests of the community in regard to better ideas and better thought and better civilization. I do not want to talk about it in any æsthetic way, but that is my idea in regard to the whole matter. If we can agree upon some words that will bring about, even to the limited extent that the House of Representatives has attempted it, the idea I have advanced I am willing to join in it, but I do not want this paragraph cut to pieces and made to mean nothing.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to strike out the words "and books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original scientific research" to stand, as the Chair declared it carried, without insisting upon the yeas and nays. Those are words which nobody on either side of the Chamber likes. I think we are all agreed that they ought to be stricken out.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it would not greatly improve the matter just to strike out the word "original," as there seems to be doubt as to what is meant by books of "original scientific research"?

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that we strike out "exclusively" also.

Mr. VEST. We understand what is scientific research.

Mr. HOAR. That would improve it a little, but it would not then express anybody's meaning. The book is not devoted to scientific research. The book is the record of previous scientific research. If it is devoted to scientific research, and that phrase has any meaning, it means simply that it is a scientific book; which is an indefinite and indistinct phrase.

I think before this matter comes up in the Senate the Senator from Missouri can probably devise some phrase which will have at least the merit of precision, as his phrases generally do, and enable us either to support it if we like it or vote against it if we do not like it; but we shall understand what we are voting for or what we are voting against. Nobody likes its phraseology. I hope the Senator will take that course and let these words be stricken out. Then in the meantime, before the matter comes into the Senate, where it is all to be done over again, he can have his phrase ready.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that perhaps the word "devoted" as applied to periodicals would not be so bad—periodicals devoted to scientific research.

Mr. HOAR. To science. If I wanted to carry out what the Senator from Missouri does I would say, "devoted exclusively to science." That, then, would present the question whether history is a science, whether ethics is a science, and so on, raising the question that my colleague suggested. We might say "devoted to natural science." That would be probably nearer what he seems to mean; but I do not think a phrase of that kind ought to be formulated on the floor of the Senate in a three-minutes' discussion like this.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the Senator would include in natural science.

Mr. HOAR. At any rate there would be some things not included in it.

I rose to say in reply to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that I always had a strong feeling in favor of Mr. Sumner's view. I should like to have the thought on any subject whatever of any man on the face of the earth brought into this country and presented to the intelligence of the American people without any fetter, without any constraint, and without any condition—poetry, history, science, moral discussion, eloquence, fiction, fun, or wit, everything that is literature, everything that is history, everything that is science.

I agree with my friend from Vermont, that the paper manufacturer and the mechanic who binds the book and the printer are as much entitled to protection as any other class of our mechanics or artisans, and that whatever be the sound policy in regard to others is the sound policy in regard to them. That is what I understand the existing law in this country proceeds upon. The international copyright law, which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] got through, is on that theory, to protect the mechanic and put the thoughts face to face, and let them grapple, as Milton says, the thinkers of this country and the thinkers of all other countries.

My friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests to me that this language ought to be considered very carefully in its relation to the international copyright law where we have made certain conditions in regard to the introduction of works of foreign authors; but I believe, and I think a majority of the American people believe, that it is a sound, wise, and healthy policy to let every product of a human brain which is not immoral and indecent in its tendency circulate in this country, wherever it originated, side by side with every other, the foreigner and the American on an equal footing.

When it comes to printing Shakspeare, Dryden, or other books which are the classics of mankind, the man who does the mechanical work of printing and binding and setting the type and making the paper is as much entitled to protection as workmen are entitled to be protected on other articles. That is what I understand is the existing policy.

This paragraph is in violation of that policy, because it provides that where certain works come in, the works of what we call original scientific research, or works published by individuals for private circulation, the mechanical part of them is to come in without a duty as much as the thought or the work that is original.

I do not think that is necessary, and it is a violation of the principle established by the bill as the other House passed it and established by the bill as the committee proposed it. If you are going to adopt that doctrine, then place books, engravings, and photographs on the free list and stop. But you do not propose that, and in proposing to do something else it seems to me you ought to have the clause carefully drawn and precise. I hope, as I said, the Senator from Missouri will think best to strike out what nobody wants, and will address himself to preparing a proper phrase before the bill passes.

Mr. VEST. Let me make a suggestion. I am anxious to get on with the bill. In line 2, between the word "and" and "books," I propose to insert "scientific," and to strike out "devoted exclusively to original scientific research;" so as to read: and all hydrographic charts, scientific books, periodicals, and publications.

Mr. HOAR. That is more precise in its meaning, but I should like to have the Senator say, then, what he means by scientific books. Does he include history?

Mr. VEST. Of course not. I mean books devoted to scientific subjects.

Mr. HOAR. Does he include ethics?

Mr. VEST. Scientific books and periodicals. We all understand what is meant by science and scientific. I think any appraiser would come to a conclusion on that point. It would not include history; it would not include poetry; it would not include philosophy, in my opinion.

Mr. ALLISON. Or fiction.

Mr. VEST. Or moral essays; but it would be science.

Mr. HOAR. Natural science includes what the Senator speaks of.

Mr. VEST. It would include anything called science.

Mr. LODGE. I think there is one point to be considered in connection with the copyright law. The operation of that law is to encourage the English writer to copyright his book in this country for the purpose of getting the American market and the copyright royalty. The result is that we get books printed here in editions suitable to our market. Our market requires and calls for popular and cheap editions; but I think the tendency of this provision will be to open the door to the introduction of a book in the original English edition, which is generally a much more expensive one and quite different from that prepared for our market, and prevent the writer from copyrighting his book here. We shall be obliged to take it in the expensive English edition instead of the cheaper edition which is prepared for our own market. It seems to me that this is a clause which ought to be carefully considered before it is passed upon.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to add one word. All lawyers maintain that law is a science. A great many of the modern law books are purely mechanical. Some clerk or young law student spends his hours of leisure in making a collation of cases and statutes. Sometimes it is very well done; sometimes it is very badly done. As I said, I am in favor of having such works come in free so far as the intellectual work is concerned, but there is no reason why they should come in without having the binding and printing protected, if you are going to protect it at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRAY. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. After the word "charts," in line 2, page 95, strike out "and books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original scientific research."

Mr. TELLER. I wish to have the clause stricken out, not because I care about eliminating it from the paragraph, but because it will put it in a form where it can be put in a shape satisfactory to everybody. Therefore I shall vote to strike out the clause.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I will transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HUNTON], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate by illness in his family, is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison,	Dubois,	Patton,	Teller,
Carey,	Frye,	Power,	Washburn.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Proctor,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Sherman.

NAYS—29.

Bate,	George,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Berry,	Gibson,	Kyle,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Brice,	Gorman,	Murphy,	Vilas,
Caffery,	Gray,	Palmer,	White.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pasco,
Daniel,	Irby,	Peffer,
Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—33.

Allen,	Hale,	Manderson,	Roach,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Martin,	Squire,
Butler,	Higgins,	Mills,	Stewart,
Call,	Hill,	Mitchell, Oregon	Turpie,
Camden,	Hunton,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Morrill,	Walsh,
Coke,	Lindsay,	Perkins,	Wilson,
Davis,	McLaurin,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	McMillan,	Platt,
Gallinger,	McPherson,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the paragraph it is proposed to add "and public documents issued by foreign governments."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "or publications of individuals for private circulation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "academies," it is proposed to strike out "or publications of individuals for private circulation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. (Putting the question.) The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that this amendment, or some amendment at least, should manifestly be made to this paragraph.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] allow me to suggest to my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and to the Senate, that we let this paragraph go over for the present until the bill is reported to the Senate, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will have time to scrutinize and prepare such form as may seem in his judgment proper. It seems that the language here is not altogether satisfactory to him, and it is unsatisfactory to others. I take it for granted that the Senator can, if he will take the time to look at it between now and the time when the bill is reported to the Senate, prepare a satisfactory amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. That will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARRIS. I presume that will be satisfactory to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLISON. I am clear that this paragraph ought to be changed; and my object was simply to get some amendment to enable the conference committee, if we are ever to have one, to deal with it, in order to secure proper phraseology; but passing over the paragraph will be perfectly satisfactory to this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa says "it will be perfectly satisfactory," and I suppose it would be more satisfactory to some on this side of the Chamber, and I suppose to all, if we did with this legislation as we do with all legislation—let the Senate vote according to the opinion of its majority. I never knew a tariff bill, or an appropriation bill, or a bill of any kind where the representatives of the dominant party did anything more than formulate its policy and propose it. This is the first time in our history that a majority of the Senate have avowed the doctrine that they propose to swallow everything that was proposed to them whether they liked it or did not like it, and propose to commit their conscience and judgment and the public interests to two men, and have nothing to say about it themselves. So I do not say this is perfectly satisfactory, but I think it is better than voting into the bill by a yea-and-nay vote things which everybody agrees are ridiculous.

Mr. ALLISON. I must state, after the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that my language was quite inaccurate. I meant merely to say that the passing over of the paragraph would be perfectly satisfactory under existing conditions, being the best possible thing obtainable at this moment.

Mr. VEST. I want to say, once for all, that this continued scolding and criticism will not avail anything. So far as I am concerned, I have no apologies to make to anybody. I am doing my duty as I see it; and that is satisfactory to me. I have tried to make this sentence carry out what I believe is the intention of the majority of the Senate, but our friends on the other side seem satisfied with nothing but cutting this paragraph to pieces, and leaving it in such a condition that it conveys nothing like the intent of the House of Representatives or the intent of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

If the Senator only wants to bring this matter into conference, I will move to insert between the word "and," and the word "books," in line 2, the word "scientific," so as to read, "scientific books and periodicals devoted exclusively to original research."

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out "exclusively."

Mr. VEST. Strike out "exclusively" and insert "scientific" between the word "and" and the word "books," in line 2.

Mr. HOAR. Why is not the shortest way to strike out the entire paragraph as a matter of form, and then the whole thing will be in the power of the committee of conference?

Mr. VEST. Because I do not choose to accede to the idea that the paragraph does not contain a good intent in the way of legislation. I prefer to have it in some sort of shape conveying the idea it does. As to the words to be used we can arrange them afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and unless the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is withdrawn——

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri seems to think that these amendments are proposed merely for captious purposes. I want to ask the Senator from Missouri in good faith how this portion of the paragraph can be executed which reads "or publications of individuals for private circulation?" There is a class of publications that are to come in free under one condition; that is, where they are for private circulation.

How can a custom-house officer execute a provision of that character? I do not see how it is possible to be done; and, therefore, whatever else is done, it seems to me we should not open a wide loophole here for fraud as respects the importation of books. It would be better to make all books free than to do that.

Mr. VEST. I have never known any difficulty in regard to defining what is a book for private circulation—when it is not put upon the market and not sold; when it is donated by the publisher or author.

Mr. ALLISON. But it is not a donation. It may be sold. The paragraph does not say "books for private circulation not sold or given away."

Mr. VEST. I do not think there is any doubt in regard to the meaning of those words. I do not think any man, whether a literary man or not, would have any difficulty in ascertaining what the language means, "or publications of individuals for private circulation." That is in contradistinction to the idea that they are to be put on the market for sale, where they are presented to friends or gratuitously offered with the compliments of the author. Doubtless every Senator has received books in that way, and receives them every week.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will say "for gratuitous circulation," that will be all right. I will withdraw my original amendment and say "for gratuitous private circulation."

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The previous amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be considered as withdrawn, and the ordering of the yeas and nays will also be reconsidered if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move before the word "private," in line 5, to insert the word "gratuitous."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 410, line 5, on page 95, before the word "private," it is proposed to insert "gratuitous;" so as to read: "or publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I propose an amendment, in line 2, before the word "books," to insert the word "scientific;" in the same line, after the word "devoted," to strike out "exclusively;" and in line 3, before the word "research," to strike out "scientific."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 410, line 2, before the word "books," it is proposed to insert "scientific;" after the word "devoted," at the end of the same line, to strike out "exclusively;" and in line 3, before the word "research," to strike out "scientific;" so as to read:

And scientific books and periodicals devoted to original research, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

411. Books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English; also books and music, in raised print, used exclusively by the blind.

Mr. QUAY. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out all of line 7 and line 8, down to and including the word "also."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 411, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "Books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English; also," so as to read:

Books and music, in raised print, used exclusively by the blind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. This proposition to put books printed in a foreign language upon the free list made its appearance first in the McKinley act, after which this bill seems to be to some extent modeled. I know of no reason for its insertion here except that it was inserted in the McKinley act, unless the committee and the majority in this Chamber mean to discriminate against those who speak, write, and print English, in favor of books in foreign languages, especially in the German language, which is a very important interest in the United States, particularly in the city of Philadelphia. To my mind there is no reason why the printers and binders of German books in this country are not entitled to the same protection accorded to the printers and binders of English books. I have here the answer of Mr. Ig. Kohler to the inquiries of the Committee on Finance, and will take the liberty of reading a portion of it. He says:

5. We have published since 1879 621,698 volumes, including all our publications. In that year our house was destroyed by fire, so we are unable to say how many volumes were published before that, but since 1879 we have invested, alone, about $30,000 in new electrotype plates and wood cuts—all made in this country, as all our plates are. Our publications consist of religious, theological, classical, fiction, German and English dictionaries, text-books and schoolbooks, and we very seldom print an edition of less than 1,000 copies; our publications comprise about 100 or more different works, comprising from 1 to 12 to 14 to 54 volumes, costing from $500 to $10,000 a work, according to number of volumes.

6. In the last two years we have not worked full time, the reason why is that German books are allowed to enter free of duty, as all German publications are in the same order as ours.

7. We recommend the same duty upon German books as is on English.

8. If the duty upon our class of manufacture was reduced one-third, we would, no doubt, have to make a reduction in the same proportion.

9. Our books are sold by German houses, booksellers, and canvassers throughout the United States; we allow from 40 per cent to 50 per cent discount on retail prices.

10. The competition from Germany is very great and very injurious to German publishers here, on account of the very cheap labor there.

13. We are paying good wages, but we will be unable to continue doing so unless we receive protection.

14. We can not give living expenses of our workmen.

15. We are very much puzzled about the present law and its effects as it has caused a reaction upon our whole industry.

16. The price of living has been the same as in former years.

17. Our opinion is that the McKinley law relating to German books has a good deal to do with our depression in the German book market on account of competition from Germany.

24. We employ about ten men and ten girls; we pay skilled males from $15 to $16. Our apprentices earn from $3.50 to $6 per week. Females earn from $5 to $7 per week, as most of them are piece workers.

25. Some work full time, others half time, according to the work that is to be done.

26. All foreign articles of the like kind enter into competition with us, and to such an extent that it is injurious, as they manufacture much cheaper there, on account of the cheap labor; we here pay $2.50 and more a day, while there a skilled workman only receives a half dollar a day.

35. We recommend the same duty as upon English books and a high duty upon all bound books from any country, as that would give greater protection to the bookbinding industry and would prevent many large firms in America from having their books bound in England, France, or Germany. And, in conclusion, we beg to say we do not look at this from a selfish motive, but from real, earnest principle.

Allow me to state briefly how the duty was managed to be taken from German books. A lot of New York importers got together, sent out circulars to colleges, schools, professors, and teachers, had petitions signed and sent to Congress asking that the duty be taken from books, only for their own personal ends, not for the country's welfare, since which time there has not been any reduction in retail prices. We have no objections for institutions of learning having their books come in free of duty; we favor this always. We hope and sincerely pray that your committee will grant us the desired protection.

To show the extent of the industry in the city of Philadelphia I will read, or have the Secretary read for me, a petition signed by firms in Philadelphia representing the publishers, printers, bookbinders, paper manufacturers, and manufacturers of bookbinders' materials, interested in book-making, etc., praying for a restoration of at least 25 per cent on German books. The petition is addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, April, 1893.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned firms of Philadelphia, representing the publishers, printers, bookbinders, paper manufacturers, bookbinders' materials, all interested in the manufacture of bookmaking, etc., petition for the restoration of at least 25 per cent duty upon German books.

Bookbinders' materials: J. L. Shoemaker & Co., Philadelphia; Schulte Bros. & Co., Philadelphia.

Mr. QUAY. I also desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a letter which I have received from Mr. T. H. Diehl, a highly respectable and prominent citizen of Allentown, in which he says:

ALLENTOWN, PA., March 21, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I am a publisher of German books, of religious character, in accordance with the tenets of the Lutheran Church, so largely represented in Pennsylvania.

When the McKinley tariff bill was under consideration, certain importers of books and periodicals represented to the committee that the publishing interests in the German and other languages than the English in the United States were of very little consequence, that a continued duty on such publications was a hardship on those who were obliged to import from abroad and with such and similar arguments impressed the committee (unfamiliar with the subject) sufficiently to secure the placing of such publications on the free list, whereas they had previously been subject to the same duty (25 per cent) as English publications. The publishers in this country were not awake to the situation and no serious objection was made to the passage of the clause and thus it became a law.

The amount of capital involved and the results attained in German book publishing in this country are, however, much more extensive than most people are aware of. The rescinding of duties on importations has already very seriously injured these interests, and will inevitably do more harm in the future if continued.

Some lines of German publications are, of course, not affected, since they are in use by virtue of resolution of religious bodies. But all classes of books not enjoying such protection, of a general character, and with competitors of similar order in Germany, have since been subjected to competition of a killing character. Among such are the many juveniles, which schools are in the habit of using for reward or presentation purposes. American books have usually been made better than the European article, but since the duty is withdrawn the former will have to be made extremely poor and, if possible, wages reduced if the publishers are to be able to do any business whatever.

During the last two years some American-German publishers have been able to do very little with their stock, and their plants are in danger of being wiped out. All accumulations of plates and stock are nearly worthless, and for them the present situation is worthless.

But the remission of duty has not only done this harm, but has already caused the transfer of considerable work from this country to Germany. Some importers have sent unbound sheets of American-German books, notably church hymn books, which enjoy the protection of religious bodies, to Germany, to have finer bindings put on them.

The transportation cost is so much less than the wages paid here that they have found this business profitable, since they are free of paying duty on importations. Considerable work of this kind has already been taken away from our factories and workmen and given to foreigners. I happen to know of parties who import and publish and have in view the making of their book plates in Germany in future, which will give them still greater advantages, which the scale of wages (one-third or one-fourth of that in America) for composition, printing, binding, etc., will afford.

I think I will not need to multiply words. The case seems to me to be self-evident, and to my view affords a strong argument against tariff reductions generally, since the same results will follow most likely in other branches of manufacture and trade which have followed the inadvertent remission of duty in this line.

I have submitted these facts to Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, of the Finance Committee, in answer to circulars for information, but have had no answer from him and have no knowledge of any change in the bill. I ask that the duty be again placed on German books at the figure as before and as enjoyed by books in English. We German publishers must pay wages and materials at the price fixed by the employers who enjoy the protection which English books have afforded them, and then sell against competitors who have a free market against us.

Another point of view remains to be considered. The present law affords large opportunities for fraud. Nearly all the small Christmas, Easter, and other fine booklets, etc., for English and American houses are made in Germany. Since the new law is in existence at least some of these houses have commenced to make such booklets with German text, although very few are sold in this country. To me it does not appear improbable that, to some extent at least, the latter help to bring the former into this country free of duty. I have no positive evidence of such being the case, and do not make the charge, but the suggestion is worthy of consideration.

Yours, truly,

S. H. DIEHL.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I sincerely trust the committee will see proper to modify the paragraph as it is now in the bill. If they will not, I shall ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. QUAY. Yes, sir, I sincerely trust the committee will accept the amendment. I do not suppose the majority in this Chamber are so wedded to the McKinley law that they insist upon the rate named in the bill merely because it stands in the existing law. This provision first made its appearance in that law.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I should vote "yea" if that Senator were present.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], and withdraw my vote unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and shall not vote unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. SHOUP. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Carey,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Frye,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hale,	Patton,	Washburn.
Davis,	Hawley,	Peffer,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Power,

NAYS—26.

Allen,	Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Smith,
Berry,	George,	Lindsay,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Martin,	Vilas,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees
Caffery,	Harris,	Murphy,
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Pasco,

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Allison,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Squire,
Brice,	Higgins,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hill,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Call,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Walsh,
Camden,	Hunton,	Pettigrew,	White,
Cameron,	Irby,	Platt,	Wilson,
Coke,	McLaurin,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	McMillan,	Quay,
Gallinger,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Gordon,	Mills,	Roach,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

412. Books, engravings, photographs, etchings, bound or unbound, maps and charts imported by authority or for the use of the United States or for the use of the Library of Congress.

413. Books, maps, lithographic prints, and charts, specially imported, not more than 2 copies in any one invoice, in good faith, for the use of any society incorporated or established for educational, philosophical, literary, or religious purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use or by order of any college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in the United States, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

414. Books, libraries, usual furniture, and similar household effects of persons or families from foreign countries, if actually used abroad by them not less than one year, and not intended for any other person or persons, nor for sale.

415. Borax, crude, or borate of soda, or borate of lime.

The Committee on Finance proposed an amendment to strike out paragraph 415.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

416. Brazil paste.

417. Braids, plaits, laces, and similar manufactures composed of straw, chip, grass, palm leaf, willow, osier, or rattan, and sweat leathers, bindings, bands, and tips, when cut to length for trimming felt or wool hats, suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, and hoods.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out paragraph 417.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The proposed committee amendment is withdrawn, and the fine print below in lines 7, 8, and 9 is offered as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 417, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Braids, plaits, laces, and similar manufactures composed of straw, chipgrass, palm leaf, willow, osier, or rattan, suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, and hoods.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

418. Brazilian pebble, unwrought or unmanufactured.

419. Breccia, in block or slabs.

420. Bristles.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 420 I move to add the words which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to paragraph 420 "crude, not sorted, bunched, or prepared."

Mr. HALE. How does that accord, let me ask the Senator from Arkansas, with the amendment which was offered this morning?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It coincides with the amendment exactly. That proposition was that bristles sorted, bunched, or prepared, should be taxed 7½ per cent. This is to make "crude bristles, not sorted, bunched, or prepared," free.

Mr. HALE. So that it was only the higher grade of bristles which was covered by the amendment this morning?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the effect of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

421. Bromine.

422. Broom corn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 422.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

423. Bullion, gold or silver.

424. Burgundy pitch.

425. Cabbages.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 425.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

426. Old coins and medals, and other antiquities, but the term "antiquities" as used in this act shall include only such articles as are suitable for souvenirs or cabinet collections, and which shall have been produced at any period prior to the year 1700.

427. Cadmium.

428. Calamine.

429. Camphor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "camphor," in paragraph 429, I move to insert "crude."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

430. Castor or castoreum.

431. Catgut, whipgut, or wormgut, unmanufactured, or not further manufactured than in strings or cords.

432. Cerium.

433. Chalk, unmanufactured.

434. Charcoal.

435. Chicory root, raw, dried, or undried, but unground.

436. Cider.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend by striking out paragraph 436.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

437. Civet, crude.

438. Chromate of iron or chromic ore.

439. Clay—common blue clay in casks, suitable for the manufacture of crucibles.

440. Clays or earths, unwrought or unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

441. Coal, anthracite, bituminous, and shale, and coal slack or culm.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words "bituminous, and shale, and coal slack or culm," and insert after the word "anthracite" the words "and coal stores of American vessels, but none shall be unloaded."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was in error a few moments ago in moving to strike out paragraph 425 and paragraph 436. Both of those paragraphs should remain in the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the pending amendment is disposed of the Senator can move to reconsider. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to paragraph 441.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to inquire if paragraph 422 was stricken out of the free list?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to reconsider the vote by which that was done, and that that paragraph be restored to the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves to reconsider the vote by which paragraph 422 was stricken out. Is there objection? If not objected to, the motion will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to restore paragraph 425, which was striken out by mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to restore paragraph 425. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not mean to object to the action, but I do object to its being done by unanimous consent. I have no doubt the majority of the Senate will restore it, but I do not desire to have it understood that it was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I move to restore paragraph 425. To be strictly parliamentary, I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the paragraph was stricken out.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to the process by which it is done.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well; then I move to restore the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves to restore to the bill paragraph 425, which was stricken out. If there be no objection, the motion will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see why that should be struck from the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The principal reason is because we intend to put it on the free list.

Mr. HALE. What is the force of the brackets inclosing that paragraph?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We had given notice of an intention to propose a tax of 2 cents a head on cabbages, and then it would have been proper to strike cabbages from the free list; but in going over the bill for the moment the matter had passed from my mind, and I had forgotten the fact that we had not offered the amendment to tax cabbages; and therefore it should properly be on the free list. I had cabbages stricken from the free list, and this is a proposition to restore them to the free list.

Mr. HALE. The final action is as the House sent it to us.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; to leave cabbages free.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. There is objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to restore paragragh 436 in the same way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to reconsider the vote by which paragraph 436 was stricken from the free list.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendments to strike out paragraphs 422, 425, and 436 are withdrawn.

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And they are restored to the free list.

Mr. PLATT. Not without objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. By a vote of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By a vote of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it so appear.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to restore the three paragraphs named to the free list. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it and they are restored.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to speak on the motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I suppose we had better have another vote on this amendment.

The statement of the Senator from Arkansas, who inadvertently allowed these two articles to be stricken from the free list, was distressingly intelligible. It indicated that the Senator still adhered to his abandonment of his amendment upon page 45 of the bill, which gave some little encouragement to those of us who are interested in maintaining the duty on agricultural products. There it stands at the head of page 45, reported on May 7:

Broom corn, $6 per ton.
Cabbages, 2 cents each.
Cider, 3 cents per gallon.
Eggs, 3 cents per dozen.
Eggs, yolk of, 15 per cent ad valorem.

There it stands; and there it stood for several weeks, and the hearts of the agriculturists of the country were encouraged by the hope that these little duties, which protected our farmers on the Northern frontier from immediate competition with the farmers of the Dominion, would be retained; but when the paragraph was reached, the Senator from Arkansas receded from his promise; he did not gratify us by the entertainment to which we had been apparently invited during all these weeks. I had hoped when I saw the Senator from Arkansas allow these paragraphs on the free list to be stricken out, that he had reached the conclusion that duties should be imposed upon the articles named in them.

Alas! Mr. President, I was mistaken. There they stand on pages 96 and 97, surrounded by encouraging black marks. Cabbages and cider were to go out of the free list, and of course the Senator from Arkansas intended to move to put a duty upon them; but in a moment again our hopes were dashed, as they have been many times before. I understand the Senator has relented on eggs, and that this forenoon eggs were made dutiable, I think at 3 cents a dozen.

Mr. HALE. Made dutiable for the day.

Mr. CHANDLER. They were made dutiable this morning at 3 cents a dozen; and I tremble now with fear that one or the other of the two Senators in charge of the bill will rise and withdraw the concession, and strike them out. But I understand that of all that tantalizing list of five commodities on page 45, we are to be gratified by being treated to only one of them, "eggs, 3 cents per dozen," whilst broom corn, cabbages, cider, and the yolks of eggs are not to be made dutiable.

Mr. President, I suppose we shall have to submit to this fitfulness on the part of the Senator from Arkansas, but I do hope he will be more tractable when he comes to other various items in this bill, and not tantalize us, as he has done, both when we were considering the duty upon eggs and the articles we have just now been considering on the free list, by leading us to suppose that he has some idea of protecting these agricultural products, and then, suddenly changing his mind, withdrawing his concessions and plunging us and the farmers along the Canadian border into the extreme depths of despondency, into which they are cast by this last and, I fear, unrelenting mood of the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to reconsider the vote by which the paragraphs referred to were stricken from the bill as agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rose to speak, and as I rose there was a request, which I heard, for a vote from two or three Senators. I ask for a division myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be again put. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to reconsider the vote by which paragraph "422, broom corn," was stricken from the free list.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is equivalent to a call for the yeas and nays. We may as well have the yeas and nays, and qe done with it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I withhold my vote for the present, as I do not see him in the Chamber.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MCLAURIN (after voting in the affirmative). I announced a transfer of my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. As the Senator from South Carolina has entered the Chamber and voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] and vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLABKBURN], who is absent. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. In order that there may be no misapprehension, I now announce that the pair between the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] will stand, unless the Senator from North Dakota reappears in the Chamber during the day.

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and I withdraw my vote, having voted inadvertently.

Mr. PERKINS. Under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] I am now at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Irby,	Pasco,
Bate,	Gibson,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Berry,	Gordon,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,

Davis,	McPherson,	Roach,
Dixon,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Dubois,	Mills.	Smith.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion to reconsider the vote striking from the free list paragraph "425. Cabbages."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. A motion was made to strike this article from the free list. That was carried, and I moved to reconsider the vote by which it was carried, and that the article be restored to the free list. As I understand, there is nothing more to do, the whole thing is accomplished.

Mr. HARRIS. The various paragraphs are disposed of by the vote just taken.

Mr. LODGE. Has paragraph 436 been disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the motion of the Senator from Arkansas referred to paragraph 435.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Arkansas distinctly stated that he made the motion in respect to the several paragraphs named, including paragraph 436.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And it was so stated by the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I think not. I heard the statement of the Chair, and I noticed that the statement when the vote was put was only on paragraph 425.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Chair distinctly stated that my motion was to reconsider the vote by which paragraphs 422, 425, and 436 were stricken from the free list; and on that the vote was taken.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a separate vote on paragraph 422, and then a separate vote on paragraph 425. Paragraph 436 has not been voted upon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator desires to go back and take these things up and consume time, I have no objection, and we can not help ourselves; we are powerless. I asked unanimous consent not to be required to go through the form at the time and it was agreed to, and then I made the same request as to all the paragraphs I named.

Mr. HALE. The Senator undoubtedly did that; but when the Chair put the motion he followed the parliamentary rule of only putting it as applicable to one paragraph, 422.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not notice the language used by the Chair, but I did notice what the Senator from Arkansas said.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I happened to be occupying the chair at the time this action was had. I understood, when the vote came to be taken, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] objected and insisted that instead of its being done in a bunch as to all three, it must be done in accordance with parliamentary rules, and I did so state that the motion was to reconsider the vote by which paragraph 422 was stricken from the free list.

Mr. HALE. That is my recollection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. VILAS. Previous to that time the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] had asked that the three paragraphs should be considered as restored, and that I put as one request; but it being objected to when the vote was taken, I felt bound to put the vote, according to the parliamentary rule, as to the particular paragraph.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I shall not make any motion as to paragraphs 425 and 436 at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

442. Coke.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

443. Coal tar, crude, and all preparations and products of coal tar, not colors or dyes, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 4, after the word "tar," I move to insert the word "crude," and in the same line, after the word "preparations," to insert "except medicinal coal-tar preparations."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 443, line 4, after the word "tar," it is proposed to insert "crude," and in the same line, after the word "preparations," to insert "except medicinal coal-tar preparations;" so as to make the paragraph read:

443. Coal tar, crude and all preparations except medicinal coal-tar preparations and products of coal tar, not colors or dyes, not specially provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

444. Cobalt and cobalt ore, and oxide of cobalt.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "ore," I move to strike out the words, "and oxide of cobalt."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

445. Cocculus indicus.
446. Cochineal.
447. Cocoa, or cacao, crude, and fiber, leaves, and shells of.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 447, after the word "crude," to strike out "and fiber."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

448. Coffee.
449. Coins, gold, silver, and copper.
450. Coir and coir yarn.
451. Copper imported in the form of ores.
452. Old copper, fit only for manufacture, clipping from new copper, and all composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value not specially provided for in this act.
453. Copper, regulus of, and black or coarse copper, and copper cement.
454. Copper in plates, bars, ingots, or pigs, and other forms, not manufactured, not specially provided for in this act.
455. Copperas, or sulphate of iron.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that paragraph 455 may be passed over in the hope that the committee will conclude to report an amendment in favor of placing a small duty upon copperas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the paragraph be passed over by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Secretary read as follows:

456. Coral, marine, uncut, and unmanufactured.
457. Cork wood or cork bark, unmanufactured, or cut into squares or cubes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 1, after the word "unmanufactured," I move to strike out the words "or cut into squares or cubes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

458. Cotton and cotton waste or flocks.
459. Cotton ties of iron or steel cut to lengths, punched or not punched, with or without buckles, for bailing cotton.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out paragraph 459.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to strike out paragraph 459, which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

460. Cryolite, or kryolith.
461. Cudbear.
462. Curling stones, or quoits, and curling-stone handles.
463. Curry, and curry powder.
464. Cutch.
465. Cuttlefish bone.
466. Dandelion roots, raw, dried, or undried, but unground.
467. Glaziers and engravers' diamonds not set, and diamond dust or bort, and jewels to be used in the manufacture of watches or clocks.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment at the beginning of the paragraph to strike out the word "glaziers'" and insert "diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut, including miners', glaziers';" so as to make the paragraph read:

467. Diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut, including miners', glaziers', and engravers' diamonds not set, and diamond dust or bort, and jewels to be used in the manufacture of watches or clocks.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to allow that paragraph to be passed over with the other on that subject, which has been passed over, and we will take up the two together. One might be dependent upon the other. I am not ready to take up the question now, but ask that it be passed over for the time being. It will only occupy a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] ask for a vote on his amendment?

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the vote may be taken upon the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator insist on asking for the vote now? Is he not willing to accede to the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that the paragraph be passed over?

Mr. PEFFER. I have no objection to letting it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

468. Dividivi.
469. Dragon's blood.
470. Drugs, such as barks, beans, berries, balsams, buds, bulbs, bulbous roots, excrescences, fruits, flowers, dried fibers, dried insects, grains, gums and gum resin, herbs, leaves, lichens, mosses, nuts, roots and stems, spices, vegetables, seeds aromatic, seeds of morbid growth, weeds, and woods used expressly for dyeing; any of the foregoing which are not edible, whether crude or advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding, or by other process of manufacture, and not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. VEST. In paragraph 470, line 25, after the word "foregoing," I move to insert the word "drugs."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same paragraph, line 1, on page 100, after the word "edible," I move to strike out the words "whether crude or," and insert "and which have not been."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

471. Eggs and yolks of, and eggs of birds, fish, and insects.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At the beginning of the paragraph I move to strike out the words "Eggs and yolks of, and;" so that the paragraph will read:

Eggs of birds, fish, and insects.

Mr. LODGE. When the question of eggs was discussed some little time ago I think it was generally agreed in the Senate that we should prevent as far as possible the importation of the eggs of game birds, especially of wild ducks, whose nests, principally in Canada, have been largely destroyed by the opening of our market to them. The Canadian Parliament passed a law to prevent the destruction of the nests, which would lead to the extermination of all those species of birds. I offer now an amendment, which I have submitted to the committee, and which meets with the approval of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], to add at the end of line 6:

Provided, however, That this shall not be held to include the eggs of game birds, the importation of which is prohibited, except specimens for scientific collections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

472. Emery ore.
473. Ergot.
474. Common palm leaf fans, and palm leaf unmanufactured.
475. Farina.
476. Fashion plates, engraved on steel or copper or on wood, colored or plain.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to strike out paragraph 476.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, to strike out paragraph 476.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

477. Feathers and downs for beds, and feathers and downs of all kinds, crude or not dressed, colored, or manufactured, not specially provided for in this act.
478. Feldspar.
479. Felt, adhesive, for sheathing vessels.
480. Fibrin, in all forms.
481. Fish, frozen or packed in ice fresh.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let paragraph 481 be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Paragraph 481 will be passed over if there be no objection. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

482. Fish and bait.
483. Fish skins.
484. Flint, flints, and ground flint stones.
485. Floor matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commonly known as Chinese matting.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 485.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to this paragraph.

Mr. VEST. The amendment is withdrawn. Chinese matting is restored to the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

486. Fossils.
487. Fruit plants, tropical and semitropical, for the purpose of propagation or cultivation.

Fruits and nuts:

488. Dates.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 488, in the following words:

488. Dates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

489. Fruits, green, ripe, or dried not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. ALLISON. I see there is an amendment marked in the bill. What becomes of it?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Bananas are included in paragraph 489.

Fruits, green, ripe, or dried not specially provided for in this act.

Pineapples are put on the dutiable list in paragraph 213*b*.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

490. Tamarinds.
491. Cocoanuts, Brazil nuts, cream nuts, palm nuts, and palm-nut kernels.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in paragraph 491, after the word "cocoanuts," to strike out "Brazil nuts, cream nuts."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment. I move to strike out the word "cocoanuts," before the word "Brazil," and at the end of the paragraph to insert "not otherwise provided for;" so as to make the paragraph read:

491. Brazil nuts, cream nuts, palm nuts, and palm-nut kernals, not otherwise provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph as follows:

492. Furs, undressed—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert after the words "undressed" in line 13, the words, "dressed fur pieces suitable only for use in the manufacture of hatters' fur," so as to read:

Furs, undressed; dressed fur pieces suitable only for use in the manufacture of hatters' fur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

493. Fur skins of all kinds not dressed in any manner.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 494, in the following words:

494. Gambier.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the committee were to withdraw the amendment. There certainly is no reason for restoring gambier to the dutiable list.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Secretary read as follows:

495. Glass, broken, and old glass, which can not be cut for use, and fit only to be remanufactured.
496. Glass plates or disks, rough-cut or unwrought, for use in the manufacture of optical instruments, spectacles, and eyeglasses, and suitable only for such use. Provided, however, That such disks exceeding 8 inches in diameter may be polished sufficiently to enable the character of the glass to be determined.

Grasses and fibers:

497. Istle or Tampico fiber, jute, jute butts, manila, sisal grass, sunn, flax straw, flax not hackled, tow of flax or hemp, hemp not hackled, hemp, flax, jute, and tow wastes, and all other textile grasses or fibrous vegetable substances, unmanufactured or undressed, not specially provided for in this act.
498. Gold-beaters' molds and gold-beaters' skins.
499. Grease and oils, such as are commonly used in soap making or in wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather, and which are fit only for such uses, not specially provided for in this act.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 499, line 11, after the word "uses," to insert "and cod oil;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Grease and oils, such as are commonly used in soap-making, or in wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather, and which are fit only for such uses, and cod oil, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have an explanation of the amendment. I do not see why cod oil, unless it is suitable only for dressing leather, should be admitted free of duty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand it is used by leather-dressers. I see no reason why it should not be admitted free of duty. It is a product, as I understand, which can not be put to any other than mechanical uses. It is a cheap product which is used by leather-makers.

Mr. ALDRICH. All fish oils are made dutiable by the bill, and cod oil itself is made dutiable at 15 per cent ad valorem, if I remember aright.

Mr. HARRIS. This paragraph provides for oils "not specially provided for in this act."

Mr. ALDRICH. I cannot quite understand——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island will find a provision making cod oil dutiable.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I will. I will call attention to it in a moment. By the paragraph at the the top of page 6, as I remember the final action of the Senate, cod-liver oil was made dutiable at 10 per cent or 15 per cent.

Mr. VEST. It was stricken out in lines 2 and 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that that clause was stricken out.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can see no reason why cod oil should be treated differently from other oils. Cod oil is an important product of the American fisheries, and I can see no reason why foreign fishermen should be allowed to import their cod oil free of duty any more than any other oil. If there is any reason I should be glad to have the Senator from Arkansas state it.

Mr. VEST. Paragraph 499 in part says:

Grease and oils, such as are commonly used in soap-making or wire-drawing or for stuffing or dressing leather.

The customs officials said that that did not include cod oil, and there should be a specific provision if we intended to admit it free. Therefore it was inserted, and also because it was represented to us that it was exceedingly important to this industry that it should be specifically named.

Mr. ALDRICH. What industry asked to have it done?

Mr. VEST. The leather dressers.

Mr. ALDRICH. Did the leather dressers ask for this amendment?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. I have not received any such request. I suppose I represent the largest leather dressing community in the United States, and the same is true as to cod oil. I have not received any such request.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to cod oil being put in the paragraph? We do not care anything about it.

Mr. HOAR. I was asking where the request came from.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. From leather dressers.

Mr. HOAR. What leather dressers asked for it, and where are they located?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not give the names. There were a number. It was stated that there was difficulty in distinguishing this, which is a common oil used by leather dressers, from other oils provided for in the paragraph; that there was difficulty in separating the two.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri asked me whether I objected to the amendment. The subject is entirely new to me. I am surprised that I should not have received some communication on the subject, if any change is desired.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. If the Senators representing these large leather interests think that this is an inimical movement to them let us understand it. We were under the impression that this is an article necessary in the dressing of leather and that we were doing something in the interest of leather manufacturers, making boots and shoes cheaper, by furnishing them their raw material free of duty. If we have made a mistake about it we want to know it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri says they are doing something for the leather manufacturers.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that the first words in this clause cover entirely the oils which are used for these specific purposes. It says "grease and oils, such as are commonly used * * * for stuffing or dressing leather." I do not see why this fish oil, a product of Northern fisheries, should be singled out from all others and placed upon the free list. As far as the request of leather dressers and persons engaged in the leather trade go, I think my colleague and myself represent in our State as large an industry of that sort as any in the United States. I have not heard a single word from any human being in regard to it, but I have had a great many letters from the men engaged in the fisheries expressing the greatest possible anxiety as to all the products of those fisheries. I do not see why cod oil is put in the paragraph. It is not put in as an oil simply for dressing leather, but it is put in generally. It is selected out of all the fish oils and made free in this paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. VEST. I merely wish to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that if he will turn to page 62 of the testimony in regard to chemicals, taken before the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, he will find that it is the nature of this article that it should be used only for manufacturing purposes, and it is only so used.

Mr. ALDRICH. What page?

Mr. VEST. Page 62, under the head of cod oil.

This article was free when imported from Canada under the treaty of Washington, prior to the abrogation of certain articles of that treaty which provided for free entry of fish, etc.

* * * * * * * *

The cod oil used by tanners is made from cod livers and other offal of codfish.

Mr. ALDRICH. The statement to which the Senator refers is that of some man in Indiana. The dressing of leather in the State of Indiana is not a very large industry, I understand. It is a large industry in Massachusetts and in most of the New England States. The duties upon leather have been retained by the committee at the rates now existing under the McKinley law I think in every instance. I believe there has been no reduction in any article of leather in the entire bill. I suggest that it is unfair to the people engaged in the fisheries to take one of their principal products and make it free simply for the benefit of leather manufacturers or the men who are engaged in dressing leather when all the duties upon leather are maintained throughout the entire bill.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will turn to page 64 of the same document he will find that Mr. Frederic W. Clarke, of Boston, under date of September 19, 1893, reënforces the statement from which I read in regard to this product.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to the committee, if they mean to insist upon the amendment as to cod oil, that they put it in line 9 after the words "grease and oils," so that it will read "grease and oils and cod oil, such as are commonly used," etc., so as to confine it to the leather use which they say is the reason for its being on the free list. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he sees any objection to changing the place?

Mr. VEST. I did not hear the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, as there is so much talk in the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator has it now, cod oil is made free for all uses. I understand the Senator's object in putting it on the free list is to have it free for the special uses enumerated. Would there be any objection to placing it in the ninth line—

Grease and oils, such as are commonly used, etc.

Mr. VEST. I do not see how it would be practicable for the customs officials to follow the article to its uses.

Mr. LODGE. The transposition I suggest would make it free for the uses for which the Senator desires to make it free. As it is now worded, he makes it free for every possible use.

Mr. VEST. It would be utterly impossible for the customs officials to follow it, as I stated, into its uses. All we can do is to take the evidence before us that it is only used for this purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Missouri why it is more difficult for the officials to make this distinction in the case of cod oil than with other oils. There must be some standard of defining the other oils which have specific uses. Why cod oil alone should be singled out I can not understand.

Mr. VEST. Because there has been some difficulty in regard to including it with the other oils which are used in the dressing of leather. As we intended to put upon the free list all the oils which are used by the leather manufacturers, when they asked us to specify cod oil, so that there could be no mistake about it, we saw no objection.

Mr. LODGE. The proposition which I make leaves cod oil free for all the uses of the leather dressers. It simply keeps it on the dutiable list when employed for other uses.

Mr. VEST. It is utterly impossible to follow it to its use.

Mr. HALE. If the object is, as the language of the paragraph indicates, to put on the free list only such oils as are commonly used in soap-making or in wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather, and which are fit only for such uses, there is no use to put cod oil in at all, because the language is very sweeping and embracing. It says "grease and oils"—that includes cod oil as much as any other oil—"such as are commonly used." As the Senator from Massachusetts says, while the clause generally confines the free admission of oil to a particular branch of human industry, by putting cod oil at the end and after other oils have been named, it admits it free for every purpose. Why does the Senator put cod oil in at all? Why is it not embraced in the words "grease and oils?"

Mr. VEST. I suppose cod oil may be used for some other purpose than dressing leather.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator want to amplify this branch? These oils are put in for a direct purpose, as stated, to be used in soap-making, or wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather and fit only for such purposes. It is not a general clause admitting all oils free, but only oils for certain purposes. Now, the reason and purpose of the clause are entirely departed from when at the end, after making the restriction, you put in "cod oil" and place no restriction upon it.

Mr. VEST. Suppose we strike out the word "and," and say "including cod oil."

Mr. HALE. It would then read:

Such as are commonly used in soap-making or in wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather, and which are fit only for such uses, including cod oil for such uses.

Mr. HOAR. It had better come in after the word "oils," "grease and oils, including cod oil."

Mr. HALE. That is the proper place if it is to be put in at all. I do not see that it is necessary to put it in.

Mr. VEST. Put it in in line 9, after the word "oils."

Mr. HALE. "Grease and oils"——

Mr. VEST. "Grease and oils, including cod oil, such as are commonly used," etc.

Mr. HOAR. That is better.

Mr. HALE. That will do.

Mr. VEST. Then I withdraw the committee amendment, and move to insert "including cod oil," after the word "oils," in line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated—

The SECRETARY. After the word "oils," in line 9, insert:

"Including cod oil."

So as to make the paragraph read:

499. Grease and oils, including cod oil, such as are commonly used in soap-making or in wire-drawing, or for stuffing or dressing leather, and which are fit only for such uses, not specially provided for in this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I asked the Senate a moment ago to pass over paragraph 481, "fish, frozen or packed in ice, fresh." I had mislaid an amendment sent me by the Secretary of the Treasury, which I wish to offer in connection with that paragraph, or rather as a substitute for it. I send it to the desk now to be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 481 and insert:

481. Whenever the President shall be satisfied that the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland have provided for the admission free of duty into the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland of fish oil, whale oil, seal oil, and fish of all kinds, except fish preserved in oil, being the produce of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of the United States, as well as the usual and necessary casks, barrels, kegs, cans, and other usual and necessary coverings containing the products above mentioned, and that the said Governments of Canada and Newfoundland accord to United States fishing vessels, by annual licenses, free of charge, the privilege of entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland for the following purposes, namely:

I. The purchase of provisions, bait, ice, seines, lines, and all other supplies and outfits, provided that such supplies, with the exception of bait, shall not be obtained by barter.

II. Transshipment and transportation of catch by any means of conveyance.

III. Shipping of crews.

He shall issue his proclamation declaring the same, and thereafter fish oil, whale oil, seal oil, and fish of all kinds, except fish preserved in oil, being the produce of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of Canada and Newfoundland, including Labrador, and the usual and necessary coverings of the same as above described, shall be admitted into the United States free of duty, and the fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland shall have and enjoy like privileges and immunities on the Atlantic coast of the United States as have then been accorded to the fishing vessels of the United States by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if this amendment is to be acted upon by the Senate I shall feel it my duty to ask its postponement in order that I may prepare myself with some authorities to address the Senate at length upon the subject. It is a matter which, in my judgment, is foreign entirely to the purpose of the bill. It brings up the great question in our foreign relations, whether we will consent under any circumstances or upon any terms to purchase of Canada the ordinary hospitalities for our fishing vessels to which we are entitled under the law of nations as modified in modern times.

By the treaty of 1818 we secured some special and conditional and restricted title to a brief hospitality, but that was at a time when American vessels were not admitted into the colonial ports of Great Britain for any commercial purpose whatever, and there were special provisions for a recognition of the title to the hospitality of the fishermen engaged in their dangerous and adventurous pursuit. Canada of late years has insisted that when all other vessels have the entire and complete hospitality which modern civilization exacts, the fishing vessels shall still be restricted to the provisions of the treaty of 1818 and that that shall be still a definition of what they shall receive.

Mr. President, if I had my way, if I had the honor to be clothed with the executive powers, including those which have been recently and expressly for that very purpose conferred upon the President of the United States, I should say at once that there should not be a Canadian vessel of any kind admitted into one of our Atlantic ports or into any other port in this country until the complete hospitalities which decency requires, the power of refitting, the power of repairing vessels, the power of getting supplies, and the right to tarry at their convenience for an unlimited time, were granted to all our fishing vessels.

But that is a great question. It would involve the discussion of a history extending back to a time prior to the Declaration of Independence; prior to the treaty of 1783. It would involve reviewing the whole history of the transactions which led to the war of 1812; the transactions which led to the peace of 1815, and the commercial treaty of 1818. I shall detain the Senate for but a moment, because I know the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas, but it is due to my constituents that I should say what I am saying.

There is another great question which is connected with this matter, entirely foreign to a tariff bill. That is as to the expediency of maintaining and protecting by these duties upon fish and the products of fish, the fishermen of Gloucester and Provincetown and the few Maine ports that engage in the same industry as a nursery for seamen.

When the fishery treaty negotiated by Mr. Secretary Bayard was before the Senate five or six years ago it was discussed for several weeks, and the discussion turned upon the point which I have just suggested and upon this other point to which I am now speaking. Admiral Porter wrote a letter addressed to me, which was read in the debate here and will be found in the RECORD, in which he declared that the importance of our New Foundland bank fisheries as a nursery for seamen was never so great as it had been since the substitution of steam for sails as the motive power for naval vessels.

You do not find men familiar with boat craft, you do not find men familiar with the waters of the Atlantic coast, you do not find men who are familiar with the constant changeable dangers which attend navigation and which attend especially naval warfare, except those who are especially trained in these fisheries. That gave great value to the Norsemen and the other men of the northern nations of Europe who enlisted in our naval service, but we can not depend in war on a ship's crew which is not made up certainly in a large part of Americans who love the flag and who were born under it.

Therefore, Mr. President, if we abandon the doctrine of the protection of our fisheries, we shall have to spend much larger sums, larger by millions upon millions, in establishing institutions for the training of seamen for our naval service. I believe my honorable friend from Arkansas, whatever opinion he may form as to the merits of this amendment, will agree with me in thinking that it belongs on a separate measure in regard to which other policies may be considered, and not on a tariff bill, whether for revenue or protection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say a word. I shall not detain the Senate more than a moment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I only wanted to withdraw the amendment, but of course I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I did not wish to discuss the amendment. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that this is a matter of most vital interest to our people, and that we should feel obliged to discuss it at considerable length and could not help doing so. Our people believe, as I believe, that it involves the whole question of giving up their rights in consideration of certain tariff advantages.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Arkansas withdraw the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I rose for that purpose. I was going to say in connection with it that the Secretary of the Treasury sent me the amendment, and I know his idea was that it would be entirely acceptable. I had no idea of pressing it unless it was generally acceptable in the Senate. But as Senators on the other side have indicated opposition to it, I withdraw it. Paragraph 481 has been read, I believe, and I offered this as a substitute for it. I now withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. There is so much confusion in the Chamber I can not hear what is going on. Do I understand the Senator to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what I did, unless the Senator from Maine wishes to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad the Senator from Arkansas has withdrawn it. It certainly could not have been disposed of without several hours of discussion. I desire to move to amend paragraph 481 by striking out the paragraph and inserting the present law. Has the Senator from Arkansas a substitute for the paragraph?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offered as a substitute for paragraph 481 what was read at the desk. I have now withdrawn the amendment and offered no other amendment to the paragraph, unless somebody else wishes to make——

Mr. HALE. Then I propose the amendment which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 481 in the following words:

481. Fish, frozen or packed in ice fresh.

And insert in lieu thereof:

481. Fish, the product of American fisheries, and fresh or frozen fish (except salmon) caught in fresh waters by American vessels, or with nets or other devices owned by citizens of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator whether what he moves is the present law?

Mr. HALE. It is the present law exactly. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to let this paragraph be passed for the moment. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] desires to be here when it is considered, and I have sent for him. The reading of the bill can proceed, and we can go back to the paragraph afterwards.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Maine. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

500. Guano, manures, and all substances expressly used for manure.
501. Gunny bags and gunny cloths, old or refuse, fit only for remanufacture.
502. Guts, salted.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 502.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

503. Gutta-percha, crude.
504. Hair of horse, cattle, and other animals, cleaned or uncleaned, drawn or undrawn, and curled hair suitable for beds or mattresses, not specially provided for in this act; and human hair, raw, uncleaned, and not drawn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 504, line 20, I move to strike out "and curled hair suitable for beds or mattresses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

505. Hides and skins, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to strike out paragraph 505. I propose this amendment because leather and manufactures of leather, which are made of hides, are dutiable, and I think hides ought to be dutiable also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

506. Hide cuttings, raw, with or without hair, and all other glue stock.
507. Hide rope.
508. Hones and whetstones.
509. Hoofs, unmanufactured.
510. Hop roots for cultivation.
511. Horns, and parts of, unmanufactured, including horn strips and tips.

Mr. QUAY. I move to strike out the concluding words in lines 7 and 8, "including horn strips and tips."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 511, line 7, after the word "unmanufactured," strike out "including horn strips and tips;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Horns, and parts of, unmanufactured.

Mr. QUAY. The argument for the amendment is very succinctly stated in a circular letter which I have received, and which I ask may be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. QUAY. No; let it be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, which is as follows:

NEW YORK, April 5, 1894.

The Hon. M. S. QUAY,
Senate of the United States:

Your attention is respectfully called to an inconsistency in the present tariff bill regarding the duty on horn strips, this article being admitted free of duty while other articles manufactured of horn pay a duty of 25 per cent.

The manufacture of horn strips or "French horn" was first begun in the city of Paris in about 1870. At present there are twelve manufactories of this article located in the city of Paris, four in the suburbs, and one on the Rhine. Two of these concerns, to wit, Bonzanes Freres and Roux Brunean & Co., employ between them nearly seven thousand hands, exporting to all parts of the world, using for the short strips the horn of the cattle of France and for the very large strips the horn of the cattle of India and the Argentine Republic.

Section 511, free list of the tariff bill at present before the Senate, provides for "horns and parts of, unmanufactured, including horn strips and tips."

This paragraph in the act of 1883 read: "Horns and parts of, unmanufactured, and horn strips and tips."

In the act of 1890 it was intended to limit the provision to unmanufactured horn strips and tips, but in administration it has been so construed as to admit the manufactured article free of duty. No objection was raised to this; on the contrary, the parties principally interested—manufacturers of corsets—were instrumental in having this construction placed upon the clause, as no one had ever been successful in manufacturing the same in this country up to that time. The only concern that had endeavored to do so was the firm of M. Cohn & Co., Twenty-sixth street and Seventh avenue, New York, who state that they sunk over $100,000 in the attempt. In 1892 the Empire Horn Company was established for the manufacture of this same article, the superintendent, Charles Efras, having been for a number of years a manufacturer of strips in France. They made an excellent article and had orders from such concerns in this city as Dickerhoff, Balfour & Co., Tefft, Weller & Co., Sweetser, Pembrook & Co., Ehrich Bros., Spelman Bros., C. B. Rouss, Mills & Gibbs, etc. They also had orders from various corset manufacturers. It was admitted that the goods that they turned out were in all respects equal to those manufactured abroad.

But as they accepted orders at the quotations of the foreigners and were unable to procure labor in this country as low as is paid for the same in France, they succumbed to the inevitable and were sold out under foreclosure in August, 1893, having been about one year in existence. The plant of machinery, which is yet standing, cost over $50,000. It is held intact by the present owners in hopes that Congress will recognize this question and allow them a reasonable duty, the same as is laid on or covers other articles manufactured of horn. The Empire Horn Company was located at 15, 17, 19 Hope street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and is still there, although not in operation.

Another concern, known as the Franco-American Horn Manufacturing Company, with an office at 108 Cliff street, this city, formerly, were also manufacturers of the article in question, and were in 1892-'93 located at the corner of Roebling and Hope streets, Brooklyn. They likewise found that they could not compete with foreign labor, and were sold out under foreclosure, the machinery, etc., being now owned by a party named Philip Lewinski, 12 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn.

The Empire Horn Company had at one time in its employ about 500 people, the Franco-American about 200.

About 80 per cent of the cost of manufactured horn strips is represented by labor.

The cost of the horn of cattle varies, and at present runs from 2½ cents to 15 cents per pound. Of the horns of American cattle the comb and umbrella manufacturers utilize the tips; the principal part of the balance goes to waste. It is estimated that if the introduction of the manufacture of horn strips were permitted in this country, with the development of the industry the value of American horn, especially of the long-horned cattle of Texas, would be increased threefold. The French manufacturers use for short strips the horn of native cattle, and for extra long strips, 15 to 24 inches, the horn of cattle from India and South America.

The manufacture of what is known in the trade as "horn strips" or "French horn" is a simple process, as will be noticed from the following description of the same, requiring principally a thorough soaking in chemically prepared vats, cutting and polishing, or, in other words, loosening the fiber and then straightening it out.

In making what is known as horn strips no less than twenty-four operations are required and fully six weeks' time, the following being the necessary operations:

1. Sawing the rough horn into long strips, and
2. Cutting off the tips.
3. Cleaning and rubbing off the hair from inside of the horn.
4. Washing and cleansing the same.
5. Keeping it in a tank of chemically prepared water, it remaining there from ten days to two weeks, according to the age of the horn.
6. Drying.
7. Planing off the rough edges.
8. Placing in tank of chemically prepared water—strongest solution—and remaining there from three to five weeks.
9. Keeping in ovens and baking it on an average of three days.
10. Placing each strip under hydraulic and steam pressure.
11. Cutting it into thin strips.
12. Using machines and squaring the edges.
13. Planing and finishing strips to a smooth surface.
14. Polishing the same with buffs.
15. Washing the same.
16. Inserting in chemically prepared sawdust.
17. Washing again.
18. Drilling the holes.
19. Soaking in oil.
20. Drying in sawdust.
21. Polishing again.
22. Counting.
23. Tying, and
24. Packing.

This manufactured horn is admitted by the manufacturers of corsets to be a splendid substitute for whalebone; but the lower price of labor in France is the only cause that it has not been successfully produced in this country.

Whalebone at the present market rate is worth about $5 per pound. It has been as high as $15 a pound and as low as $4. It is now used only by corset manufacturers on high-grade goods.

The relative cost of whalebone and manufactured horn strips is in the proportion of about one-fifth, or in other words, where 40 cents worth of the genuine whalebone is used, 8 cents is the cost of horn substituted.

The strips imported and intended primarily to be used in corsets are sold by the weight, the cost of importing same at present being $2 per kilo (2 pounds 4 ounces) for those 8 inches long. On the average, a thousand of these strips come in a kilo.

The maximum number of horn strips used in each corset made of those 8 inches long is between 32 and 40, which, according to the present rate, costs the manufacturer 7 cents all told. That would make the duty on the same, if the article was dutiable at 25 per cent, the same as other goods made of horn, less than 2 cents per corset—not enough to cut any figure when it is considered that the average selling price of great quantities of corsets used in this country is $15 per dozen, they being made and sold at all prices from as low as 50 cents to as high as $10 each. And thousands are employed in the manufacture of the same. Yet the corset manufacturers are opposed to the introduction of the manufacture of horn in this country, where thousands of hands could be given permanent employment.

There are practically, though, two classes of horn strips imported, those used as above for corsets, and another class which are commonly known as waist stays. These are used in the waists of dresses. The latter as a rule are highly polished, a little broader in width, have rounded ends, and holes drilled into them. They are counted into dozens, neatly wrapped, and packed in boxes, the cost of the latter being about 30 per cent more than the strips intended for corsets. Those made for corsets are in special widths, and plainly finished, being neither polished, oiled, nor drilled.

When the Treasury Department's attention was called a month or so ago to the fact that the horn strips mentioned in the free list was a manufactured article, and samples both of the raw horn and of horn strips at their various stages of production were shown them, they at once admitted that they were under the impression, and had always been, that horn strips and tips were simply the horn of cattle cut into large strips as a matter of convenience in importing.

The Treasury Department appeared never to have had any idea that the strips were in any way a manufactured article, and after investigating the matter they recommended to the subcommittee of the Finance Committee of the Senate that the clause "including horn strips and tips" be stricken out of what is known as the "Wilson bill," the principal point being the inconsistency of the same with another paragraph of the same act which imposed a duty of 25 per cent on manufactures of horn. It was also understood that completed knife handles have been admitted free, they being claimed to be tips of horn. There was no more reason or justice in admitting free horn strips and stays used in the manufacture of corsets, etc., than any other manufactured material. It is in other words simply giving additional protection to such special manufacturers. The raw material should be admitted free, as it is necessary to have the same for extra long strips. All the Empire Horn Company ask is that they be permitted to have an opportunity to make these goods by having some slight tariff discrimination against the European manufacturers. There is no justice in legislation in the interests of one manufacturer to the injury of another, and it is not believed that such is the idea of the framers of the new tariff bill.

There are to-day in France and on the German border between 12,000 and 15,000 workmen employed in manufacturing these horn strips. They sell their productions to all parts of the world. Between $300,000 and $400,000 worth, according to the values stated in the Customs Department, were imported by this country during the year 1893, all of which should have paid a duty. Should the Congress in its wisdom place this manufactured article amongst other manufactured articles of horn, there is no question that within a few months several thousand employés would be working at this industry, skilled labor not being necessary for 95 per cent of the manufacturing process, and as stated before, over 80 per cent of the cost is represented in labor.

The average daily wages of men employed in the factories of France run from 3 to 5 francs—60 cents to $1. If a duty of 25 per cent as on other manufactured articles of horn were placed on horn strips, this item would assure the success of the enterprise sufficiently to give employment, as stated before, to thousands of people, and a staple industry be introduced in this country.

The Treasury Department has recommended this alteration, as has also General Arpraiser Tichenor, who in a letter of recent date states that "there is no reason why the finished manufactured knife-handles or strips of horn should be admitted free of duty more than a button or any other manufacture of horn."

Paragraph 511 of the free list should be amended by striking out the words including "horn strips and tips."

Respectfully,

EMPIRE HORN COMPANY,
15, 17, 19 Hope Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
S. F. MYERS & CO.,
48 and 50 Maiden Lane, New York, N. Y.

Before the reading was concluded—

Mr. QUAY. I think the Secretary has read enough of the letter to indicate its purpose and argument. I will be satisfied with the printing of the letter in the RECORD without further reading. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will appear in full in the RECORD. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

512. Ice.
513. India rubber, crude, and milk of, and old scrap or refuse India rubber, which has been worn out by use and is fit only for remanufacture.
514. Indigo, and extracts or pastes of, and carmines.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out paragraph 514. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will let it go out.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Why?

Mr. ALDRICH. The article ought to be dutiable at 10 per per cent. All other extracts of dyewood are dutiable at 10 per cent, and I can see no reason why indigo should be treated differently.

Mr. VEST. It has been a very valuable article to the manufacturers of New England, although alazarin and coal-tar products have taken the place of it to a large extent. Yet it is still largely used.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will modify my amendment. I did not intend to strike out indigo. I modify the amendment so as to strike out all after the word "indigo."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 514, after the word "indigo," strike out "and extracts or pastes of, and carmines;" so as to read:

514. Indigo.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

515. Iodine, crude, and resublimed.
516. Ipecac.
517. Iridium.
518. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, and sulphur ore, as pyrites or sulphuret of iron in its natural state.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out paragraph 512.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. I do not like that way of passing over paragraphs of this sort. None of these paragraphs are stricken out without objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question to a vote. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Finance to strike out paragraph 518.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division on that question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is absent. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and therefore desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. CAREY. With the consent of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN. I vote "yea."

Mr. VEST. I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], which, as has already been announced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], stands transferred to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH] until he returns. I can therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I have arranged with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to exchange our pairs so that we can both vote. He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. GALLINGER. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. GEORGE. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. I have already announced my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I have a right to vote to make a quorum, and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Power,
Allison,	Daniel,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	George,	McLaurin,	Squire,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Teller,
Brice,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Murphy,	Vest,
Call,	Gray,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Carey,	Harris,	Patton,	Voorhees.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Perkins,

NAYS—4.

Allen,	Hill,	Kyle,	Peffer.

NOT VOTING—38.

Butler,	Hale,	Mills,	Shoup,
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Smith,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Coke,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Walsh,
Cullom,	Irby,	Palmer,	Washburn,
Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	White,
Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,	Wilson,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Frye,	Martin,	Roach,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

519. Ivory, sawed or cut into logs, but not otherwise manufactured, and vegetable ivory.
520. Jalap.

521. Jet, unmanufactured.
522. Joss stick, or joss light.
523. Junk, old.
524. Kelp.
525. Kieserite.
526. Kyanite, or cyanite, and kainite.
527. Lac-dye, crude, seed, button, stick, and shell.
528. Lac-spirits.
529. Lactarine.
530. Lard.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 530.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

531. Lava, unmanufactured.
532. Leeches.
533. Lemon juice, lime juice, and sour-orange juice.
534. Licorice root, unground.
535. Lifeboats and life-saving apparatus specially imported by societies incorporated or established to encourage the saving of human life.
536. Lime, citrate of.
537. Lime, chloride of, or bleaching powder.
538. Lithographic stones not engraved.
539. Litmus, prepared or not prepared.
540. Loadstones.
541. Madder and munjeet, or Indian madder, ground or prepared, and all extracts of.
542. Magnesia, sulphate of, or Epsom salts.
543. Magnesite, or native mineral carbonate of magnesia.
544. Magnesium.
545. Magnets.
546. Manganese, oxide and ore of.
547. Manna.
548. Manuscripts.
549. Marrow, crude.
550. Marsh mallows.
551. Medals of gold, silver, or copper, and other metallic articles manufactured as trophies or prizes, and actually received as honorary distinctions.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, after the word "received," in line 8, page 105, to insert "or bestowed and accepted;" so as to make the paragraph read:

551. Medals of gold, silver, or copper, and other metallic articles manufactured as trophies or prizes, and actually received or bestowed and accepted as honorary distinctions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

552. Mica, and metallic mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether he proposes to move the amendment which is stated in the print, to strike out:

And metallic mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the amendment indicated in the print?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That amendment will not be offered. The paragraph will be allowed to remain as it is.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to strike out the words "mica and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 552, before the word "metallic," strike out the words "mica and;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Metallic mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, mica is now dutiable at the rate of 35 per cent ad valorem. This mineral is produced in New Hampshire, North Carolina, and in other States of the Union. It is also a product of India. It is impossible to work the mica mines of New Hampshire and North Carolina in competition with the mica mines of India unless there is protection. Senators know very well what is the cost of labor in Asia. Five, 10, and 12 cents a day are the wages paid to the mica workers of India. A dollar, $1.25, $1.50, and $2 a day are the wages paid to American workers in mica.

The wages in North Carolina are undoubtedly lower than the wages paid in New Hampshire, but mica can not be mined profitably in either State if it is upon the free list. As I have said, there is now a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem on mica, and I have heard no reason stated by the committee why the duty should be removed. I may add that I do not expect to hear any statement.

Mr. President, this question was pretty thoroughly investigated in 1890, when the McKinley bill was passed. The investigation made by the House committee is contained in a volume entitled Tariff Hearings, Fifty-first Congress, first session, House Miscellaneous Documents, 1889–'90, volume 15, pages 1174 to 1186, inclusive.

I find by reference to that volume that addresses were made before the House committee. On page 1174 there is the statement of James M. Gere. Then follows the statement of Representative H. G. Ewart, from the Ninth North Carolina district; an additional statement of Mr. Gere; the statement of the Ruggles & Randall Mica Company, by Charles L. Randall, president; the statement of the Palermo Mica Company, of New York; the statement of George H. Randall; the statement of Mr. O. C. Moore, who then represented that district of New Hampshire in Congress; the statement of Mr. Frank H. Clark, representing the Thompson-Houston Electric Company, who opposed the duty in the interest of the manufacturers of dynamos; the statement of Mr. H. T. Richardson, 234 Wall street, New York; the statement of F. W. Webster, and the statement of W. H. Clough.

I recite the names of parties who appeared before the committee in order to show how fully the subject was considered by the House committee. The result was that the McKinley bill came to the Senate with a duty of 35 per cent upon mica. But the bill fell into unfriendly hands in the Committee on Finance, and that committee recommended that mica should be continued upon the free list. It was not considered with favor by the members of the committee, but the recommendation that mica should be placed upon the free list made by that committee was resisted in the Senate. Quite a debate took place, to which I shall briefly call attention. The subject was discussed on the 26th day of August, 1890. I find the report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 21, part 9, beginning on page 9166, where the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. BLAIR, my then colleague, made a very full recital of the facts connected with the mica industry. I read from his statement:

The mining of mica is an old and established industry in the United States. It has been pursued in my own State for at least sixty years, and in the State of North Carolina for many years, and in both it has been pursued profitably and to the advantage of the country. The mica deposits of our country are very extensive and to be found in at least all great sections of the country. They are extensive enough in my State to satisfy our entire consumption and any increased consumption that is likely to take place by reason of improvements in the arts. In the State of North Carolina the deposits are, to speak moderately, immense. There is a single county in North Carolina where the deposits, of a most excellent quality and various qualities, are sufficient probably to supply the world.

Senator BLAIR also states that mica is to be found in New York, all through the Alleghany range, in both the Virginias, and South Carolina, and then says:

If I remember aright, there are deposits in Texas, certainly extensive deposits in the Dakotas, where we have, as we know, a vast deposit of tin also.

But it is an old and an established industry which has been pursued with somewhat of profit and to the supply of the entire country until within a very few years. By reason of the entire absence of foreign competition it has always been an article placed upon the free list until about the year 1882, when extensive deposits were discovered in India, and since that time the mining industry has been pursued there with, as the data which I have before me show, labor at 50 cents per month, plus the little cotton cloth to be used as apparel; and in esthetic New Hampshire our kind of people have been called upon to pursue this industry with mica on the free list in competition with that sort of servile labor. The result has been that the industry in New Hampshire and the industry in North Carolina have been paralyzed and substantially destroyed.

At the present day over four-fifths of the mica used in the country is imported. It is brought here in the form of ballast in ships. It costs next to nothing where these mines are located, and is of course a very much reduced article in price, so that the domestic industry is destroyed.

The Senator subsequently stated that mica has also been discovered in Siberia and that vessels are bringing the Siberian mica to the United States mined by the convict labor of the Russian Empire.

Thereupon the present Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] gave some slight encouragement that a duty might be placed upon mica, and asked that the amendment might be passed over without prejudice and the discussion ended for that day.

The consideration of the paragraph came up again on the 4th day of September, 1890. The debate is to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 21, part 10, beginning on page 9724, where Senator BLAIR again stated the case and said that the taking off of the duty on mica of 25 per cent ad valorem, which had been placed upon it prior to 1883, had ruined the industry. I read from his remarks:

Now, I want to say in regard to this industry that the entire amount of mica consumed is between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars' worth. A single mine in New England properly worked would produce at least half a million a year. There are thirteen mines in our State (only one or two of them are now in operation) that have been in operation until the circumstances of the last few years to which I have alluded. Something like seventy existed in the State of North Carolina. Over thirty have been worked in the course of the last ten or twelve years, and so far as I know not a single one of them is now in operation; or certainly only one or two. The industry was absolutely ruined by reason of the lack of proper protection.

The Senator proceeds then to state that the consumers of the article are the stove manufacturers and the electric light companies, and he contends that the cost of the stoves in which mica is used is not increased to the consumer by a duty upon mica, and he contends that there is no reason why the electric light manufacturers should have free mica for their dynamos. He says:

They are protected in their patents and in everything that enters into their business.

They win the largest profits of any business that is now being carried on in the country; and if they do pay for the article which they bring in from abroad, it is actually of no consequence whatever. It will not be felt in the cost of electricity to the people of the United States if this article is placed upon the free list.

Thereupon the discussion was continued. The Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, advocated a duty. The Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Carlisle, participated in the discussion and stated that the industry had seemed to be prosperous while mica was upon the free list. I read from the debate:

Mr. BLAIR. I beg the Senator's pardon. It has been utterly prostrated through that policy until only one mine is in operation in my State, and, so far as I know, only one in North Carolina, every other one being absolutely destroyed. It is not a case where we are to establish a new industry, but to revive an old industry already destroyed.

Later I read from Senator BLAIR:

Will the Senator allow me to say in regard to that, that there is a mica trust which controls this matter abroad. These little manufacturers of mica here are poor men with small capital. It is a kind of mining which may be engaged in with scarcely any capital at all. They are not in any trust.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] advocated a duty on mica. So did the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], although he stated that there was no mica in Connecticut. The Senator from Connecticut said:

My information is that in the new State of Wyoming, not yet represented on this floor, there are large quantities of mica which can be profitably worked and which is of the best character.

The Senator from Montana, Mr. Sanders, stated as follows:

In the State of Montana there have been recently found large beds of mica, and I am well satisfied that we shall develop there an industry of no inconsiderable magnitude; and in conjunction with the existence of mica in the other States I think it is wise that we should lay a duty upon it.

I now read from the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]:

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate a moment, but I apprehend it would be very hard for anybody to give a reason, when iron, tin, lead, coal, almost everything that you can think of, pays a duty, why mica should not pay the reasonable duty of 35 per cent. I can not add to what has been so well said by the Senator from New Hampshire about the immense mica deposits in North Carolina, and I believe in Alabama too. I see the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] in sight of me. I think there are large deposits there.

Mr. PUGH. Yes.

Mr. RANSOM. Gentlemen from the great West say they have it there, and if we put a tariff duty upon almost every other article of human consumption I do not see why mica should be made the exception and be put upon the free list, when it is stated here, when it is demonstrated before the whole country, that putting mica upon the free list has destroyed the industry in this country.

Thereupon the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] came to the defense of the committee, and he argued that the mines of New Hampshire and other parts of the United States could not produce sufficient mica to supply the demand in the United States. The question went to a vote, and the Senate Finance Committee were defeated. This seemed to have been an occasion upon which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] were a little discouraged about the doctrine of protection. This was one little infant industry.

Mr. ALLISON. It certainly must have been the Senator from Rhode Island, because I have never been discouraged in any vote except in that particular case.

Mr. CHANDLER. I find the yeas in favor of putting mica upon the free list, begin, "Messrs. ALDRICH, ALLISON." I suppose the constant and habitual association of those two Senators misled the Senator from Iowa into voting with the Senator from Rhode Island on that occasion, and that he really thought perhaps unless mica should be protected the mica in this country would not be developed. He perhaps voted from that esprit de corps which sometimes prevails in committees, and which exists now strongly between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], so that we notice no difference of opinion between them on any question.

I only regret in this case that if the Senator from Iowa thought really that the mica industry was deserving of protection, he did not pull the Senator from Rhode Island his way, instead of having the Senator from Rhode Island pull him in his direction.

At any rate the cause of mica protection triumphed by 34 votes to 21, and I find among those who voted to reject the proposition to put it on the free list, when the House had decided on a 35 per cent duty, Senator Barbour of Virginia, Senator Blodgett of New Jersey, Senator BUTLER of South Carolina, Senator FAULKNER of West Virginia, Senator Gibson of Louisiana, and Senator GORMAN of Maryland, Senator Hearst of California, Senator RANSOM of North Carolina, and Senator Vance of North Carolina.

All those Democrats voted for the protective duty of 35 per cent ad valorem upon mica. So Senators will see that the cause of protection to mica at that time had a very handsome Democratic support; and the protection then given can be continued to-day if we can have the votes of the same Democratic Senators now in the Senate who voted for a duty on mica at that time and were not deterred from voting for a duty upon mica because the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Rhode Island faltered in the good work of protection.

The duty of 35 per cent ad valorem went upon mica, and there has been a considerable American product; I do not know how much. Senator BLAIR stated that the product consumed was seven or eight hundred thousand dollars' worth a year. I find that the importations under the present law are considerable. In 1891 there were $110,000 worth of mica waste, and $21,750.01 worth of mica. In 1892, $179,865.12 worth of mica, and in 1893, $214,679.99 worth of mica were imported. So the Senator from Rhode Island was mistaken in saying that this country could not supply the demand.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island was mistaken at that time. I notice that the Senator from New Hampshire has fallen into a habit of thought that I think is common perhaps among people who have a particular industry upon which they want to have a very high duty placed in thinking that any man falters in the cause of protection who is not in favor of the highest possible duty upon every conceivable product of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice that the Senator from Rhode Island sometimes falls into a special habit of thought which is this: That although every duty which he thinks ought to be protected must be protected, yet that any duty which he does not think worthy of protection must go to the wall.

Now, I think this duty is to be stricken down for the benefit of the electric dynamo manufacturers in this country, and if I am speaking under the influence which a Senator is likely to have in reference to an industry in his own State, I may say perhaps the Senator from Rhode Island, insensibly to himself of course, may be influenced by the disposition to cheapen the manufacture of electric dynamos in this country, for I can conceive of no other interest that would be opposed to maintaining the duty upon mica. I regret that I have not the estimate as to the amount used in this country, but I have certainly given the correct figures as to the amount imported.

It is only $200,000 worth. I believe, the statistics presented by Senator BLAIR, my former colleague, showed that six or eight hundred thousand dollars' worth were consumed in the country every year. If that is the case, then this country has shown under the operation of the 35 per cent ad valorem duty its capacity to produce two-thirds or three-quarters of all the mica consumed in this country.

As I look at the subject, there is not any doubt at all that the present duty should be continued. I can understand why there may have been a disposition to cut it down from 35 per cent ad valorem to 25 per cent ad valorem. I have been living in hopes that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], who spoke and voted in favor of the 35 per cent ad valorem duty which was imposed in 1890, and who assisted in securing this duty by his voice and his influence, would succeed in inducing the members of the Finance Committee to put at least a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem upon mica in the pending bill.

Mr. President, I do not see this result accomplished by the Senator from North Carolina. I see this industry which is beginning to grow, which was simply on the way to the production of all the mica that is needed in the United States, doomed to destruction if the bill passes. I can not understand why this industry can not be allowed to survive, as it is to be hoped that many of the industries of this country may survive, notwithstanding the passage of the Wilson bill.

I shall not detain the Senate longer, although there is much to be said upon this subject. I believe that this duty is being sacrificed to the desire of the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to strike down the industry, that it is being sacrificed in the interest, and possibly through the influence of the great electric dynamo manufacturers of this country, who probably are imbued with a spirit such as has been suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island this afternoon as applicable to myself and other Senators who care for any industry in their own State, the spirit which leads them to desire to have free of duty everything which they use in their manufacture and in the conduct of their business, and to be protected either by patents or otherwise in the enjoyment of a monopoly of the business of manufacturing electric dynamos in this country.

I do not believe that is a sound principle upon which to deal with this subject, and as the electric companies of this country have large privileges and large opportunities, I think they should be compelled to submit to the development of the mica industry in this country, and that it should not be sent to destruction and all the mica that is used in this country introduced and furnished by the cheap and degraded labor of Siberia and of India.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

553. Meerschaum, crude or unmanufactured.
554. Milk, fresh.
555. Mineral waters, all not artificial, and mineral salts of the same, obtained by evaporation, when accompanied by duly authenticated certificate, showing that they are in no way artificially prepared, and are the product of a designated mineral spring; lemonade, soda water, and all similar waters.
556. Minerals, crude, or not advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding, or by other process of manufacture, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. VEST. Returning to the paragraph placing mica on the free list, paragraph 552, the remainder of the paragraph after the word "mica" ought to be stricken out, as I understood my colleague on the committee to withdraw that amendment. The same provisions are virtually contained in paragraph 556.

Mr. ALDRICH. Paragraph 556 is very much the same, and paragraph 552 ought to be stricken out.

Mr. VEST. I say it ought all to be stricken out except the word "mica." "Mica" should remain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to paragraph 552 will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of paragraph 552 after the word "mica," in the following words:

And metallic mineral substances in a crude state, and metals unwrought, not specially provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

557. Models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts, including patterns for machinery, but no article shall be deemed a model or pattern which can be fitted for use otherwise.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to add as a new paragraph the small print at the top of page 106.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as paragraph 557½:

557½. Molasses testing not above 40° polariscope test, and containing 20 per cent or less of moisture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

558. Moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for in this act.
559. Musk, crude, in natural pods.
560. Myrobolan.
561. Needles, hand-sewing and darning.
562. Newspapers and periodicals; but the term "periodicals" as herein used shall be understood to embrace only unbound or paper-covered publications, containing current literature of the day and issued regularly at stated periods, as weekly, monthly, or quarterly.
563. Nickel, nickel oxide, alloy of any kind in which nickel is the component material of chief value.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that paragraph 563 be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

564. Nux vomica.
565. Oakum.
566. Ocher and ochery earths, sienna and sienna earths, umber and umber earths, not specially provided for in this act, dry.
567. Oil cake.
568. Oils: Almond, amber, crude and rectified ambergris, anise or anise seed, aniline, aspic or spike lavender, bergamot, cajeput, caraway, cassia, cinnamon, cedrat, chamomile, citronella or lemon grass, civit, cotton seed, croton, fennel, Jasmine or Jasimine, Juglandium, Juniper, lavender, lemon, limes, mace, neroli or orange flower, nut oil or oil of nuts not otherwise specially provided for in this act, orange oil, olive oil for manufacturing or mechanical purposes unfit for eating and not otherwise provided for in this act, ottar of roses, palm and cocoanut, rosemary or anthoss, sesame, or sesamum seed or bean, thyme, origanum, red or white; valerian; and also spermaceti, whale, and other fish oils of American fisheries, and all other articles the produce of such fisheries; petroleum, crude or refined.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend paragraph 568, on page 107, line 9, after the word "all," by striking out "other articles the produce" and inserting "fish and other products."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert, in line 1, page 107, after the word "flower," "enfleurage grease," and to strike out the comma as it appears in the print.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the comma ought to be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. After the word "flower," on page 107, line 1, insert "enfleurage grease."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words "other articles the produce," in line 9, and insert "fish and other products."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At the end of the paragraph I move to insert the proviso as printed in small type:

Provided, That if petroleum, crude or refined is imported from any country which imposes a duty on the same article exported from the United States, then there shall be levied, paid, and collected upon such petroleum, crude or refined, the rate of duty existing prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. QUAY. I wish to offer an important amendment to this paragraph, and on it I wish to address the Senate at some length. I ask the managers of the bill to let the paragraph go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I could not hear what was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. My request is that the paragraph shall go over until to-morrow without further action, for the reason that I have an important amendment which I desire to offer to it and which I have mislaid.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Under the circumstances of course I can not object, although I should be glad to dispose of the paragraphs as we reach them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the paragraph will be passed over. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, to strike out paragraph 569, in the following words:

569. Olives, green or prepared.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as a new paragraph:

569. Opium, crude or unmanufactured, and not adulterated, containing 9 per cent and over of morphia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

570. Orange and lemon peel, not preserved, candied, or otherwise prepared.
571. Orchil, or orchil liquid.

The Committee on Finance reported to strike out paragraph 572, in the following words:

572. Orchids, lily of the valley, azaleas, palms, and other plants used for forcing under glass for cut flowers or decorative purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

573. Ores, of gold, silver, and nickel, and nickel matte.
574. Osmium.
575. Paintings, in oil or water colors, original drawings and sketches, and artists' proofs of etchings and engravings, and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act, but the term "statuary" as herein used shall be understood to include only professional productions in marble, stone, alabaster, wood, or metal, of a statuary or sculptor only.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend paragraph 575, on page 108, line 6, after the word "only," to strike out "such;" in line 7, after the word "wood," to insert "or," and in the same line, after the word "sculptor," to strike out "only," and insert "and the word 'painting,' as used in this act, shall not be understood to include such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or other mechanical process."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert after the word "productions," in line 6, the words "whether round or in relief," and to strike out "such," in the same line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "only," in line 6, strike out "such," and after the word "productions," in the same line, insert "whether round or in relief."

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the meaning of the word "round" in that connection? I do not understand its meaning there.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand it means the full, complete figure—full relief entirely.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 7, I move to insert the word "or," before the word "metal," and in the same line I move to strike out "only" and insert the words printed in italics.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "wood," insert "or;" and after the word "sculpture," strike out the word "only," and insert the words—

And the word "painting," as used in this act, shall not be understood to include such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or other mechanical process.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to strike the entire paragraph 575 from the free list, viz:

575. Paintings, in oil or water colors, original drawings and sketches, and artists' proofs of etchings and engravings, and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act, but the term "statuary" as herein used shall be understood to include only professional productions in marble, stone, alabaster, wood, or metal, of a statuary or sculptor, and the word "painting," as used in this act shall not be understood to include such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or other mechanical process.

And insert the present law, paragraph 465 of the McKinley act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 575, on page 108, and insert:

Paintings, in oil or water colors, and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act, 15 per cent ad valorem; but the term "statuary" as herein used shall be understood to include only such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, and as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if this amendment shall be sustained paragraphs 686, 687, and 688 of the pending bill provide for the entry of foreign oil paintings, water colors and statuary when to be used for exhibitions, museums, education, and culture. No art the work of an American artist residing abroad has ever paid duty under an American tariff law, and will not under the proposed change. Many so-called American artists living abroad are in fact, by long absence, almost foreigners, but these are also exempt.

Mr. President, all the tariff laws of the United States, I believe, have recognized foreign oil paintings, water colors, and statuary when imported for private use, luxury, and commerce as articles of luxury, and classed them for revenue along with silks, feathers, diamonds, ribbons, jewelry, velvets, champagne and other wine, brandies, and Persian rugs. There is no protective element in this classsfication. It is revenue from articles of luxury. Foreign oil paintings, water colors, statuary and artists' proofs of etchings and engravings, for private use, in homes, houses, saloons, bar rooms and what not, are luxuries. You can not eat, drink, or wear them.

Free luxuries and taxed necessities do not work well together in a proper government under a tariff law.

The several tariffs on foreign art and for luxury were, in the tariff of 1790-'91, 1792, 10 per cent ad valorem; acts of 1794 and 1795, 10 per cent; acts of 1797-1800, 12½ per cent; acts of 1804, 1807, and 1808, 15 per cent; acts of 1812, 1813, 1815, and 1816, 30 per cent; acts of 1841 and 1842, 20 per cent; acts of 1812 and 1846, paintings on glass, 30 per cent; act 1861, to March 3, 1883, 10 per cent; act March 3, 1883, 30 per cent, and by the act of October 1, 1890, the present law, 15 per cent.

It will be noticed that paragraph 575, in addition to foreign oil paintings, water colors, and statuary, adds to be admitted free of duty, "and artists' proofs of etchings and engravings." Artists' proofs of etchings and engravings are copies signed by the artist or etcher or engraver, or by both, and are frequently held at high figures. The dealers purchase the plates and then corner the market as to prices. These, along with foreign oil paintings, water colors, and statuary, are favorite investments of the rich, for private use and luxury. These are to be exempt from duty. They are bought by the rich. The favorite investment of the average American in the foreign art line is an unsigned etching, lithograph, chromo, or a photograph; these, it will be observed by paragraph 311 of the pending bill, are to be taxed 25 per cent ad valorem. This seems to be a most glaring inconsistency.

The revenues in this bill are claimed to be laid where possible chiefly on articles of luxury—and properly should be. Why not give the poor man his low-priced picture free while giving the rich man his high-priced picture free? Shall Mr. Vanderbilt enjoy a $50,000 picture in his private house free, while Magee pays 25 per cent ad valorem for the privilege of his small chromo?

Shall Mr. Havemeyer, the sultan of the sugar industry, bow in his private house before a $40,000 oil painting free of duty, while Smitz, a sand pounder or furrow-turner, must pay 25 per cent ad valorem when he hangs in his house an unsigned etching or a chromo, lithograph, or photograph?

If Mr. Vanderbilt, or Mr. Havemeyer, or any other of the rich patrons of foreign art, and whose houses contain millions of dollars' worth of foreign art, desire foreign art to enter America free, let them import and present foreign art to any museum, art gallery, school, or other place of instruction, and where the public can see it, and then it will be admitted free; but when they import foreign art for their private use and luxury, as they do diamonds, silks, velvets, champagnes, etc., let them pay a duty. Shall a man be exempt from a tax because he is rich? The discrimination proposed by paragraph 575 and 311 would seem to be a legislative recognition of a most dangerous proposition.

For the year ending June 30, 1893, the importation of foreign oil paintings and water colors was in value $2,086,764.69. The duty collected on the same at 15 per cent was $313,014.71. The foreign statuary imported during the same time was in value $175,002.16. The duty collected on the same at 15 per cent was $26,250.32, a total importation of foreign oil paintings, water colors, and statuary, produced by foreign artists, $2,261,766.85, on which a duty was collected of $339,265.03.

This foreign made and produced art was imported entirely for private use and luxury, or as articles of commerce, because had it been imported for education, museums, art galleries, or associations, or other means of public culture, it would have come in free of duty.

The proposition embraced in paragraph 575 is to present about $350,000 annually to the rich picture dealers and buyers of foreign art to be used for private luxury.

In the many efforts made by rich men in the past ten years to repeal the duty on foreign art used for luxury, there have been some notable contests and several speeches of value made against it. In 1884, and again in 1890, there were three speeches against it which can now be read with profit.

In the House, in May, 1884, the Ways and Means Committee reported on a bill on the subject. It was a bill to merely reduce the then 30 per cent duty to 10 per cent. On the 19th day of May, 1884, on this bill reported by Mr. Hurd, of Ohio, the House of Representatives, after a full discussion on the question of suspending the rules for the passage of H. R. 6751, which was to reduce the tariff duty on foreign art used for luxury from 30 to 10 per cent, refused to do so by a vote of 52 in its favor to 179 against it, 92 not voting. Of the 52 who voted aye only 17 survived in the Congressional election of that fall.

Mr. MILLS, now a Senator in this Chamber, not a Senator then, said:

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill not so much on account of the amount of revenue that is involved in it as on account of the violation of what I believe to be the correct principle of levying taxation. The whole of our onerous system of Federal taxation is levied on consumption. We do not tax the property of the wealthy. Now, I hold that all property ought to be taxed, because property is powerless; the object of government is to protect, and that which needs protection more than anything else in this world is property. But our whole system of taxation is levied on consumption, and rests indiscriminately on all the population of the country irrespective of their capacity to pay; that is, irrespective of the amount of property they own. It ought to be so apportioned even in levying it on consumption that the wealthy should bear some appropriate part of the burden.

Now, here it is proposed that we shall take off taxation from a luxury. * * *

A painting is a luxury; a foreign painting especially is a luxury which costs much money. It goes to adorn the parlors of the wealthy; and you ought not to take off the taxation they pay when the House positively refused the other day to reduce the taxation on a woolen shirt. You refused to reduce the taxation on woolen goods and on boots and shoes, and on farming implements, and on all implements with which our people toil to make their daily subsistence. You refused to take 20 per cent off that taxation; and yet you are ready to reduce the taxation on a magnificent painting from 30 per cent down to 10 per cent.

On the implements of labor, some of them, you levy a tax of from 75 to 101 per cent. The necessaries of life in the shape of clothing and food come in under a rate of duty of 100 per cent, and you refused to reduce it to 50 or 60 per cent. And at the same time you propose to bring down the duty on the magnificent paintings which are imported to adorn the parlors of a Gould or a Vanderbilt to 10 per cent. And the House was asked to put them on the free list because the tax was burdensome. What a record we are making to go before the country upon! How strong an appeal we will be able to make to the people of the United States upon such a record!

I also quote from the speech of Mr. Dunn of Arkansas, a Democrat:

We, the Democrats, seek to make all taxation equal and uniform, to limit it to the actual needs of the revenues, to remove all unnecessary taxation, and to take it off of the common necessaries of life and let it rest as far as possible upon luxuries. Every argument that comes from the Republican side of the House, and every motion that comes from members on that side of the House, is an argument or motion based upon the idea of protecting something or somebody, and the only inquiry with them is, Whom does it protect and how much does it protect? The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] holds up a bundle of petitions from American artists at home and abroad and says that they ask for no protection. I do not care what protection they ask for or do not ask for. If they ask me for protection I would refuse to give it to them as protection and for the sake of protection.

* * * Limit this bill to the simple removal of these discriminations, and leave the tariff on the works of art, as you do the tariff on all the necessities of life consumed by the poor, and I will vote for it; but when you reduce the tariff on works of art and other luxuries of the rich, I demand the same or a greater reduction on the necessaries of life.

Mr. KASSON (Republican). That is all this does.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, no! it reduces the tariff on works of art from 30 to 10 per cent. And this reduction of taxation is on luxuries and fine ornaments of the very rich. Not only can the poor not afford these things, but people of average good fortunes can not. The burdens, galling as they are, that rest upon the great masses of the people, are to remain as the pressing necessities of a great war that ended twenty years ago left them.

These are some of my objections to the bill. It is wrong in principle and unjust to take taxes off of the luxuries of the rich, while we are refusing to take off the necessities of the poor. * * *

Tax the salt of the humblest laborers of the land and take off the tax from the one-hundred-thousand-dollar painting and other works of art of the millionaire! Is that justice? Tax the wool hat or the blankets of the toiling millions, and take it off the luxuries of the rich! [Applause.] Tax the trace chains, the implements of industry of the laboring masses, and give the wealthy their luxuries and ornaments free! Give away the revenues of the Government from whisky to jobbers, but leave the tax to be paid by the consumer!

Sir, go on in that line of revenue reform and the country will rise up and ask us, Is all this pretension of tariff reform a Trojan horse with an army of spoilsmen concealed within it, or are you earnestly and honestly for reforming the administration and reducing taxation? [Applause.] Sir, let us all go home, if that is the rule, and if that is to be our policy, with our heads bowed down in shame and humiliation, confessing our sins, and calling upon the mountains to fall upon us and hide us from the sight of a deceived and betrayed people. * * *

Now, sir, it is unfortunate that no man can speak for the taxpayer here without being howled against as a communist or a demagogue. Sir, that denunciation has no terrors for me; and so long as I stand here you shall never, with my consent, remove taxation from whisky, nor from works of art, nor from luxuries, nor from silks, nor from fine raiment of any kind, until you reduce it on all the articles consumed by the toiling poor and the overtaxed people of this country. [Applause.]

Hon. GEORGE W. COOPER, of Indiana, in the House of Representatives May 14, 1890, said on the McKinley bill:

Another item which these (Republican!) gentlemen who have been engaged in reforming the tariff have given us free is "statuary and paintings in oil and water colors." This is an innovation. Heretofore these things have paid high duties. The duty collected on these for last year [1888] amounted to $357,921.47.

Now, by this bill, all this revenue is to be surrendered. For whom and why is this done? It is said that it is done to encourage art and cultivate the taste, but this is not so, for already all such articles are admitted free of duty where it is shown that they are for public galleries, to be placed upon exhibition for the benefit of the public. No, Mr. Chairman, it is to enable the rich, who can always get a hearing here—it is to enable them to decorate their parlors and ornament their homes without the payment of a tax.

This tax was reinstated in the Senate by the Republican majority, and is now the law.

Mr. President, there is much more of the same kind that has been said by gentlemen in the two Houses of Congress upon this subject, and it does strike me forcibly that the discrimination made between the massive and costly oil painting of the man who is able by his fortune to put hundreds of thousands of dollars of costly oil paintings made abroad in his dwelling, against the man who is only able to hang in his house a cheap lithograph or engraving of some kind, is one that ought not to be made. In my judgment one of the surest tests of a refined disposition is to find in the house of a citizen a nice picture of some kind, I care not how cheap it may be. It may not be worth 50 cents or a dollar, and yet it is silent evidence of the fact that works of art, cheap as they may be, deficient as they may be, are highly appreciated by the members of that family.

I do not believe it is either wise or just to the common people of this country that the cheap pictures which they hang in their houses shall be taxed 25 per cent ad valorem, or in fact any sum whatever, and yet a picture, which in itself amounts to an enormous fortune, be suffered to be brought into this country entirely free of duty. If American citizens are able to go abroad and purchase at fabulous prices the works of foreign artists and hang those pictures in their houses as a private luxury, why should they not be compelled to pay a tax equivalent at least to the tax that is paid upon the cheaper pictures of the poorer classes of our people? We have a right to demand that these articles shall be placed upon the taxable list when used for this purpose.

The amendment which I offered, and which is now the law, provides that when these pictures are placed in museums, or in art galleries where the people are permitted to see them, they shall be admitted free; that whenever they are placed where the great masses of our people for a small compensation can visit them and get the benefit of them, in our academies and places of that kind, they shall be admitted free, but the moment that they are taken into a private residence to adorn it, the moment they become a luxury of the man who can invest thousands, and even hundreds of thousands of dollars in luxuries, that moment in my judgment they should pass from the free list to the dutiable list.

I know of no reason, and I do not believe the American people will see any reason why splendid works of art should be admitted into this country as a matter of private luxury, while the cheap pictures of the farmers, and the laboring men throughout the country are taxed 25 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he proposes to incorporate the present law?

Mr. ALLEN. That is the identical amendment. It is the present law.

Mr. PLATT. I should like at this time to offer an amendment to the pending bill to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received if there be no objection. It will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation from the committee as to the propriety of the paragraph proposed to be stricken out. Of course, I have been voting all along to sustain the committee, but unless I can have a reason given that has not occurred to my mind against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, I shall be very much embarrassed. I am unable to see any reason why the paragraph should stand. I hope, therefore, that the committee who have the management of the bill will furnish a proper reason for this proposed legislation.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Mississippi as a matter of course, like any other Senator, has a perfect right to know the reason why we have reported the provision.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly I have.

Mr. VEST. My reasons (and I think my colleagues on the committee agreed with me) were that everything in the way of art, which elevates our people, which increases the love of the beautiful and the refined, which makes us in every respect a better people, should be encouraged by legislation.

The McKinley act put a duty of only 15 per cent upon these articles. We propose to put them upon the free list, because, if great artists see proper to bring their work to this country in order to elevate the taste of our people, in order to create the generous competition between artists which always is to be encouraged, we did not think that, with the other provisions in the bill, it was necessary to put a tax upon the productions of the artists, but that they should rather be encouraged to come here.

I had occasion to say this morning, and I repeat, that no political exigency would ever induce me to shut out from this country any work of literature, no matter what branch of literature it might appertain to, that gave new thought and better thought to the people of the United States.

I am not a worshiper of the æsthetic. I am not a connoisseur in painting or in sculpture. But, Mr. President, as an educated man, fit to be here as the representative of an educated people, I must say that one tendency of this age is going to the extreme, and that is the tendency to the exclusively practical, that we should escape if possible from all that seems to be æsthetic, or beautiful, or artistic, and confine ourselves to absolute physical necessities.

The greatest peoples of the whole world have been those who were practical and at the same time devoted to art and sculpture. When the people of the United States by their legislation discriminate against art in any shape, whether painting, or sculpture, or fine literary production, then the decadence of the Republic will commence. There is something else in this world besides meat and bread and clothing. A people who have nothing else are on the verge of barbarism. A people who can not admire art, who eschew it because it is unnecessary, will soon degenerate into fit subjects of despotism.

As long as I have a place in this body, I shall vote to encourage everything that lifts and elevates the people, and without criticising other Senators, I should, with my opinions upon this subject, prove derelict in every way to my sense of duty if I did not do so.

When a great painting comes to a free people, it speaks to them oftentimes with a voice which oratory can not rival. It teaches them a great moral lesson. It encourages them to heroic endeavor. It softens the hard places in the everyday life of all of us, and leads us to that higher and better life for which every human soul must aspire.

I hope I shall not be accused of sentimentality, for I am not a sentimentalist; but as a legislator, representing a great Commonwealth, which I hope to see advanced not only in material wealth, but in the love of the good and the great and the beautiful, I shall by every vote and word of mine encourage sculpture, painting, music, literature, and all that makes our human life better.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, of course I am impressed with the eloquent remarks of the Senator from Missouri. I know the ennobling influences of fine paintings and of fine statuary. But what I would like to know is this: In every tariff which has ever been enacted, if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is correct, commencing with the very first and extending to the present hour, duties were laid upon this kind of property. In the McKinley tariff act a duty was also laid upon it. I fail to see that the American people have not advanced morally, artistically, or in every good way during all this long period, with the duties imposed upon these works of art.

I do not think that there has been any retardation of our advancement by reason of these taxes. Call me a radical if you please, or what not, there is, I am bound to say, a great deal in the argument made by the Senator from Nebraska that, when the works of art, the engravings, lithographs, etc., which become the private property of the poor are imported into this country they are taxed, and when the great works, which cost large sums of money, and which can only be the private property of the rich, are admitted it is proposed that they shall come in free of duty.

There is in the human heart, and especially in the American heart, a sentiment which demands equality in burdens as well as equality in civil rights and political privileges. So, as a plain man, if provision be made, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, for the admission of statuary and paintings free of duty when they are to be put in public galleries where the people at large are to be admitted to view them, I can not see why, when they are admitted for the simple private use of a private person, they should be exempt from taxation.

I should like to know how much educational influence is imparted to the great mass of the American people by the importation of a fine picture, or a fine statue, and placing it in a private house where the great mass of the American people are not permitted to enter. That kind of a painting or statue may contribute to the pleasure, it may contribute to the artistic taste of the owner and his family, and the friends who are permitted to visit his private gallery, but how it is to contribute to the advancement, to the welfare, to the education in an artistic sense of the great mass of the American people, I fail to see.

Then again, Mr. President, by paragraph 411, which we have just passed, "books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English," are to be admitted free. If the view presented with so much beauty and with so much eloquence and force by the Senator from Missouri be correct, that he would not exclude from the American people any opportunity to commune with the great thoughts of the great men of the world by a tariff tax, I should like to know how we are to justify the paragraph which I have read. You allow persons who are so well educated as to read foreign languages, whether living or dead languages, to import their books free, and you exclude from the great mass of the American people the opportunity of reading, of considering, of being improved by anything said by a foreign author in a language which he can read.

So, Mr. President, I believe the best way to settle the question raised by the Senator from Nebraska is to reënact the present law upon this subject. Then those persons who are favored by fortune so as to enable them to import for their private galleries great works of art, whether paintings or statuary, may be compelled to share the burdens imposed by this bill upon the humble to purchase engravings and lithographs.

I do not see how, in legislating for a free people, a people composed as well of poor as of rich, we can draw this line of distinction as it is drawn in the bill. So, I hope that for once the Senate may reënact a portion of the law which is so much opposed upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate any length of time. I fully and heartily concur in all that has been said by the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as to there being more in this life than merely struggling for animal existence. I am not an artist myself; I am not related to any artist; I have but very little of the artistic in my nature; and yet I think I appreciate a fine painting or a picture as well as any man alive. I might not be able to describe it in classic language, I might not be able to express my appreciation to any very great extent, and yet I believe all people are conscious in a very great degree of the influence which a fine picture exercises over them.

The law which is now in force levies a tax upon the oil paintings which are painted abroad and which are imported into this country and used exclusively in private residences.

Is there any reason why Mr. Belmont, for instance, should import a $50,000 oil painting from Europe entirely free of any tax whatever, and I should pay upon a cheap representation of that picture which I hang in my house 25 per cent ad valorem or 27 cents a pound? I can not indulge in these luxuries, but I am perfectly willing that he shall. I do not envy him his riches or his ability to gratify his taste in that respect; but I say if he expends his money by the thousands of dollars in Europe for foreign-made pictures and hangs them in his house to the exclusion of the public, he should be required to pay a tax upon such pictures the same as upon any other property; but whenever he brings those pictures where the Senator from Missouri, and I, and the common people of this country can look upon them and enjoy them, when we can feel the inspiring influences of those pictures, then they should come here free of taxation.

The time never will come when the committee will be able to explain to the common people of this country why they suffer those great pictures to come here, which involve fortunes within themselves, and go into private residences, and then tax the picture which goes into the house of the poor man 25 per cent ad valorem or 27 cents a pound, as this bill does.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I merely want to add a word to what has been said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and that is to give the amount of duty collected upon oil paintings and statuary during the past year, 1893. From the report as given in the appendix to the bill now under consideration, I find that the value of paintings in oil and water colors imported in 1893 was $2,086,764, and the amount of duty collected was $313,014.71. The value of the statuary imported was $175,002.16, and the duty collected was $26,250.32, making a total of some $340,000 in round numbers.

I submit that in the adjustment of the tariff schedules here today it is very much a matter of revenue as to whether we shall exempt certain articles or impose duties upon them. The American people, after what has been said this afternoon with reference to oil paintings and statuary, will want to understand why it is that we exempt those which are used only by the rich people of the country, and deny ourselves a revenue of about $340,000 from them, and place a tax upon the paintings and lithographs which are in use in the homes of the poor people.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would kindly withdraw that motion for one minute.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish the Senator from Tennessee would yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall be obliged to yield to the Senators, but I regret the necessity of it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think there is a good reason for the action of the committee in this particular, independent of the one which is generally stated, and on which they can vindicate themselves to any audience, whether of simple and plain people or other people. I am not speaking now of the fact that a great work of art is an instructor to people; that it is like a great book, and that sooner or later it gets into public galleries. The ownership of these things by private persons is always very brief, as the ownership of great properties is brief. But I do not put it on that ground.

Nearly everything which pays a duty in the tariff is imported for consumption, and is consumed. Food products, whether they pay a duty or come in free, are consumed in the year; nearly everything perishes with the using, and if it is material for something else, it is used as a material and changes its character, and the article which is made of it, in its turn, is worn out, whether it be clothing or medicine or anything else; but the work of art abides and becomes a part of the property of the man who imports it; it is a tangible part, and I suppose in every State of the Union it is taxed annually.

It is in Massachusetts, and I do not know of any other State where it is not. So, if I import—if I could afford to do so—a $20,000 picture, I have to pay a tax on something which will constantly be increasing in value, as all paintings do with age if they have any value to begin with, forever to the State. So it does not escape taxation, but is taxed more than any other article in the tariff. When an article is imported and is consumed, it is taxed but once; but a work of art is taxed every year, year after year. Therefore, there is a reason which I think will satisfy the people of all the States. If it is imported on the 30th of April and gets into the port of Boston, it is taxed in Massachusetts the next day, the 1st of May, to the owner.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, I ask him if that is not true of a horse or an ox?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; it is true to some extent of the horse and of the ox, but it is true to a very brief extent. If the ox is imported and fatted, that is the end of him. If the horse is imported he lasts two, three, or five years—I do not know what the average age of a horse is in point of use. I heard of a Vermont deacon once who sold a horse which he called 7 years old, which was discovered to be 18 years old, and when he was questioned about it he said, "They lie so about the age of horses that I do not put any confidence at all in them." That is about the only instance of an article imported which goes into State taxation at all.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he thinks there ought to be any discrimination? If oil paintings and valuable pictures are to be admitted free for private use, why not do the same thing on the cheaper grade of pictures for the masses of the people?

Mr. HOAR. I am not sure that I should not be willing to do that on the cheaper grade of pictures spoken of by the Senator. It is true that even if a painting is in a private gallery, the owner does not keep it for his own use, exclusively, but a great many see it and enjoy it. Take Mr. Walters's picture gallery at Baltimore. People go over from Washington and the surrounding cities on regular days to see that collection of pictures, and it is a semipublic institution.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts is it not true that in the cities of Boston, Philadelphia, New York, and other similar cities, there are millions of dollars' worth of oil paintings of a high order, which are kept for purely private purposes and which the public are not permitted to see?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know about the city of New York, but I do not think it is true in the city of Boston. I think generally that the paintings belonging to people in Boston go into the art museum or the atheneum, where they are seen by the public.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the very interesting argument of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in regard to education in art, it seems to me does not apply with force, especially in regard to statuary. It seems to me that it would be much more for the interests of art and its development in this country, if our artists and our sculptors resided here and had their studios here where the people could visit them, see the designs, see the models, see their works in the course of construction, and see them when completed. As it is now, it is a mere question of mechanics. Our sculptors reside abroad, not because there is a greater atmosphere of art there, but because the mechanics who execute their work can be employed there very much cheaper than they can be here.

The case is different with paintings where the artist himself executes his design, but in statuary he merely makes the clay model; he rarely ever in these days touches the chisel. The ancient sculptors executed their own works, but the sculptors of the present day make their clay models, and the work is executed entirely by a mechanic, by a system of measurements.

The artist often does not see his marble until it is perfectly completed. I have heard eminent American artists in their studios in Italy say that it was merely the mechanical question; that they would much prefer to reside in America, that their orders came from America, that they would prefer to live here, and that they should like to be here to see their customers; but that they were obliged by the cost of execution to reside abroad. They can employ mechanics in Italy who will execute accurately any design from the clay at 80 cents or $1 a day, and the studios are full of them. If here, the workman would receive at least three times that. That is about the average difference in wages.

I am in favor of the amendment, because I think in both respects, especially in regard to statuary, it is for the encouragement of education in art to do something to induce our artists to come here and execute their work here, and because it would give protection to American labor and American mechanics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to know what is the exact motion before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is the striking out of paragraph 575 and the insertion of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. GEORGE. And not the motion to lay the amendment on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. GEORGE. It is a vote directly on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has withdrawn the motion to lay on the table.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I suggest to him that we transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and that we transfer pairs and vote.

Mr. GORDON. Very well. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). Being paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Ma. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I learn that he has not voted, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. He has not voted, and therefore I refrain from voting.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allen,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Shoup,
Chandler,	George,	Perkins,	Teller.
Davis,	Hawley,	Power,

NAYS—36.

Aldrich,	Gordon,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bate,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Berry,	Gray,	Morgan,	Squire,
Brice,	Hale,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Harris,	Palmer,	Vest,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Patton,	Walsh.
Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	Washburn,
Frye,	Lindsay,	Quay,	White.

NOT VOTING—34.

Allison,	Dixon,	McLaurin,	Platt,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Call,	Hill,	Martin,	Vilas,
Camden,	Hunton,	Mills,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Irby,	Mitchell, Oregon	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Morrill,
Coke,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief explanation. I voted just now under misapprehension of the question, and supposed I was voting in favor of paragraph 575, placing on the free list paintings, statuary, and other works of art.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I was absent from the Chamber attending a meeting of the special investigating committee when paragraph 308 was passed. I now ask permission to turn back to that paragraph, and I move to strike out the substitute for the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I must object to going back to another part of the bill which has been passed upon. It is a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I desire to give notice that in the Senate at the proper time I shall ask a separate vote upon it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is all entirely proper and entirely regular, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

576. Palladium.

577. Paper stock, crude, of every description, including all grasses, fibers, rags, waste, shavings, clippings, old paper, rope ends, waste rope, waste bagging, old or refused gunny bags or gunny cloth, and poplar or other woods, fit only to be converted into paper.

578. Paraffine.

579. Parchment and vellum.

580. Pearl, mother of, not sawed or cut, or otherwise manufactured.

581. Pease, green, in bulk or in barrels, sacks, or similar packages.

582. Peltries and other usual goods and effects of Indians passing or repassing the boundary line of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That this exemption shall not apply to goods in bales or other packages unusual among Indians.

583. Personal and household effects, not merchandise, of citizens of the United States dying in foreign countries.

584. Pewter and britannia metal, old, and fit only to be remanufactured.

585. Philosophical and scientific apparatus, instruments and preparations; statuary, casts of marble, bronze, alabaster, or plaster of Paris; paintings, drawings, and etchings, specially imported in good faith for the use of any society or institution incorporated or established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or for encouragement of the fine arts, and not intended for sale.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 585, after the word "apparatus," in line 7, to insert "utensils."

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not insist upon that amendment. I do not know why these different societies should be permitted to import utensils free.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The utensils are meant to cover simply those that are used for scientific purposes. It seems to me as proper that they should be included as are other things of the same sort.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly the word "apparatus" covers all utensils which could be used for scientific purposes. It seems to me the word "utensils" opens a door which should not be opened.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. A contention was made before the committee by persons who represented this interest, that this word is absolutely necessary to include classes and things of the same nature and character as these, and the impression made upon the committee was that that was correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to the paragraph was, in line 8, to insert "including bottles and boxes containing the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee to the paragraph was, in line 10, after the word "etchings," to insert "including stained or painted window glass or stained or painted glass windows."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

585. Phosphates, crude or native.
587. Plants, trees, shrubs, and vines of all kinds, commonly known as nursery stock, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the amendment of the committee to paragraph 587, as indicated by the brackets?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that that is not a committee amendment.

Mr. VEST. We offer no amendment there. We do not propose to strike that out.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to strike out paragraph 587.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

588. Plaster of Paris and sulphate of lime, unground.
589. Platina, in ingots, bars, sheets, and wire.
590. Platinum, unmanufactured, and vases, retorts, and other apparatus, vessels, and parts thereof composed of platinum, adapted for chemical uses.
591. Plows, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, and planters, mowers, horse rakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is a committee amendment there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After the word "gins," in line 3 of the paragraph, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That all the articles mentioned in paragraph 591, when imported from any country which lays an import duty on like articles coming from the United States, shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the committee amendment as indicated on the paper I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment so as to make it read:

Provided, That all articles mentioned in this paragraph, if imported from a country which lays an import duty on like articles imported from the United States, shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

592. Plumbago.
593. Plush, black, known commercially as hatters' plush, composed of silk, or of silk and cotton, and used exclusively for making men's hats.
594. Polishing stones, and burnishing stones.
595. Potash, crude, carbonate of, or "black salts." Caustic potash, or hydrate of, including refined in sticks or rolls. Nitrate of potash, or saltpeter, crude. Sulphate of potash, crude or refined. Chlorate of potash. Muriate of potash.
596. Professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment, in the actual possession at the time of persons arriving in the United States; but this exemption shall not be construed to include machinery or other articles imported for use in any manufacturing establishment, or for any other person or persons, or for sale.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in paragraph 596, after the word "sale," in line 28, to insert:

Nor shall it be construed to include theatrical scenery, properties, and apparel, but such articles brought by proprietors or managers of theatrical exhibitions arriving from abroad for temporary use by them in such exhibitions and not for any other person and not for sale shall be admitted free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but bonds shall be given for the payment to the United States of such duties as may be imposed by law upon any and all such articles as shall not be exported within six months after such importation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may in his discretion extend such period for a further term of six months in case application shall be made therefor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert in line 3, on page 111, after the word "sale," the words "and which have been used by them abroad."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

597. Pulu.
598. Pumice.
599. Quicksilver.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope that the committee will not insist upon placing quicksilver upon the free list. If they do, I should certainly like to hear some reason given for that action.

Quicksilver is an industry in which California is especially interested. Of all the States and Territories of this Union, California is the only State which produces quicksilver. There are from twenty to thirty million dollars of capital invested in the industry. It gives employment to 5,000 miners, to mechanics, to laborers, to machinists, to our foundries and machine shops. It consumes the supplies produced by the farmer, gives employment to wood-choppers, to coal-miners, to charcoal-burners, and thousands of others who are dependent upon this industry.

No one, to my knowledge, has asked to have quicksilver placed upon the free list. There are only four countries in the world which produce quicksilver in any considerable quantity. Those countries are Spain, Austria, Italy, and California. The Idria mines of Spain have been worked for more than 2,000 years. They belong to the Government of Spain. They are worked by convict labor, by cheap labor brought into Spain. The same is true of Austria. For the past five years the mines have been, and for the next twenty-five years will be, under lease to the Rothschilds of London. The whole product of those mines belongs to the Rothschilds, and if you strike out the duty on quicksilver and close up this industry in California, it will be done in the interest of the great Rothschilds of Europe. I think they have money enough without asking the people of the United States and the laboring men and mechanics, to contribute more to their great fund.

Not only that, but the mines of Spain and Austria are the richest cinnabar mines known in history. The average yield of cinnabar is 10½ per cent of quicksilver, while in California we have worked our mines, and the most they have ever reached has been about 2 per cent of quicksilver during the past ten years. Last year they went as low as 1¼ per cent of quicksilver. I can not understand any reason why this article should be placed upon the free list.

I find by comparing the figures on page 194 of the Mineral Industries of the United States for 1890, that when there was an increased production in California prices invariably declined. When the California production decreases prices advance, showing that the California production for forty years has in great measure controlled the prices of the world. It has been the equalizing lever which has prevented the Rothschilds from coming in here and crushing out the industry, and then charging our people what they please for their quicksilver.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from California a question, if he will yield.

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. VEST. It is as to the statement the Senator has just made. Do not the Treasury reports show that we imported 94,000 pounds and exported 424,000 pounds last year?

Mr. PERKINS. The books of the Treasury show that in 1893 California produced 30,164 flasks of quicksilver, about 2,262,300 pounds; they show that we exported about 5,600 flasks of quicksilver, or 425,000 pounds, and that we imported 94,000 pounds of quicksilver.

Mr. VEST. That is what I said.

Mr. PERKINS. Showing a surplus of about 4,000 flasks of quicksilver, which we produced in this country more than were required, and those 4,000 flasks of quicksilver we were enabled to export by reason of the cheap freights on the Pacific coast. We sent it to British Columbia, we sent it to Mexico, to South America, and Australia; but we are producing in California about what we require for use in this country, while last year there was a surplus of 4,000 flasks of 75 pounds each, which our people produced and sent abroad at its actual cost so as to keep our mines running. If we close up the cinnabar mines they fill with water; the pumps must be removed, the furnaces corrode, and the machinery is eaten away by iron rust. To close down the mines means death to the industry.

So our people, with their enterprise, their goaheadativeness, their application, have kept their mines running; and last year we were able to export 4,000 flasks of quicksilver. Instead of censuring us for it, the Senator from Missouri should commend the enterprise of California for being able to do this. If we had not done it we should have taken out of this country hundreds of thousands of dollars to add to the riches of the Rothschilds, instead of putting that money into the pockets of our American citizens. I can not, as I stated before, see one reason why quicksilver should be placed upon the free list.

I reiterate that at the New Almaden mine, which was the only rich mine we have ever had in the United States, the average of cinnabar would compare with the percentage of Spanish cinnabar. We find that in 1874 it produced only 27,000 flasks of quicksilver, but in 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879 it produced, respectively, 50,000, 75,000, 70,000, 65,000, and 75,000 flasks. While the price in 1874 was $118 per flask, in 1876, when the production was trebled, the price dropped to $53 per flask; and by 1879 it had fallen to $34 per flask; which was wholly due to the production of this article of commerce in California.

There was a little variation in the price after the duty was imposed in 1883 until the production commenced to run down very largely, amounting, in 1886, to 29,000 flasks, as against 75,000 flasks in 1876. By continuing an examination of the list we find this to be the case, that as California's production diminished the price increased, and as California's production increased the price diminished. An examination of the statistics will show that while quicksilver was on the free list from 1875 to 1883 it sold for a higher price in the London markets than it did in our markets. The United States was used by the Rothschilds as a dumping ground for their surplus supply of quicksilver, and the prices in Europe and London were very much higher than they were in the United States.

The conservative policy of the Rothschilds has influenced them in producing quicksilver as it has in their great financial business. They could to-day take out ten times the quantity of quicksilver which is required for consumption in mining, in the arts and sciences and other industries, but they only produce what is necessary to supply the trade and to keep the prices up.

I believe that the cost of quicksilver to us in California is not less than $27 per flask, and yet it can be produced in Spain as low as $8.50 per flask. It is only because we are producing this that we are enabled in a great measure to control the market price in this country; but if you close up our mines, as this will surely do if quicksilver is permitted to remain upon the free list, we shall be at the mercy of the Rothschilds of Europe.

In 1878 we had thirty working mines of cinnabar in California. To-day we have only eleven, and six of those produce less than 100 flasks of quicksilver per month. Yet our people are prospecting, are delving into the earth; they are bringing up cinnabar; they are taking it to the furnaces, are reducing it, and turning out the liquid quicksilver, paying the money they receive for it to our people.

I beg of you, I entreat of you, not to do this great wrong to the people whom I in part represent. We have a great State on the western line of this continent, and this Congress have sent some heavy thrusts home to it. They put coal and they put lumber on the free list; they put wool on the free list; they have struck down 50 per cent of the duty upon our fruit, upon our vines, and they are striking at our various industries. There may be some reason for some of those things you have done, but I challenge anyone to successfully show why quicksilver should be placed upon the free list, when the only competitors we have in the world are the Governments of Spain, of Austria, and of Italy; and those Governments are under contract for all the production of all the mines with the great house of Rothschilds.

Five thousand—yes, ten thousand—people in California, directly and indirectly, are dependent upon the quicksilver mining of that State. They are working for very small interest upon their capital. They are paying out eighty-odd per cent of their gross receipts for labor, and 15 per cent more goes for supplies. Why will you, then, ruin this great industry in which our people are so deeply interested? The greatest reduction you can make, if you are fair, if you are just, is to reduce it in the same ratio of percentage that you have reduced the tariff upon other things.

The duty to-day is 10 cents a pound. If, then, you will reduce it, reduce it in the same average percentage that you have the balance of the schedules, which I understand to be about 30 per cent. Our people will accept a reduction of 30 per cent if you will make it specific, 7 cents a pound. But I beg of you not to go below that figure. California will believe that you have dealt unjustly with her if you do.

California cast her last electoral vote for the party which is to-day in the majority. She did not believe that that great party, with its traditions, with its history, with its protestations and declarations of what it would do for the laboring man, for the workingmen of this country, would do this thing. The people who gave their votes for that party which to-day controls their destinies and their interests did not believe you would be so unjust to them as to strike at this great industry.

Therefore, I ask again if you can not permit the law to stand as it is, then reduce it in the same ratio that you have reduced the tariff upon other articles which have been before you for consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the only thing that is advanced on this destruction of the quicksilver industry is the statement—for it can not be called an argument—which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] makes, that we exported a large quantity to some other country. As a general proposition, that amounts to saying that the moment an industry in this country gets sufficiently strong to command its own home market and export, it will be stricken down. But this is very easily explicable; though I doubt very much if the Senator from Missouri knows how these exportations have come about. A very large exportation was made in 1891; I will take that as an example. I quote from the letter of the vice-president and general manager of one of the quicksilver mines, who says:

BOSTON, December 26, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I inclose you herewith memoranda relating to quicksilver, which I think you will find sufficiently complete to explain the state of the industry. We invested our capital under existing laws and to wipe out that capital, as surely would be done by putting quicksilver on the free list, is neither just nor right.

The chief objection raised against our industry by Mr. WILSON was that at times we were enabled to export some quicksilver, notably in 1891, when we exported 3,000 or 4,000 flasks to Mexico. This occurred under anomalous conditions. By one of those spasmodic efforts which the Rothschilds put forth once in a great while, in November of that year they raised their price of quicksilver from £6 10*s.* to £10, and six weeks later it was back to its former price. We sold all the quicksilver we had to Mexico, where we had the advantage of them in the matter of freight, believing it to be good business to do so, when we could get such an advantage over the ruling price of the year.

It is only when some such sudden and uncertain jump in the price occurs that we can think of competing with them for export. You are well aware from my former conversations with you that the returns for the capital invested in this industry are very meager, and with the duty of 10 cents per pound taken off, with the present low grade of ores, it would mean ruin to our business and closing down of the California mines.

I wish to thank you heartily for your courteous attention, and assure you that I appreciate it most highly, and should the opportunity ever present itself, I would be most glad to return it in kind so far as I can.

With the kindest regards, I am, very respectfully,

W. B. BUCKMINSTER,
Vice-President and General Manager,
Ætna Consolidated Quicksilver Mining Company,
Napa Consolidated Quicksilver Mining Company, and representing the Quicksilver Mining Company of New Almaden, California; the Standard Quicksilver Mining Company, California; the Sulphur Bank Quicksilver Mining Company, California; the Redington Quicksilver Mining Company, California; the New Idria Quicksilver Mining Company, California; the Napa Consolidated Quicksilver Mining Company, California; the Great Eastern Quicksilver Mining Company, California; the Great Western Quicksilver Mining Company, California; and the Great Eastern, No. 2, Quicksilver Mining Company, California.

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. President, that illustrates precisely the condition of this industry. The Rothschilds hold a monopoly of it practically. The product of Italy is very small, and the Rothschilds control the mines in Idria, Austria, and the mines in Almaden, Spain, and they could make the price of quicksilver, except for the California competition which has been built up here. When they raised the price, as in 1891, when they pushed it from £6 10*s.* to £10, at that moment the California product began to pour into Mexico, as appears from our Treasury reports, and down the price came.

Quicksilver is used chiefly by miners—I think I am correct in that statement—and every man engaged in practical mining will know that, if you withdraw the California competition, you will have an immediate rise in the price of quicksilver, which they so much need; in other words, you make a monopoly when you close the California mines, and the removal of the duty on quicksilver will close the California mines. The Rothschilds, controlling the Spanish and the Austria mines, will pour in quicksilver here at low prices, made by low wages, until they have closed every quicksilver mine in the country, thrown all the plants out of operation, disperse the miners, and then they will raise the price of quicksilver to our miners to any price they like. If I am mistaken in this statement the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], whom I see sitting near me, can correct me.

If anyone will take the trouble to examine the tables which I shall print in the RECORD, he will notice that the price of quicksilver has declined when the California mines were encouraged and running full, and it has gone up in exact proportion as these mines have been shut down, as when quicksilver was on the free list, to which the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has already alluded.

There never was a plainer case of the interest of our people in maintaining an industry than in this case of quicksilver. It seems to me to be absolutely without any excuse whatever; and the argument about our exporting it turns out, as I understand, to be an argument in favor of maintaining it, for it shows the capacity of the Rothschilds to lift the price of quicksilver; and if we are not there with our competition there is nothing to prevent their putting it to any price they like.

Taking off this duty and the breaking down of the American quicksilver mines means the raising of the price of quicksilver and the putting of a great many millions into the pockets of the Rothschilds.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator kindly explain how the Rothschilds came to control the foreign mines?

Mr. LODGE. The Rothschilds have control of the mines of Spain and Austria.

Mr. PERKINS. Under a thirty-years lease.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to say they have control under a thirty years' lease; under mortgage to secure a debt of those countries they hold those mines absolutely.

I give in the table which I shall print a comparative statement of the wages. It is something like the difference between 81 cents and $2.50 a day in what is paid for labor, ours being $2.50, and theirs about 81 cents.

Mr. HALE. The Rothschilds are creditors of these countries, and have the mines as security?

Mr. LODGE. They are creditors and have the mines as security; they control them absolutely, and there is no quicksilver supply outside of Austria and Spain. They are the creditors of the Spanish Government; the mines belong to the government, and the governments have pledged the mines and given them over to the Rothschilds to work as security for money which the Rothschilds have lent those governments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the whole business outside of the United States is a governmental trust?

Mr. LODGE. The whole business outside of the United States, except a very small product in Italy, is the property of the Spanish and Austrian Governments, in the control of the Rothschilds—there is nothing else—and it is a governmental trust, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] suggests. If you take the table which I have here, and which I shall not read to the Senate, you will see that the range in prices has varied precisely with the activity of the California mines.

We not only have to pay higher rates of wages, but our rock is not so rich as that in the Spanish and Austrian mines. The only way that we can hope to compete with them is by a protective duty, and if we can have it we can keep down the world's price of quicksilver. It has been done, and it is a matter of absolute proof that if we do not keep our mines open the Rothschilds will raise the price, just as they raised it in 1891, when we exported 4,000 flasks of quicksilver to Mexico. They raised the price and put it up £4 a flask, $20 a flask, and they kept the price there for six weeks. It was the American competition which forced it down again, and which keeps it down to all our miners.

I now ask leave to insert in my remarks the statement and tables to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

QUICKSILVER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 11, 1893.

To the Honorable Chairman and Members of the Ways and Means Committee, Washington, D. C.:

GENTLEMEN: Sulphide of mercury, or cinnabar, from which quicksilver is produced, is an ore found in the United States only in California. Its production is an important interest there, giving employment to over 5,000 men, at good wages, and representing a large amount of invested capital. The only other countries producing this mineral are Spain, Austria, and Italy, the first two producing by far the largest amount and owned and worked by the Spanish and Austrian Governments. Italy producing but a small amount. The Austrian and Spanish product is controlled by the Rothschilds and sold by them, the Spanish product being mortgaged to the Rothschilds for a period of thirty years from 1870, in repayment of a loan made by them to the Spanish Government of £1,696,000, with interest at 8 per cent per annum.

Until the discovery of the American quicksilver mines quicksilver brought a very high price, more than three times what it is selling for at present, and the production of the California mines has, therefore, since their discovery practically controlled the price of quicksilver in the world, by preventing the Spanish and Austrian mines from having a monopoly. These two mines, Almaden in Spain, and Idria in Austria, are very rich and hold immense reserves. The ore is found in two immense bodies or chimneys in the Almaden, and shafts have been sunk to a depth of a thousand feet, finding the mineral fully as rich as it goes down. The grade of the ore in the Almaden and Idria is about 11 per cent.

On the other hand, in the California mines the mineral is found in scattered bodies at long distances apart, and does not occur in any regular formations, veins often being barren and carrying no ore for distances of a thousand feet or more, and it is generally found at no great depth below the surface. The grade of ore in the California mines averages but little over 1 per cent, and they have practically no reserves, but are dependent upon their yearly developments of ore.

Comparing year by year the Spanish mines with the New Almaden of California, as to the amount of rock mined, we find that in the Spanish mines 98 per cent of the rock mined was good enough to run through the furnaces; while in the new Almaden of California, 24 per cent only could be used, showing three-quarters of the rock mined was waste—the New Almaden being taken as affording the most complete figures and a fair sample of the whole.

The average wages per man in Spain are 60 cents; the average wages per man in California are $2.43. The average cost of a flask of quicksilver at Almaden, Spain, is $7.86; the average cost in California is $33.31, of which 78 per cent is labor. Comparing the two, and allowing for sake of comparison that the wages paid in Spain were equal to those paid in California, we have the cost of a flask of quicksilver in Spain, $7.86, of which there was paid for labor 78 per cent, or $6.13. The cost of producing a flask in California is $33.31, of which there is paid for labor 78 per cent, or $25.98, showing a difference paid in wages to the American workman of $19.85 per flask. A standard flask consists of 76½ pounds of quicksilver. The production for the past five years has been as follows:

	Flasks.
1888	33,250
1889	25,650
1890	22,615
1891	25,584
1892	27,000

The amount produced in this country is equal to its needs at present. But little has been imported for a long series of years since the imposition of the duty, and during this past year none at all. I beg to call your attention to the fact that were the mines of California to be closed down, as they must inevitably be unless some protection is afforded, that the whole power of making the price would lie with the Spanish and Austrian Governments, as represented by the Rothschilds, and we should be at their mercy. When this duty has been so low as to cause a shut down of the American mines, this has been the case heretofore.

We are now protected by a duty of 10 cents per pound. This is little enough, and we ask in consideration of the capital involved, and the labor of five thousand men employed at good wages, that it be kept at the present rate.

Quicksilver is an article which can be used only for specific purposes within narrow limits, and the price has little to do with the consumption. A low price will not extend its uses, which are confined to amalgamation of ores, vermillion, and mercurial preparations. As it is used over and over again in mining, the slight duty cuts no figure there, and all preparations of mercury are protected by a duty higher than that on quicksilver, so that no detriment is worked to their interest. Again, a specific duty of 10 cents per pound gives protection when most needed, i. e., when the price is low, which an ad valorem duty does not do, but affords great protection when least needed, i. e., when the price abroad is higher.

The quicksilver mines of this country are struggling for existence because of the low prices existing, and were lower prices to come, would have to succumb to foreign competition. The average of ore now being worked is but little over 1 per cent, yielding 20 pounds of quicksilver to the ton; while the Almaden of Spain yields between 10 and 11 per cent, or over 200 pounds to the ton—a difference in favor of the Spanish mines of 180 pounds per ton.

You may ask why we are able to compete with quicksilver produced in Spain at $7.86 per flask, while the cost of production here is $33.31. Spain authorized the loan in 1870, from Messrs. Rothschilds, of £1,696,000, hypothecating the Almaden mines and stipulating therein that they should not sell quicksilver outside the United Kingdom at less than £6 per flask (which at the present rate of exchange amounts to $29.75 per flask) and as much more as they can get. If to £6 7*s.*, the present selling price, we add the duty of $7.65 per flask, we have $37.50, which we can obtain for quicksilver in competition with them.

By article 6 of the Spanish agreement with the Rothschilds, the Messrs. Rothschilds enjoy without interest all the money which collects from the sale of quicksilver in London during the year until the settlement in July. By article 9, Messrs. Rothschilds have the right to half the amount they obtain above £6 per flask in London for trying to improve the selling price of quicksilver. Finally by article 10, in the same agreement, they are authorized to sell such quicksilver for £6 per flask, but no less, as Messrs. Rothschilds think desirable to send to other markets, whatever the price may be in London. So that, though the price may be £8, £9, £10, or £11 in London, as it has been within the last three years, they can use this country as a dumping ground for their surplus product at a price of not less than £6 per flask.

In other words, it is only the production of quicksilver in California which keeps us from being subjected to a gigantic monopoly. It is an article which we must have to reduce our gold and silver ores, and did we not produce it in competition with the Rothschilds, we should have to pay their price of not less than £6 in any event, and as much more as they could force us to do. (See speech of Señor Marcoarto, delivered in the Spanish Senate, May 8, 1890.)

In other words, we are at the mercy of a gigantic monopoly which is controlled by the Messrs. Rothschild if we do not produce sufficient quicksilver or nearly enough for our own needs in this country. Since the California mines were opened the price has been steadily declining, except in the instances where the low price caused by importations from abroad at a time of no duty have shut down our mines and reduced our supply so that we were obliged to buy from abroad. It is not only in the interest of the producer, but also in that of the consumer as well, that the American mines should be kept open and stimulated to the extent of their production.

Were this duty removed and quicksilver allowed to come in free, there is no question but what, with the low grade of ore which we are now mining, the California mines must shut down. Once shut down it is not only a question of enormous expense to reopen them, owing to their becoming filled with water and shafts and tunnels caving in, but it is a question of time as well, and it would take many months, if not years, to put them in active working order if they were once closed down. Capital is timorous of investment and would hesitate to seek again any employment in which it has been so grievously disappointed. Again, quicksilver can in no sense be called a raw material. It is a manufactured article, into the production of which labor largely enters, quite as largely as any manufactured article produced, averaging 78 per cent of the total cost in wages alone.

To summarize: The ores of Almaden, Spain, and Idria, Austria, run 11 per cent ore; the ores of the California mines average but 1 per cent. The cost of a flask of quicksilver in Spain and Austria is $7.86, which price is increased to the consumer by the Rothschild monopoly to £6 at the lowest, and as much more as they can increase it; the cost of a flask of quicksilver in California is $33.31, 78 per cent, or $25.98, of which is in wages alone. The industry gives employment in California to about five thousand men. Were the mines closed down these men would be out of employment and driven to seek work in other branches; thus displacing a like number of men, or lowering the wages of all, for supply and demand govern the labor market.

Our own country produces sufficient quicksilver for its own needs, in which case any importation from abroad must displace an equal amount of American product, and the money paid for the same goes into the coffers of the Rothschilds instead of into the American workingmen's pockets. The admission free of duty of a product manufactured exclusively by foreign governments (which themselves have a high protective tariff) to the detriment and ruin of an American industry is an anomaly in our revenue laws which we beg may not take place. The foreign mines are owned by governments; our own mines are owned by individual citizens.

Under this statement of facts, which are reliable, will the honorable chairman and members of the Ways and Means Committee keep this mineral on the free list, cause the consumer to pay at least twice the present price, and drive into other industries 5,000 laborers earning unequaled wages; for this will be the inevitable result of such determination. In my opinion it would be wise to increase the tariff to insure the continuance of this industry to compete with a monopoly of foreign bankers in an article that has no equivalent. Our consumers must have it at some price or abandon enterprises requiring its use.

Such a course would violate no principle of protection or free trade, as this industry is an exceptional one, subjected to no principle or argument except that of nature's first law, self-preservation.

I have the honor to be, very truly, yours,

W. B. BUCKMINSTER,
Vice-President and General Manager
Ætna Consolidated Quicksilver Mining Company.

The returds on capital invested are very meager. In the ten years from 1874 to 1884 the production was 590,224 flasks. In the ten years from 1884 to 1894 (1894 estimated) the production was only 286,866 flasks, showing conclusively that if there were any great profit in the business the output would have increased rather than diminished.

May 1, 1872	90 per cent of existing duties.
June 6, 1872	Do.
1875	Free list.
March 3, 1883	10 per cent.
May 21, 1890	10 cents per pound.

The act of May 21, 1890, was as follows: "Quicksilver, 10 cents per pound. The flasks, bottles, or other vessels in which quicksilver is imported, shall be subject to the same rates of duty as they would be subjected to if imported empty."

Free list.—"Quicksilver flasks, or bottles, of either domestic or foreign manufacture, which shall have been actually exported from the United States."

EXHIBIT B.

WAGES.

The wages paid at the Spanish Almaden mine, so far as I have been enabled to obtain them, are reliable.

Miners' ore contract, per day	$0.81
Miners' rock contract, per day	.57
Masons in quarries, per day	1.03
Lumbermen, per day	.55
Furnacemen, per day	.40

These departments command the highest wages; hence we may conclude their wages to be from 50 cents to 60 cents per day.

The amount of wages paid in California for relative positions is:

Laborers in ore chambers, per day	$2.00
Miners	2.80
Laborers on surface	2.00
Firemen	1.75
Timbermen, including captain	3.20
Carpenters	$3 and $3.50
Blasters	2.75
Surface mining	1.50

ORE.

Of all the rock mined in Almaden, Spain, 93 per cent is sufficiently good ore to be put through the furnaces. In California, of all the rock mined only 24 per cent is sufficiently good ore to go through the furnaces.

PRICE.

In 1850, when the Cinnabar was discovered in California, the ruling price per flask of 76½ pounds, standard weight, was $114.50, or $1.50 per pound. It is now $37 per flask, or 48.3 cents per pound, and though great fluctuations in price have occurred during the forty-two years of its production in California, yet notwithstanding these fluctuations, its price has been in the main steadily declining.

*Not yet known, but will probably be considerably less than 1892.

A strong point which I wish to make is, that with the increase of the California product prices declined; as it decreased prices advanced, showing California production has for forty-two years controlled the price of the world.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to strike quicksilver from the free list.

Mr. STEWART. This is a product on which both the producers and consumers want a tariff. There is no doubt about that. I have been familiar with the quicksilver question for the last forty years, and I will state that the principal portion of the quicksilver consumed in the United States has been consumed by the miners and in the mining regions. It has been understood that there is no check upon the Rothschilds to monopolize the industry other than the production of the United States.

The European mines are much richer than the mines in California; the mines in Spain and Austria are greater mines than ours. There is certainly 10 or 15 cents difference in the cost of a pound of quicksilver, and whenever there has been no duty upon quicksilver the habit has been to put down its price until the American mines were closed, and when they are once closed, it takes a long time to get them in operation, for it is very expensive to start them again. When quicksilver advances in price the mines are again opened and when the price decreases they are shut down. The existence of a duty has been a great protection to the miners in setting the price, and preventing the Rothschilds from controling it.

I speak advisedly when I say that the duties which have been maintained for some years are essential to this industry. There is no objection on the part of the consumers to the duty, because they know very well what will happen and what has happened in the past when the duty was removed. For a little time the price will be put down, the mines will be closed, and then we shall be compelled to pay the exorbitant prices which may be fixed by the Rothschilds.

I hope the committee will let the tariff on quicksilver stand as it is in the existing law. Certainly that will be more satisfactory to all the parties concerned and to the consumer as well as the producer; though I speak especially in the interest of the consumer.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. I ask him is it not the desire of the miners, who are the great consumers of quicksilver, that this duty shall be kept on and the American quicksilver mines kept open?

Mr. STEWART. Undoubtedly. I have received constantly petitions and memorials on this subject during my service in the Senate, and the desire has been universal that a suitable duty should be imposed on quicksilver. I have not known a single exception to it. No miner has ever asked to have the duty taken off; on the contrary, the miners have asked to have it maintained, for the reason that it gave them cheaper quicksilver.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that during the past year quicksilver has been as low as $30 per flask, and the highest point reached in that period on the Pacific coast has been $58.

Mr. STEWART. If the duty is removed they will not be able to produce it at all; and it will only be a question of a few months when the mines of the United States will have to close. After they have remained closed for a time, it will be difficult to start them up, for the mines will fill with water, the machinery will rust, and great damage be done in every way. That is the experience we have had for forty years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out:

599. Quicksilver.

Mr. PLATT. I do not really see why quicksilver should be put upon the free list if the statements made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who opened the discussion, are true. Nobody in this country asks that it shall be done, and the only persons to be interested in it are the Rothschilds. I had observed, Mr. President, that certain trusts in this country seemed to have duties or the lack of duties according as they desired, but why we should frame an item in this bill simply for the purpose of pleasing the Rothschilds is a thing which I can not understand.

But, if the statements which have been made, and made emphatically in the Senate, that there is nobody in this country asking to put this article on the free list, that the consumers as well as the producers of it want the duty, and there is nobody anywhere in the whole world who wants it made free except the Rothschilds, it seems to me that it does require some explanation on the other side of the Chamber before the Senate should be asked to take off the duty and put quicksilver on the free list.

Mr. LODGE. Before the vote is taken I want to say a single word more on this subject—simply to emphasize the position that the consumers want this duty kept on. I think the great bulk of the consumers, who are mine owners, and the practical miners of the United States want this duty kept on, because the American competition, which keeps down the price of quicksilver, is all-important to them. The producers want the duty kept on; the men employed in the quicksilver mines want it kept on. The dividends paid by these American mines are extremely small. They do not yield great incomes.

There does not seem to be a single argument even advanced, except that on an exceptional occasion 4,000 flasks of quicksilver were exported, and because under the putting up of the price by the Rothschilds monopoly our people have been able to export and lower the price again; and for that act they are to be punished here, and have their mines closed. The taking away of the duty will close the quicksilver mines, and no argument is advanced in favor of it, and I have not heard of any request for it being made by the consumers or by any portion of the American people.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have a letter on this subject from a gentleman who is really the managing man in the quicksilver business in California, which gives certain facts which I think ought to go in the RECORD, and I desire them to go there, making some correction as to the amount of quicksilver returned in the Treasury reports as having been exported. There is an amount given there which is greater than the total product of California. In this letter Mr. Randol points out how that error occurred, and I should like to have it go into the RECORD as part of my remarks.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

Mr. ALLISON. As we are to vote on this question, I think we ought to know the contents of the letter, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the letter will be read. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 18, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the enclosed letter from our friend, Mr. J. Downey Harvey, I beg to inform you that with my associates I had invested over $500,000 in quicksilver properties in California shortly before the exit of the Republican Administration, and now under the change proposed in the new tariff bill of putting quicksilver on the free list in place of the duty then and now existing of 10 cents per pound, we are threatened with almost the total loss of our investment in an industry carried on solely in California in all of the United States, and, as will be shown by the papers herewith, one that is subject not only to the fluctuations of commerce but to the extraordinary competition of the quicksilver mines owned and worked by the Governments of Spain and Austria, in addition to the risks attending all mining industries.

The relative position of the mines of California and Spain have not changed since the period when the Hon. Mr. Felton presented the subject to the House of Representatives, except that the California mines have had poorer ores and lower prices and consequently are now more than ever unequal to continue the battle between quicksilver produced in the United States—solely in California—by individuals or companies and quicksilver produced by the mines of Almaden, Spain, and Idria, Austria, mines owned and worked by the Governments of those countries, and also by mines in Italy, all of which have the advantage of lower-paid labor, and in one or more instances, higher grade ores, notably the Almaden mine of Spain, named "The Jewel of the Crown."

If the two mines—Almaden and Idria—were not Government enterprises as opposed to the individual industries of the United States in California, this appeal to your assistance would have less merit and perhaps would not need to be made, but when "The Jewel of the Crown," the Almaden of Spain, has an average production of 45,000 flasks for the eight months in which it is worked yearly, the ore averaging 10 per cent, against 30,000 flasks produced in California by twelve months' continuous work yearly, the ores in the last instance averaging less than 2 per cent, we believe the question should be considered not as between individuals and companies, but one of national importance between the United States and Spain and Austria.

It must be evident that if those nations succeed in their evident intention to close the quicksilver mines of the United States, they can and will place the price of quicksilver, for this country at least, at a height before unknown, and will have it in their power to cripple and retard not only the gold and silver mining industries but the many and various industries dependent for successful continuance upon a fair price for quicksilver; such as the manufacture of mirrors, of colors, of chemical preparations and drugs, of high explosives, and also restrict its use in electricity and other arts.

I am informed, and I believe correctly, that the proposed removal of duty on quicksilver arose from an error in figures made by some one in the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, when the question of the free list was under consideration, and the general principle was made that articles having a large exportation as shown by the customs return exhibited to that committee could with justice to all be made free.

I do not object to that principle, but quicksilver does not come within it—on merit. Nor was it the intention of the majority of the committee to include it, but they were led astray by a curious mistake in division.

The customs returns showed an export for the year of 300,000 pounds. Reducing that to flasks, which were averaged at 75 pounds each (although the exact contents of each American flask is 76½ pounds), the result should be 4,000 flasks exported, but a blunder made it 40,000 flasks, an excess of 36,000 flasks, which as shown by the inclosed statement of production was largely beyond the total yield of all the mines in the United States for any one of the past four years.

Is it not right that this error should be corrected and the quicksilver producers of California saved from extermination, and be permitted to exist by continuing the present duty?

If it is thought otherwise or found to be impossible, can not at least this be done—add to the paragraph on quicksilver in the free list, "Provided, That upon quicksilver the product of any country which imposes a duty upon quicksilver exported from the United States, there shall be levied, paid, and collected the rate of duty existing prior to the passage of this act."

It should be understood that quicksilver is not a raw material.

The cinnabar ore from which it is produced is mined under extraordinary difficulties, at great depth, in nearly all American mines. That by the application of heat and condensation in costly furnaces and condensation chambers the metallic quicksilver is obtained and that labor forms a large part of its cost.

In conclusion I have to thank you for your consideration of this statement and beg you will exert your powerful influence in behalf of the California quicksilver producers and not permit them to suffer a great and unwarranted injury through an error which you have power to correct.

Yours, truly,

J. B. RANDOL.

Hon. STEPHEN M. WHITE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE and Mr. PERKINS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the vote is taken on the pending amendment, I desire to make a single observation.

One of the most ordinary arguments that has been made in this prolonged discussion has been that the moment it is shown that we are producing in America anything that is exported, therefore the duty should be lowered upon it, or it should be placed upon the free list. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] a moment ago called attention to the fact that there were large exportations of quicksilver, and therefore, presumably, it should go on the free list.

As I have read modern political history in this country, it is one of the cardinal doctrines of the Democratic party that we should get possession of the markets of the world. It has been dinned in our ears, certainly for the last ten years, in all economic discussions that we should so legislate as that we should get possesion of the markets of the world. Just how we are going to get possession of the markets of the world if, when we commence to export an article, the duty is to be reduced or it is to be placed on the free list, I confess surpasses my comprehension.

I sympathize very deeply with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and with the people of California in reference to this industry. It seems to me we ought to protect it; it seems to me we ought to stand here in advocacy of an American industry as against a great governmental trust, organized, fostered, and dictated by the Rothschilds.

I can not persuade myself to believe, before the vote is taken, that the majority in the Senate will, in the face of the facts which have been developed in this debate, place this product partially of the mines of California on the free list, and by so doing absolutely destroy it, and give the monopoly into the hands of foreign producers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. Will it be agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi to transfer those pairs on this vote, as we have done on former votes?

Mr. GEORGE. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], but I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I should vote "yea" if my vote were necessary to make a quorum. I shall not vote at present.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If agreeable to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], I will transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], which will enable the Senator from Delaware and me to vote.

Mr. HIGGINS. I prefer to observe my pair.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Then I announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PALMER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and withhold my vote unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. WHITE. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and unless my vote be necessary to make a quorum I shall not vote.

Mr. PATTON. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], though I am at liberty to vote if my vote be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to announce that on this vote my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is absent by leave of the Senate on account of sickness. If present he would vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allen,	Hale,	Morgan,	Squire,
Allison,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Stewart,

Coke,	Hoar,	Patton,
Daniel,	Hunton,	Pettigrew,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, after line 2, it is proposed to insert as a new paragraph:

Quicksilver, 7 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary read as follows:

600. Quills, prepared or unprepared, but not made up into complete articles.
601. Quinia, sulphate of, and all alkaloids or salts of cinchona bark.
602. Rags, not otherwise specially provided for in this act.
603. Regalia and gems, statues, statuary, and specimens of sculpture where specially imported in good faith for the use of any society incorporated or established solely for educational, philosophical, literary, or religious purposes, or for the encouragement of fine arts, or for the use or by order of any college, academy, school, seminary of learning, or public library in the United States; but the term "regalia" as herein used shall be held to embrace only such insignia of rank or office or emblems, as may be worn upon the person or borne in the hand during public exercises of the society or institution, and shall not include articles of furniture or fixtures, or of regular wearing apparel, nor personal property of individuals.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the committee what is meant by the words "specimens of sculpture." I believe this language comes from the old law, but it seems to be a very curious phrase. What are "specimens of sculpture?"

Mr. ALDRICH. Plaster casts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Rhode Island, who had something to do with the framing of the old law, says it is intended to cover plaster casts.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I know the Senator from Massachusetts is on his feet and I know he is speaking, but I have not been able to hear a single word he has said.

Mr. HOAR. I inquired of the Senator from Arkansas what was the definition of the term "specimens of sculpture." It comes from the old law, I understand, and is not the phrase of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suppose it means articles of sculpture.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Rhode Island understands that it means plaster casts. I should like to insert after the word "specimens," if there be no objection, the words "or casts." I suppose that would make the meaning clear. I do not know but that it is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. As that phrase is in the existing law there can be no difficulty about its construction.

Mr. HOAR. It has been only the law for two years. This provision applies only to articles "imported in good faith for the use of any society incorporated or established solely for educational, philosophical, literary, or religious purposes," etc.

I think the words "or casts," should be inserted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I agree to the Senator's suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 603, page 111, line 21, after the word "specimens," it is proposed to insert "or casts;" so as to read:

Regalia and gems, statues, statuary, and specimens or casts, or sculpture, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

605. Saffron and safflower, and extract of, and saffron cake.
606. Sago, crude, and sago flour.
607. Salacine.
608. Salt in bulk, and salt in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, but the coverings shall pay the same rate of duty as if imported separately: Provided, That if salt is imported from any country which imposed a duty upon salt exported from the United States, then there shall be levied, paid, and collected upon such salt the rate of duty existing prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 112, line 16, paragraph 608, I move to insert after the word "country," the words "whether independent or a dependency;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That if salt is imported from any country, whether independent or a dependency, which imposed a duty upon salt exported from the United States, then there shall be levied, paid, and collected upon such salt the rate of duty existing prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether the word "imposed" in line 16 should not be "imposes"?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It should be "imposes." I thank the Senator for the suggestion. I had it marked, but overlooked it.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to amend the paragraph by inserting after the word "packages," in line 14, "5 cents a hundred pounds;" so as to read:

Salt in bulk, and salt in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, 5 cents per hundred pounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 608, page 112, line 14, after the word "packages," insert "5 cents per hundred pounds;" so as to read:

Salt in bulk, and salt in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, 5 cents per hundred pounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HOAR. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee. I hope he rises for the purpose of moving that the Senate adjourn. It is very hot and uncomfortable.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 20, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 19, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. THOMAS O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following communication was read:

JUNE 19, 1894.

SIR: I hereby name the Hon. JOSEPH W. BAILEY, a Representative from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair for this day.

CHARLES F. CRISP, Speaker.

To Hon. JAMES KERR,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5103) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota."

Be it enacted, etc., That the fifth section of the act of Congress passed January 14, 1889, providing for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, be and the same is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That after the survey, examination, and appraisal of at least 100,000 acres of said pine lands have been made, the portion so surveyed, examined, and appraised shall be proclaimed as in market and offered for sale in the following manner: The Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall cause notices to be inserted once in each week for four consecutive weeks in one newspaper of general circulation published in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, and Crookston, Minn.; Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Detroit, Mich.; Philadelphia and Williamsport, Pa., and Boston, Mass., of the sale of said land at public auction to the highest bidder for cash at the local land office of the district within which said lands are located, said notice to state the time and place and terms of such sale. At such sale said lands shall be offered in 40-acre parcels, except in case of fractions containing either more or less than 40 acres, which shall be sold entire. In no event shall any parcel be sold for a less sum than its appraised value. The residue of such lands remaining unsold after such public offering shall thereafter be subject to private sale for cash at the appraised value of the same, upon application at the local land office. And from time to time, as fast as a quantity of 100,000 acres of the remaining pine lands, the disposal of which is provided for in this act, or a final residuum of a less quantity, shall have been surveyed, examined, and appraised, the same course shall be pursued for the disposal thereof until all shall have been disposed of as provided for herein."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Insert after the word "amended," and before the word "so," the following:

So far as the same relates to the White Earth and Red Lake Reservations, and as to the other reservations mentioned in said act whenever all the allotments of land in severalty shall have been made to the Indians of each reservation, respectively, as therein provided;

And after the word "Duluth," in line 16, insert the words "Stillwater, Taylor's Falls, St. Cloud, and Brainerd."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, what committee is this bill reported from?

Mr. BALDWIN. It is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. They have reported it unanimously. The bill is recommended by——

Mr. HOLMAN. What member of the committee made the report?

Mr. BALDWIN. The report of the committee is at the Clerk's desk if you desire it read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. This is not a bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McRAE. I think with a word or two we can explain this bill and save the time necessary for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the measure comes from the Committee on Public Lands, so that I was not familiar with it.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman from Minnesota is doubtless more familiar with the subject than I am, but it involves, I think, only a single question, and if he will allow me I will explain it as I understand it. The act of which this is amendatory does not authorize the sale of this timber until all of it is appraised, which is estimated at about 4,000,000 acres, I believe. The Committee on Public Lands, in reporting this bill, acted upon the recommendation of the Department of the Interior, and all concur in the opinion that the placing on the market of so large an amount of pine timber at any one time will not be beneficial to the Indian or to the Government; so this amendment is intended to authorize the sale in lots of 100,000 acres as appraised, and to increase the number of places for advertising the sales. That is all there is in it. The sale is to be made under the old law, and at the minimum price fixed by it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, then, this is for the sale of the timber alone, and not for the sale of the land.

Mr. BALDWIN. If I may be permitted a few words of explanation——

Mr. HOLMAN. This measure belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but may not inappropriately have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It might properly be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but more properly to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is mistaken about the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs over this bill. The treaty with the Indians was ratified in 1889, and the land is now being examined and disposed of by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the jurisdiction has passed from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BALDWIN. This measure is in the interest of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and is asked for by those Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the changes from existing law?

Mr. BALDWIN. The Nelson act provided for the sale of these lands, provided that they should be sold when all the pine has been estimated, and then it is to be sold in a body.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is, the timber and not the land.

Mr. BALDWIN. It is the timber and not the land. The land is provided for in another clause of the act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

I move to amend, on page 2, line 20, by inserting after the word "Duluth" the word "Winona."

Mr. BALDWIN. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BALDWIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6078) to authorize the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The bill was read at length.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LANDS FOR PARK, NEWPORT, KY.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2586) granting certain property to the city of Newport, Ky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the lots and parts of lots and the appurtenances and appendages thereunto belonging, comprising the old military post or barracks property situated at the confluence of the Ohio and Licking Rivers, in the city of Newport, in the county of Campbell and State of Kentucky, be, and is hereby, granted and conveyed to the said city of Newport, to have and to hold for public purposes forever.

SEC. 2. That whenever said city shall cease to use the said property for public purposes, or shall use the same, or any part thereof for any other than public purposes, all the right, title, and interest hereby granted and conveyed to said city, shall at once and without any act whatever upon the part of the United States revert to and become the property of the United States.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee were agreed to.

Section 1, line 10, before "public" insert "a."

Line 10, strike out the word "purposes" and insert "park."

Section 2, line 2, strike out "public," insert "the" before the word "purposes," and after "purposes" insert "of a public park."

Lines 3 and 4, strike out "public purposes" and insert "for a public park."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding section 3 in the words and figures following, to wit:

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on January 1, 1895."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BERRY a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1228) for the relief of Charles W. Cronk;

A bill (S. 1365) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of the late Alexander W. Baldwin as United States district judge for the district of Nevada;

A bill (S. 763) relieving the personal representatives of John Sherman, jr., late United States marshal for the Territory of New Mexico, from the requirements of section 833 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (S. 1597) to amend an act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes;" and

A joint resolution (S. R. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him?

Mr. SAYERS. Let the bill be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I will say to the gentleman that this bill has passed the Senate, and has been favorably reported by the House committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,800, to Albert E. Redstone, of Tulare County, Cal., for loss sustained by the incorporation of his preemption claim within the limits of the Sequoia Park Reservation, Tulare County, Cal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask that the report in that case be read.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, the report is quite long, and I can explain the matter briefly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from California will make a statement as to the facts.

Mr. HATCH. I trust the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS] will not insist on having this long report read.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STALLINGS. Then I will ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is equivalent to an objection. The regular order is the call of the committees for reports.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a joint resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would not be permissible unless the demand for the regular order should be withdrawn.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. This is a matter of public business, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the regular order so that this joint resolution may be considered at this time.

Mr. STALLINGS. I will withdraw the demand for the purpose of having the matter considered which is called up by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOWERS of California. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman from Alabama withdraws his demand, does not that bring up my bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An objection would defeat the particular bill. The demand for the regular order would defeat all bills, and require the call of the committees for reports. The withdrawal of the demand for the regular order with a view to permitting the House to consider the joint resolution presented by the gentleman from Illinois would only be equivalent to an objection to the particular bill called up by the gentleman from California. The Clerk will report the joint resolution for the consideration of which the gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) for the appointment of Charles M. Anderson a member of the Board of Managers for the Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. BRODERICK. How many managers does this resolution propose to appoint?

Mr. GROSVENOR. One.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There are three vacancies; and the resolution reported from the committee as a substitute provides for filling all three.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the committee reports a substitute for the original resolution, and the substitute will now be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute.

Mr. BRODERICK. I think this resolution should be taken up when we have better opportunity to examine and discuss it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas objects; and the regular order having been demanded, the Clerk will call the committees for reports.

MANAGERS OF SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported as a substitute for joint resolution H. Res. 179 and 186 a joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The joint resolutions (H. Res. 179 and 186) were, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

COLD WATER RESERVOIRS, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 6987 a bill (H. R. 7488) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for sites on the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., for cold water reservoirs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 6987 was by unanimous consent laid on the table.

LAND FOR MILITIA PURPOSES IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 171) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation for the use of the militia of North Dakota, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7440) to restore the pensions of widows in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS.

Mr. LATIMER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 5268 a bill (H. R. 7489) to amend section 3 of an act to withdraw certain public lands from private entry, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1889; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

By unanimous consent, House bill No. 5268 was laid on the table.

ANTIOPTION.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining options and futures, and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, the address of my colleague from New York [Mr. WARNER], submitted to the House yesterday, carried so many of the points with which I proposed to deal, that I have found it necessary to change the order of my remarks, and omit many of the points that he treated so admirably. While I deplore the havoc that this circumstance has brought to the symmetry of my speech, I must congratulate the House upon having been treated to so masterful, minute, complete, and truthful a description of the various classes of operations of the exchanges and bankers, which the authors of this bill claim are hurtful to the farmers, and which it is their object to correct or prevent.

You must have been struck, whatever your prejudices may be, with the admirable organization which skillfully unites enterprise and capital in the work of marketing the great staples of our country.

You can not also have failed to observe the minute subdivision of the work resulting in bringing specially skilled men into the performance of each branch of it—the arrangement for the elimination, as far as possible, of every risk, and the world-wide scope of its operations.

My colleague did his work so thoroughly that any attempted addition on my part would not add to your information, and would needlessly consume the time of the House.

I shall therefore pass on to other matters.

We are passing through a season of great business depression. It affects all classes, rich and poor; the farmer, the manufacturer, the mechanic, and the capitalist. There are very few failures, but a general paralysis of trade and enterprise. This condition not only prevails in our own country but is general throughout the world. I have not, in a business experience extending through a period of forty years, during which time I have done business with nearly every nation on the globe, known a time when some of them could not be pointed out as being prosperous. To-day I do not know a single exception to the prevailing depression. I shall not attempt to account for it; the globe seems to be swinging in a cloud. I think that it can be fairly claimed that we are fully as prosperous as any nation, and more prosperous than most of them.

The business philosopher will not be greatly disturbed by this condition. He knows that it is only one of those periodical depressions that always follow seasons of prosperity, when commerce and enterprise are resting, as nature rests in winter. He will account for its universality by the fact that the commercial relations of nations are more interlocked than ever before; that when one suffers all must be affected. He believes that when overproduction has been consumed trade will again spring up, and the wheels of commerce and manufacture will again be set in motion. The machinery of commerce is not destroyed, but only working on half time, and is all ready and in good order to resume full operation when the proper time arrives.

The man who has a pet theory and narrow views, the result of limited experience, will claim that all the difficulty arises from a disregard of the idea that he advocates. So it happens that we are now deluged by a great number of crude suggestions as to what will most quickly remedy the evils of the times and restore prosperity to the nation. They find their advocates in Congress, and the bill now before the committee is one of them.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asked me yesterday, in reply to a question that I addressed to him, if I had studied the bill. I replied that I had done so. I have studied its provisions carefully and, with a full knowledge of what he seeks to accomplish, am prepared to tell him without hesitation that it is absolutely impracticable. That even if the end that he seeks to accomplish were a desirable one, the mechanical defects are so glaring and so poorly adapted to existing conditions that they would defeat it, or so seriously cripple the operations of commerce as to justify its disregard from the beginning. You can no more subject the rushing, roaring currents of the business of the New York and Chicago exchanges, where hundreds of transactions involving millions of dollars are rushed through in a day, to the petty annoyances of this scheme, than you can dam the floods of Niagara with one of his proposed revenue stamps.

Now, I propose to come to the consideration of the report accompanying the bill. Although it is divided into several heads it is all based upon the claim that speculative sales and resales of certain farm and plantation products have a tendency to lower the prices of those products below the limits that they would naturally maintain were there no such operations. That is their first claim.

The report does not contend that these operations are in violation of the laws of the several States in which they take place; and the right of the General Government to interfere and impose pains and penalties on such transactions is based solely on the question of revenue that may be derived from the tax, or the sale of stamps, and the penalties collected.

I see that no estimate is made of the amount of revenue that it is supposed will be collected under the operation of such a measure. If the revenue bills now before Congress are sufficient to provide needed support for the Government, then this would be an excess of revenue and to that extent undemocratic. I shall deal with these propositions in the reverse order of their statement.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman in charge of the bill will claim that revenue is the primary consideration, but will admit that it is a device to make possible an enactment overriding State laws and the practices permitted in the States under the State laws.

A simple statement of this point should be sufficient to secure the attention of anyone who believes that legislation should not be strained to accomplish a temporary purpose; that the General Government should not by indirection seek to accomplish what it can not do under the plain and simple interpretation of the Constitution, and that due regard should be paid to the laws of each State regulating its internal affairs.

The gentlemen making the report fail to state how the suppression of these practices, that they so strongly condemn in this country—and I beg your attention especially to this point—will relieve the farmer and the planter from the results of the same practices and mode of doing business in the countries that consume our surplus, and practically set the prices, subject of course to the laws of supply and demand for not only our surplus but also for what we ourselves consume.

They also fail to tell us how it is that, notwithstanding all the manipulations that they so strongly condemn in regard to these products, our prices have never differed, except by a very small margin, after calculating freights, from those that prevail in consuming countries. They claim that the prices in this country are put down below their normal condition by the operation of our exchanges. And yet they do not explain, I repeat, why it is that there is no difference practically between our prices here and the prices on the commodities in consuming countries. They must either assume that the operations of our markets and exchanges control the markets of the world or they must yield the point and abandon the claim that these practices in our markets unfavorably influence the prices.

They also fail to tell us how the farmer and the planter are to be benefited by practically limiting the demand for their products to a smaller circle of buyers. This would inevitably be the case where the artificial help to carry the crop is withdrawn and the demand is limited to the few rich capitalists who have the money to invest in the crops and the ability to hold them until they are required for consumption.

They also failed to tell us, Mr. Chairman, why it is that the Consolidated Millers' Association of the country, without an exception, favor this law. They are buyers of wheat. Why do they favor the law? Fortunately, we are not left in ignorance upon this point, as they have, in moments of confidence, said that the price of wheat was too high, and that if speculative competition was withdrawn they would be able to deal with the farmers upon their own terms both as to prices and date of delivery.

That statement, Mr. Chairman, was made to my own firm by the agent of the milling syndicate in the West. He was asked: "Why do you favor the antioption law?" and he said, "We want to deal with the farmers directly. We shall get our wheat cheaper, and we shall take it just as we want it."

Mr. PATTERSON. In that connection, why is it that flour is not included in that bill?

Mr. COOMBS. Because the millers wanted to be left to speculate in futures, but to deny the privilege to the exchanges on these articles which go to make up their products.

There is one omission that I see in this report, which appeared in the report of the former bill made to the Fifth-second Congress, but it was practically repeated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] in his address yesterday.

In the former report they stated that every speculative sale supplanted the sale of an equal amount of the real product, and reduced its price proportionately. In that same report it appeared that fifty times the product of the country was actually sold upon the exchanges.

Take the two things together, gentlemen, the statement that every fictitious sale made had the same effect as though that was real wheat produced. Consequently, as wheat was at that time under what they call these unfavorable conditions, selling upon the exchanges at 80 cents a bushel, it should, according to that claim, have sold at $40 a bushel had these unfavorable conditions been removed.

Now, I submit, gentlemen, that if that is the style of reasoning which underlies the conception of this bill, that it is very unsafe for us to follow it; that it does not furnish us assurance enough of wisdom in its conception to warrant us in perfecting it into legislation. They will not deny that this one reason is their sole basis for this proposed legislation; if they have any other I now call upon them for it. If I have in that simple calculation proved the absurdity of it I may reasonably hope that it will have some influence upon your votes.

We are told that the agricultural interests of the country are in a very depressed condition, that the farmers are very much dissatisfied, and demand this legislation. It is very difficult to tell whether this statement is true or not, for, unfortunately, the farmer has become a bone of contention between rival political parties, and statements are not always made with the finest regard for accuracy.

The farmer, or the imaginary farmer, has become a political factor. There are in my mind, gentlemen, two classes of farmers; that is, there is a class that I will call the farmer of the politician, the imaginary farmer that he has set up for his political purposes. He is a narrow, cramped man, looking with jaundiced eyes upon the world, prejudiced, ready to accept any advantage that they can offer him, whether it is honest or dishonest. He is set up upon every public platform, and patted on the back and cried over. He is like the stuffed figure at a wake. He is carried around in processions, and becomes an article of trade and commerce for the politician.

Mr. SIBLEY. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption for a moment? I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he is quoting now the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. COOMBS. No; I have nothing that he has said or written in my mind. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, this is not my idea of the farmer. I will tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] what my idea of the farmer has always been. I remember the farmer as the pioneer of civilization; I remember him as the man who hewed the road into the forest, who beat back the hordes of savages, who climbed the mountains and went through their passes, who carried civilization to the prairie and to the valley. I remember him and picture him as an aggressive man, accustomed to self-reliance, ready and willing to bear his full share of the ills of life without murmuring or complaint.

I do not look upon him as a narrow-minded man, who is naturally full of prejudices against everything that is Eastern. You for your own reasons have tried to make him so, but I do not believe that you have succeeded. The farmer of the West and the planter of the South are the natural allies of the merchant of the East. For while they are cutting the paths for civilization in the forest and mountains, subduing the prairies and the secluded valleys and covering them with waving harvests, his brother the merchant of the East, is opening the paths of commerce to every market in the world to dispose of his productions.

Their interests are mutual, and their natural alliance should not be destroyed by meddling politicians for selfish purposes. I do not believe that the farmer is pleased with the pictures of him that are presented to the people of the East, and that are constantly held up in Congress. He will some day, if he does not now, resent it and hurl from power the men who misrepresent him.

We all know that there is a great falling off in prices of agricultural products, but there has also been a falling off in the prices of all other products, and there is no doubt that while he has suffered by the falling off of prices, he has also profited by this decline to a corresponding degree, and in many cases to a far greater degree.

I do not think that it will be denied by the advocates of this bill that the farmer could to-day buy more agricultural implements of a better class, more clothing, more supplies, for the same quantity of wheat than he could in the year 1860. They who produce these things that he buys have been correspondingly benefited by their ability to buy the agricultural products that they consume at a much less price.

A bale of cotton to-day in the South will buy more bacon and other food, as well as agricultural implements, than it would in the olden times. Some gentlemen upon this floor who represent the cotton-growing sections of the South have told me so.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] yesterday, in answer to my question, admitted this, and seeing the force of the argument and the danger of the admission, turned to the question of the debt upon the farm. It was a confession of weakness.

I do not think that you who listened to his reply were particularly impressed by his fairness. The merchant in the city, the mechanic in the village, and the manufacturer all have mortgages upon their property; and why should the hardship in one case be considered as greater than in another. There are undoubtedly cases of great hardship, particularly to those farmers who have from lack of foresight located in sections of the country where soil is poor, irrigation imperfect, and where, as in some portions of Kansas, they can only average a crop once in three years. But certainly these extreme cases, which could have been prevented by wise foresight, should not be taken as types in judging of the condition of agriculture generally.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOMBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from New York to say that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] in his speech on yesterday had admitted there never was a time in the history of the country when the product of a bale of cotton would buy more of bacon, a great article of consumption with the people of the South, or more mess pork than now. If the gentleman made that admission, he did not know anything about the facts in the case. For the last two years cotton has sold for 6½ and 7 cents a pound, and mess pork has sold at $19 to $20 a barrel and bacon from 12 to 18 cents a pound.

Mr. COOMBS. Then certainly the farmer of the West has no reason to complain of the price of his product.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. That is what Southern men had to pay.

Mr. SIBLEY. And it was the bankers who got that money and not the men who raised the pork.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he believes this bill can do any harm to the merchant who is doing a legitimate business?

Mr. COOMBS. I will answer that further on.

Mr. Chairman, I will send to the Clerk's desk an editorial from the St. Louis Republic of May 29, which I desire to have read. It is a thoughtful article and well worthy of the consideration of those Democrats who are ready to lower the standard of Democracy.

The Clerk read as follows:

TO DEAL WITH POPULISM.

There are Democratic politicians who think that the party must take a great deal of pains to prevent the growth of the People's party in Democratic States.

As far as the Populists are Socialists, any Democratic effort to win them over would be a futility from the start. The Democratic party must be born again, and born very different, if it is to ever be a success as a teacher of Socialism.

The average Populist is not a Socialist at all. He is a natural Democrat who is beginning to learn politics. The alphabet stage of political education is socialism.

It corresponds with the religious stage of the tribes who attribute to their idols unlimited virtues and powers, and pray effusively until continued disappointment brings on a general smashing of images. It will not be long now before the leaders who are professional Socialists will be unable to collect railroad fare and lecture fees.

The American voter quickly outgrows faith in Socialistic promises. See how soon the ultra Socialist leaders were compelled to put land loans and subtreasuries in the background. See how little there is now of vast Treasury note issues in their speeches. They are reduced to dependence on a variation of the Democratic idea of free silver coinage. Before long they will be trying to follow along after the progress of their own rank and file to the straight Democratic platform of free coinage at a bimetallic ratio.

Populism has been a real force only in old Republican States—Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Nevada. Weaver and Donnelly have had no counterparts in the old Democratic States. The rise of Populism, like the rise of the Coxeys and Kelleys, can be understood by tracing the centralization of the war period and the subsequent efforts of Republican Federalists to impose war centralization as a permanent policy of American Government.

A strong, centralized government presupposes a weak people. Faith in socialism presupposes a people politically blind.

In States which have been long Democratic, the people know too much to believe in any of the idols of centralization or socialism. They are not fooled by protection, by war debts, by irredeemable money, by Government support and ownership of labor, or by any of the other beauties the centralizers exploit. No further experience is needed to teach them that government, from the town to the nation, can do no more than to spend money first deducted from the earnings of labor.

Every Democrat is clear about that truth, and the man who has reached so far is not going to be deceived about what a Government's limitations should be.

He is not going to suppose that a partly socialized Government which has been an oppression under the Republicans will become a blessing when still more socialized and under Weaver, PEFFER, Mrs. Diggs, Waite, Lowelling, and SIMPSON, who have the bad doctrines of the Republicans, with much less capacity and experience in the practical conduct of business.

The Democratic party need not worry about the spread of Populism. Let it stick to its tried and proved principles and to its habit of plain, sensible government. All the healthy minds among the Populists will come to it. The unhealthy minds will remain socialistic and either join the Republicans or hold out for their own somewhat more advanced form of centralization.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Is that from the New York World?

Mr. COOMBS. It is from the St. Louis Republic.

It has always been understood to be a distinctive feature of Democratic policy to interfere as little as possible in the domestic and business affairs of the people.

It has always insisted upon State's rights, and the policy of leaving to the people the working out of their own fortunes, unaided and unhindered by governmental interference.

We still believe that that is the only safe policy for our Republic; its effect is to build up our trade and industries upon a natural and true basis, and to cultivate in the people a spirit of manly self-reliance. While it entails some temporary disadvantages, they are far outweighed by the evils that would result from a departure from such a wise system.

The temptation to legislate to meet temporary emergencies of trade or condition are very frequent, but should be resisted, for it is a hopless task to undertake to follow and regulate them in their swiftly changing relations; they are too subtle for such crude machinery, and once entered upon, create demands from so many conflicting interests that it will be impossible to satisfy them. The equilibrium once disturbed by artificial interference works untold injury to every interest, not excepting the particular one that we attempt to benefit.

If we resist the temptation and remain loyal to our conception of the true functions of government, the difficulties will adjust themselves or disappear under the operations of the unwritten laws of trade, conflict of intelligent self-interest, and natural forces.

Our party has heretofore been true to this idea, and I trust will not now ignore its record.

The Republican party has stood as the representative of opposite views on this question, the most conspicuous example of which has been in the practice of the doctrine of protection, whereby it was sought to build up our producers and manufacturers by imposing discriminating duties upon the products of other countries.

This was an attractive doctrine until the people began to understand that they were all being taxed indirectly for the benefit of special classes—when they rebelled against it and hurled that party from power. Events that are occurring at this time prove to us that it came too late to prevent a dangerous perversion of public sentiment and an injury to the quality of our citizenship.

The giving of bounties to one class not only demoralized them and sapped their self-reliance, but led to demands from all other classes and gave birth to a brood of political heresies that are antagonistic to the simple conception of government entertained by the founders of the Republic.

We are asked for subtreasuries and Government loans to individuals; unlimited issue of currency and Government employment of all of the unemployed; so-called armies march from all sections of the country upon Washington to enforce their demands upon Congress. All of this indicates that socialism has taken root in our midst, and that it is dangerous to proceed further in the direction of class legislation.

The Populist party to-day is the outgrowth of the Republican policy of paternalism, and is the natural ally of the Republican party, and as such it and its theories are to be fought, and not adopted by the Democracy.

I am, therefore, very sorry to see this bill, which is a part of the faulty policy of paternalism, introduced into this House and pressed for adoption by so sterling a Democrat as the gentleman from Missouri.

It is clearly an attempt to legislate in the supposed interests of a certain class, and is the first break of Democracy in that direction.

It proves that even our Democratic blood has been poisoned by the virus of paternalism. It would have been much more natural that this measure should have emanated from the other side of the Hall, for it is a natural outgrowth of their policy.

Government must not be encouraged to further encroach upon the domain of the people; class legislation must cease if we wish to preserve our institutions and beat back the hordes of socialism which are clamoring for recognition.

When a false step is taken, and special privileges are accorded to any class, we find by experience that it is very difficult to retrace it. The battle that is to-day going on in this Capitol should be a sufficient warning. Every inch of ground held by the privileged class is being contested, and a defeat of the demands of the people seems imminent.

My experience as a merchant has given me great respect for the laws and regulations governing the commerce of the world, as well as for the machinery for carrying it on, that has been created to meet its necessities as they have arisen, and to facilitate its operations.

That organization is the growth of centuries, and has by universal acceptance readily adapted itself to changed conditions.

When produce, consumption, and operations were small, it was much simpler; with the increase of production and consumption, as well as enlarged intercourse brought about by steam and electricity, it has become more complicated, but has thoroughly adapted itself to the work of carrying on the enormous commerce and moving the immense crops of the world with the comparatively small cash capital in existence.

Organization, credit, and confidence have more than quadrupled the working power of the money of the world, because they are universal in their operations, ignoring nationalities and boundary lines; a partial realization of the dream of the brotherhood of mankind. I can not, therefore, look with any complacency upon the extremely unwise legislation proposed in this bill.

Its inevitable effect will be to throw us out of harmony and relations with the highly organized commercial machinery of the world; drive from us a large amount of the capital which is used and is necessary in moving our crops; and force us to stand in this day, when all mankind is seeking closer relations with one another, solitary and alone.

[Mr. SIBLEY withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Chairman, in the district which I have the honor to represent, and in which I reside, is located the Chicago Board of Trade. Its members for the most part are my personal friends, and I may well regret that they have not a more eloquent champion of their cause to speak for them here to-day. For many years I was myself a member of that organization, and what I shall say now will be from personal knowledge and from information born of an experience on that board.

While I shall say nothing about "oaks," nor "flowers," nor "bullfrogs," nor indulge in any flights of eloquence such as we have just listened to, yet I hope to present for your consideration a few practical thoughts bearing directly upon this subject, and to which I most respectfully invite and crave your attention. And before entering directly upon the argument which I wish to make in opposition to this bill, I will take the present opportunity to correct some of the errors into which the chairman of the committee [Mr. HATCH] seems to have fallen, and to which he gave utterance in his opening speech of yesterday. Says the gentleman:

> Now, in every board of trade in the United States there is an obligation on the seller of these commodities named to deliver them at the designated time; there is an obligation on the part of the purchaser to receive them. And in this bill there is not another provision that does not hinge around that one great principle of the measure. The only difference in the world between this bill and the regulations of the Chicago Board of Trade, or any other board of trade in the United States, is that this bill, if enacted into law, will compel that delivery in good faith and honestly, while to-day these boards of trade, after making their own rules, have builded up a system of evading those rules by allowing the transaction to be consummated without the delivery of a single pound or ounce of what is sold under the contract.
> I again challenge any gentleman on this floor to produce the regulations or charter of any board of trade in the United States that do not contain such a provision; and then I challenge him to deny that the provision is violated in that board of trade every day and every hour.

Why, my friend can not mean this! If he is at all conversant with the principles of trading on the Chicago Board of Trade he can not mean that the rules of that body do not provide for constant settlement of trades between its members without the making of an actual delivery of the produce in every case, and if he is wrong in that particular he is in serious error to charge that the rule in question "is violated in that board of trade every day and every hour." To be sure the rules do provide for actual delivery when it is demanded by the buyer and that rule is most faithfully upheld, but another rule of the board of trade, which it seems impossible he should have overlooked, provides for offsets or settlements of the same by mutual consent of the parties to the transaction and is as follows (Rule XXII, section 6):

> In case it shall appear that the delivery of any outstanding trade or contract between members of the association may be offset by some other corresponding trade or contract made by the parties with other members of the association, and the parties to such trade or contract, or their authorized agents, consent to such offset, such trade or contract shall be deemed to have been settled, and any balance between the current market value of the property covered by such trade or contract, and the several contract prices shall be due and payable immediately by the parties from whom such balance may be due to the party entitled to receive the same under his contract, etc.

There is no occasion, therefore, for any appeal to Congress for the enforcement of this particular rule of the Chicago Board of Trade. The trouble with all these gentlemen seems to be that they seem determined to confound the trading in futures, which is the legitimate part of the business on the board, with options, which is the illegitimate species of business engaged in, it is true, by certain members of the board, but not recognized under its rules. Nor is relief granted in, nor any control exercised by the board over such transactions.

There can be no possible objection made to legislation which will prohibit this species of illegitimate trading, if national legislation to cover gambling of this nature is desirable at all, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to eliminate everything in this bill pertaining to futures, so that it may apply solely and only to the illegitimate dealing in what is known as "options."

But, Mr. Chairman, so much has been said upon this subject, so much has been printed in the way of testimony taken by committees of Congress and otherwise, that at first blush one is quite prepared to believe that we have had enough of it, and that the time is ripe for a vote and final disposition of the bill. I do not believe this to be so.

It is true the agitation of this question two years ago was fought with some good, inasmuch as it led to a study of the subject such as the producing classes particularly have never before given to it, and as an educator it was something of a success, so much so that I confidently expect, as the sequel of the present discussion, not an immediate result, a full and complete indorsement of the system, at present in vogue on our great exchanges, by every farming constituency represented in this House.

It is a system that can not be discussed or deliberated over too freely nor too extensively—it will stand the search-light of investigation and scrutiny, for it is founded upon principles of equity, fairness, and justice to both buyer and seller—to the producer as well as to the consumer. Legislation, therefore, such as proposed, is entirely unnecessary, uncalled for, and unjust.

Now what is this system of trading in futures which it is proposed under this bill to curtail, if not to absolutely annihilate?

Nothing more nor less than the buying and selling of products for thirty, sixty, ninety days or more, as the case may be, with the cost of storage, interest, and insurance added to the cash price—the article to be paid for when delivered.

During the interim between the time when the goods are bought or sold and when they are delivered, both buyer and seller are, under the rules of the exchanges, protected in their trades by the deposit of margins when called for, as a guarantee against any change in the market price, and the trade is thereby protected until the delivery takes place, or until the trade is closed by cancellation or settlement. This is all there is to it, and the system is not only a legitimate and healthy one, but affords the producer better prices, and was conceived in his interest and has inured to his benefit as I will endeavor to show.

Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allotted to me in this debate, I can hardly hope to do more than to reiterate well-known and well-understood principles of trade as practiced on the great exchanges of the world; principles born of experience, and as well understood by our great merchants as are the underlying foundations of advanced medical or engineering science by the great masters in those honored professions; principles as well understood by the merchant as are the principles of corn and cotton raising by the farmer and planter. Merchants, as a rule, make poor farmers, and the converse of this proposition is equally true, but that their interests lie along the same lines is undoubted.

The present Secretary of Agriculture hit it about right when he said the farmer needs protection—"protection from his so-called friends." Before taking his seat as a member of the President's Cabinet he is reported to have made the following statement:

(From a reported interview with Hon. J. Sterling Morton, early in 1893):

> While I am not a protectionist in the usual acceptation of the word, I believe the farmer needs protection; he needs protection from his so-called friends. He should be saved from some of the fallacies which seem to be believed by a large number of them. One of them is the Hatch antioption bill. It has been said that the great majority of the supporters of the bill are farmers. I think they should be its opponents. The exchanges which the bill aims to destroy are of advantage to the farmers; their daily workings tend to stimulate the prices. If there were no exchanges the big dealers would practically put their own price on the farmers' products, and the farmers would be compelled to accept them.
> The farmer has peculiar ideas, and those ideas need changing; a certain kind of education would not do him any harm at all. He needs saving from economic fallacies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is precisely what the farmer needs, so far as this proposed legislation is concerned. He needs "saving from economic fallacies."

The Lord knows he needs more than this, but if there is one thing that he does not need it is a further contraction of the markets of the country such as this legislation would cause. The trouble with the producer is not in the system by which and through which his products are marketed, but as is the case with all other commodities when prices decline, because of an overproduction of his product.

When through the operation of natural laws things go wrong, we are quite likely, if we be the parties interested, to hit upon something in the social or economical system that is at fault. This was the case in 1892. The people of this country, or a majority of them, thought we needed a change in the political control of the country; but it will be observed that when changes are made because everything does not seem to go right with us, the experiment is usually a failure. The present system of dealing in farm products is no more responsible for the prevailing low prices than was the Secretary of the Navy responsible for the sinking of the Kearsage a few weeks ago, or than was my friend, Mr. BOUTELLE, for the hauling down of the American flag at Hawaii last year.

If wheat gets down to 50 cents in the Chicago market it will be because there is too much of it in the country.

It would indicate that for the present at least the limit of production has been reached, and that the export demand for our surplus has ceased. We need not be told that at 50 cents per bushel in Chicago for No. 2 spring wheat the product can not be raised; indeed, it is doubtful if 60 cents a bushel in that market would cover the cost of production on many western farms. Although the report of the Senate committee, of which Senator PEFFER was chairman, and which devoted considerable time to the investigation of the subject, has this to say among other things on that subject:

Competition among farmers affects prices just as competition in other departments of industry affects values in those departments. There is a kind of competition among grain farmers that does not affect prices locally or generally—what has been known as "bonanza" farming, as it is carried on by men who operate on large tracts of land acquired when land values were low. This method of farming has brought the cost of producing wheat down to about 35 cents a bushel on an average in North and South Dakota. When it is considered that the market price of our surplus wheat is fixed in Liverpool, and the export price to a large extent controls the price for which it is sold in the home market, it is readily seen that large quantities of 35-cent wheat thrown on the market must have a depressing effect on the general average of profits in wheat farming. In California (says the report) under the improved methods of plowing, seeding, and harvesting, the cost of producing a bushel of wheat has been reduced to about 22 cents on an average crop.

But I shall not attempt to analyze or explain the causes for the existing depression in values for farm products further than to maintain that it is not due to the system of trading employed on our exchanges.

During the panic of last year, from April to December, there was a decline in the price of wheat, corn, and cotton of 17 per cent, 13 per cent and 6 per cent respectively, but in the same time the decline in wool, print cloths, and brown sheetings amounted to 23½ per cent, 24 per cent, and 20 per cent respectively.

Surely this decline in wheat, corn, and cotton, amounting relatively to but little more than half that of the latter articles named during the same period, will not be attributed to the method of trading employed on our large exchanges. May we not rather believe the converse of this proposition to be true, and that prices for farm products may have been better sustained through the panic by reason of this very system which is now so harshly condemned by the advocates of this bill?

The testimony of those competent to judge (and I will remind the chairman of the committee of what was said by the president of the New York Cotton Exchange during the hearings on this subject) is that active speculation conduces to higher prices. More business is done on higher markets than on low ones; or to put it in another way, the more active the trading the higher are prices. As the president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange put it: "There is very little doing on a declining market, but great activity on an advancing market."

Now, this does not mean that active speculation makes higher prices; but it does refute the idea which some people still seem to entertain, that it tends to depress prices.

It is a favorite theory—but poor argument because so easily refuted—that the selling of the crop several times over produces lower values; that from the beginning to the end of these sales for future delivery, through some legerdemain or manipulation by the traders themselves, prices are held down below their normal level, and that the farmer is thus deprived of a fair and legitimate return for his products. One needs but to exercise ordinary intelligence and study the market reports of the past to satisfy himself of the fallacy of this proposition.

This question was raised during the hearings of the committee, and I shall take occasion to refer to it later on in my remarks, for it involves the principle of short selling and all the alleged iniquities chargeable thereto.

I will simply refer here to one case of thousands that could be mentioned—the case referred to by a member of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange—where in one season future sales of cotton for November delivery were made at 6½ cents a pound, though when November came around the actual value of cotton was 10½ cents.

The fact must not be lost sight of in all this discussion that for every seller there must be a corresponding buyer. I refer to this now because in all the arguments in favor of this bill it will be noticed that the seller is the party who is always referred to while nothing is said about the buyer. As though the crop, for instance, could be sold over and over again without its being bought over and over again! So that if the seller's interest is to depreciate values there is always a corresponding buyer interested in appreciating values.

Now, from the report accompanying this bill we learn the objects sought by the proposed legislation to be: First, to obtain revenue. At this time (says the report) additional revenue is desirable and imperative. Unlike former bills reported to the House covering the subjects embraced in this measure, it will more surely and steadily provide a constant revenue to the Government, and that without an additional corps of revenue officers and at a minimum cost for its collection.

"To obtain revenue." The bill provides that for every 1,000 bushels of wheat, corn, oats, rye, and barley actually delivered—for none can be bought that is not delivered—there shall be a tax of 1 cent (1 cent for selling and 1 cent for buying). Now, let us see what that would amount to in the way of revenue. In Chicago last year the total receipts were as follows:

	Bushels.
Wheat	35,355,101
Corn	91,255,154
Oats	84,289,886
Rye	1,707,072
Barley	13,345,845
Or a total of	225,953,058

which at a tax of 2 cents per thousand bushels, and a 2 cent revenue stamp on every 5,000 bushels would have amounted to the munificent sum of $6,326.68 on grain handled at Chicago.

Let us see what this would be in New York City, at which place the total receipts of—

	Bushels.
Wheat for 1893 were	48,777,985
Corn	19,436,610
Oats	29,597,902
Rye	556,178
Barley	3,806,195
Total	102,174,870

The revenue under this bill from the city of New York would, therefore, have amounted to the fabulous sum of $2,860.88.

Now, clearly, this is just what we would come to if this bill were enforced, because speculation would cease absolutely if its provisions were regarded, and but one sale of the produce would be effected. Think of it, $6,326.68 collected in Chicago and $2,860.88 at New York as the total tax on grain that would have been paid into the United States Treasury in 1893 to recoup its depleted and vacuous condition! "Additional revenue is desirable and imperative at this time," says the committee. What statesmanship! What breadth of mind to conceive so grand a scheme for enriching the Treasury of this great country!

Why, the members of the Chicago Board of Trade contribute more to charity every year than this entire revenue would come to, and I have no doubt the same is true of the Produce Exchange merchants at New York. Thirteen thousand nine hundred and eighteen dollars was the amount raised on the Chicago Board of Trade, by voluntary subscriptions, for charitable purposes during 1893, besides large supplies of meat and of flour. (See page 39, Report of Chicago Board of Trade for 1893.)

Many a city and town throughout the West and the South, which has been stricken at some time with flame, or flood, or disease, has received its first responses for succor and help from the big-hearted, big-brained, generous men who constitute the membership of our board of trade. Appeals of this kind have never fallen upon deaf ears in the great temple of exchange at Chicago!

How consistent the bill, its provisions, and its promoters are can be best judged from the fact that it purposes first to stop speculation, and then second, to get a revenue which, to amount to anything at all, would be predicated upon the aggregate of business done before speculation had ceased. It is the great double-action project of the day! The gun may "go off," gentleman, but its "kick" will be worse than the discharge. If speculation were continued on present lines revenue would result, otherwise not; therefore, if the purpose be to obtain revenue, the other provisions of the bill must be ignored. Clearly, the bill is not a revenue bill!

The second alleged object for which this legislation is sought, viz, to enable the producer to realize higher prices for his product is, in my judgment, purely mythical, and a condition which legislation is powerless to accomplish. That section of the report reads as follows:

Second. To relieve the producer of the destructive competition to which he is now subjected by the offering, upon exchanges, of illimitable quantities of fiat or fictitious products by those who do not intend to and can not terminate the contract by actual delivery of the articles which they pretend to offer and sell.

If special legislation were needed at all it would be in the direction of broadening, not contracting, the markets of the world. What the producer wants is a large number of buyers, anywhere, everywhere, at all times, the world over. An active, ready market in which he can sell his products at whatever time and to whomsoever he pleases, whether for prompt or for future delivery. Competition in this can not in the very nature of things be destructive to his interests.

But it is charged that unlimited offerings of produce by those who do not intend to and can not terminate the contract by actual delivery tend to depress the market, and results in a lower level of values. Why, this is the sheerest nonsense, and in both respects. There can be no unlimited amount of selling without equivalent purchases. For every pound or bushel sold there is a pound or bushel bought. The one offsets the other so far as that factor is concerned. And to talk about the sellers being unable to terminate the contract by actual deliveries is equally absurd, for the property must be delivered, and in the month specified, if it be demanded by the buyer.

It is in evidence before the committee that under the rules governing transactions in the various exchanges in the country, actual deliveries are contemplated in every contract made between trades. A seller is bound to deliver the specified quality or grade of products sold to the amount contracted for if the buyer insists upon it, and these rules are recognized in the various State courts having jurisdiction. It is only for the convenience of trade that buyer and seller alike agree to daily settlements of trade where such is possible, rather than to postpone such settlement to the month for which delivery in the contract called for, and it is this right of clearing-house settlements that is contended for by the various exchanges of the country, and which the very necessities of the trade demand!

It would be as reasonable for the banks to demand a delivery of currency on every check passed through their clearing house, as to ask for the actual delivery of commodities in every case on our exchanges!

If there be any suspicious member in this presence who does not believe that an actual delivery is contemplated in every instance let him send his order to Chicago or New York for the purchase of five or ten thousand bushels of July wheat. If he does not find it necessary to write his check on the 1st day of July for the value of that wheat it will be simply because he has ordered his broker to sell that wheat in the meantime.

The best answer, perhaps, that can be made to the charge that the producer suffers from "destructive competition caused by the offering of illimitable quantities of fiat or fictitious products upon our exchanges, etc.," is that made by the directors of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, which is as follows:

Actual experience daily demonstrated in the leading markets of the country shows this point to be poorly taken. In the market of Chicago, the largest speculative grain center in the world, "destructive competition" (as it is termed) clearly shows in results. Wheat there, where "short selling" is indulged, is relatively higher than all other markets of this country (with the exception of the milling centers of Minneapolis and Duluth) by from 1 to 3 cents per bushel, and higher relatively than any foreign market by from 3 to 6 cents per bushel.

What further evidence can be needed to refute this preposterous statement? The claim was not a very ingenuous one at best, and has been readily met by the statement just quoted.

The third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh enumerated objects sought by the proposed legislation are one and the same thing—each clothed in a little variation of language—as in the third and sixth sections, for example—and the whole evidently intended to be an elaborate, if not emphatic protest against that concentration of supposed iniquities, "short selling."

Those sections of the report are as follows:

Third. To restore to the law of supply and demand that free action which has been destroyed by the practice of "short selling," which practice has of recent years become the one mode of determining the price of such agricultural staples as can be graded, while the ordinary methods of commerce are found to suffice for those which can not. By the practice of "short selling," now so common upon the exchanges, where not to exceed one-tenth of the grains grown is marketed, prices are determined for the entire product, and often months in advance of sowing the seed, thus despoiling the farmer and planter of that voice in fixing the price to be received for the product of his labor and capital which is accorded to other producers.

Fourth. That market quotations, now made by the limitless offers of fiat products by the "short seller," regardless of the volume of actual products in existence, may again be determined by the offerings of real products by the owners thereof, or by those who have acquired from such owner the right to the future possession of the articles offered, or can terminate their contracts by actual delivery, and thereby limit, to the amount actually existant, the offerings of the staple products of the farm.

Fifth. To prevent the overloading of domestic markets and the breaking down of prices of farm products by "short sales" made by foreign merchants for the purpose of insuring them against possible loss on purchases of Indian, Egyptian, South American, Australian, and Russian produce, whereby the American farmer and planter are made underwriters of commercial risks of the European, by whom no bonus or premium is paid for assuming insurance risks that destroy the value of our products.

Sixth. That by restoring the functions of the law of supply and demand now inoperative by reason of the limitless offers of the "short seller," a measure of relief will be given and prosperity partially restored to the great class constituting more than 40 per cent of our population who inhabit the farms, and whose declining prosperity your committee believe is due in no inconsiderable degree to the practice of "short selling," whereby the prices of the products of the farm have been determined and fixed, during recent years, at an unremunerative level.

Seventh. To restore to the producer an honest market and such prices as will follow the unfettered operations of the law of supply and demand, which the committee believe will be sufficiently remunerative to restore, in part, the power of the farmer and planter to purchase the product of forge, factory, and mill, and thus bring prosperity to the artisan, manufacturer, distributer, and transporter.

Any suggestion to the effect that restricted legislation is desirable in the marketing of the world's products, and preferable to the ordinary and natural course of trade as a regulator to the law of supply and demand, is, I believe, wholly unsound in principle, and not justified by any law of economics.

As bearing directly upon this proposition I want, first, to call the committee's attention to the following quotation from "Denslow on the Principles of Economic Philosophy," which I borrow from the able discussion of this subject by Messrs. Latham, Alexander & Co., of New York, showing the value of exchanges to trade.

The Clerk read as follows:

A market rises into its highest efficiency and value when it concentrates into one focus so large a portion of the buyers and sellers of a certain commodity as to become, in conjunction with one or two other markets of the same kind, an authoritative standard of prices of the articles in which it deals for all buyers and sellers through the world. By aid of the quick intelligence which the telegraph supplies, and the swift transportation which steam affords, the whole world is converted into one market, having one price subject only to cost of transportation of the product between the points for which the price is quoted and all other points. Such markets are the Bourse of Paris for stocks and securities, the London Stock Exchange, as well as the London Produce Exchange, the Liverpool and New York Cotton exchanges, the New York Stock Exchange, Produce Exchange and Real Estate Exchange, and formerly the Gold Room and the boards of trade (grain and provision exchange) of Chicago, in conjunction with those of other Western cities and that of Liverpool.

In the sale of carriages, pianos, jewelry, clothing, and other things which do not admit of such an authoritative contest over the price, there is great inequality in the price at which two persons in the same city, on the same day, may buy two things of the same kind and of equal value. Hence there is great cheating in such trading. One may pay $200 for a watch which another buys for $100. There is no standard. In all these grades of goods long credits must be given, as the dealers must hold the goods until they reach consumers.

But in articles dealt in by produce exchanges the price is advanced to the producer, and his crop can always be sold if he desires even before it is harvested. Hence the authoritative manufacturer of prices confers somewhat the same benefit on the community as is conferred by the authoritative system of law, religion, manners, and ethics. It enables every man to know each moment how he stands relatively to the results of his past exertions, what they have cost and how much he can get for them.

Any advantages which can be afforded the primary grain or cotton buyer is bound to be of advantage to the producer, for the margin upon which this interior buyer can do business with the producer will necessarily be reduced thereby; and if these advantages are taken away from him, the greater the margin of difference will be in the price which he can pay the farmer. If under the system now in vogue he can telegraph to Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, or New York and dispose of his purchases at a moment's notice, he will do so upon a minimum of advance over what he has paid for the property purchased by him: but if he is debarred from this he will increase the margin and the producer will get just that much less for his goods; in other words, if he can hedge against his purchases by an immediate sale, he will be glad to do so and be content with the small but certain profit which is assured to him.

In the meantime, for some reason, he may not wish to ship to that market in which he has hedged his purchase, by a sale for future delivery. He may find a better trade with some local miller who desires his property, or through some advantageous special freight rate offered he may find he can do better by sending his goods elsewhere, in which event he cancels his order at the first-named market by ordering the goods purchased back for him at that point. Would there be anything wrong in that transaction? Would the farmers suffer by it?

Again, under the present system bankers loan money, and more of it, readily upon grain and the other products named in this bill, and they do so because they know they can always dispose of this collateral, and at a moment's notice. They are secured every minute, and the "ticker" which sends them the market quotations every few seconds warns them when the margin is too small, and they are thus enabled to protect themselves in their loans continuously. The system is thus too well grounded, and can not be obliterated without doing incalculable injury to every one engaged in the business.

Now concerning section 3, which requires transfers of futures to be in writing, showing time delivery and whether agents are owners or entitled to possession under contract made with actual owners—otherwise void, etc.

Why, before a commission merchant would dare make a trade or execute an order from a grain dealer in the interior he would have to investigate to know that the party owned it, and to have it inspected by some competent party to know that it would pass inspection in Chicago. If it did not grade the same as it was sold for he would be liable under this bill for a tax of 3 cents a bushel. Of course the merchant would not assume this tax and it would therefore come from the farmer. They might both act in good faith and yet this might happen.

This of itself would kill trading for future delivery, and as a result the producer would be at the mercy of the interior buyer, and margins would be larger against him. For example: A buyer of grain in Iowa sells five or ten thousand bushels for forward delivery of No. 2 spring wheat, at 60 cents, in Chicago. The buyer in Chicago is acting for an Eastern miller; prices advance 10 cents a bushel and the wheat does not grade. Under this bill the contract is void. The miller would lose his wheat and be out the advance of 10 cents a bushel besides.

Short selling has been the nightmare of every champion of an antioption bill. It has been the war cry of every shorn lamb who has invaded the precincts of the bucket shop; of those particularly who have never known how to speculate except by taking the "long" side of the market. This class of traders is numerous and they are to be found in large numbers through the rural districts of Missouri.

The higher the markets the more they want to buy, and if they ever do sell and "go short" the market it is when the latter has "touched bottom." They do not seem to "catch on," and they never will know enough to "get in out of the rain;" but they find lots of comfort in writing to their Congressmen assailing the wicked boards of trade. Lots of these same fellows infest the larger cities too, and when they are not betting on the next blackboard quotation in a bucket shop or buying pools on the races, ten chances to one they are nursing their wrath by writing whining letters to the newspapers about the awful results of gambling on the board of trade.

Partridge, the great bear and bugaboo in the eyes of the champions of this bill, has not been the cause of low prices for farm products. Certainly you will not accord him any such distinction as that? He has been one of the shearers of the lambs, and Partridge has grown rich because he has been right in the market. During this era of depression in values he has been a consistent bear, and has gone with the natural bent of the tide. Had he attempted to stem it by taking the other course he would have been swamped—all nature would have been against him and his destruction would have been inevitable.

It is a common, though erroneous belief, that the opportunities for free and unlimited trading results in undue depression of our markets. As a matter of fact, it is the converse of this proposition that is true. Corners never depress prices. No one ever heard of an effort being made to corner the market downward; it would be impossible. Corners result from overselling the market and are due to conditions growing out of this very act. It is the short seller who gets "squeezed" in the corner, but the producer is bound to be the gainer by it. In other words, it is the purely speculative fellow who sells what he has not got to deliver that suffers from the only unnatural markets that we have.

The producer is always the gainer from an unnatural or manipulated market; prices can not be forced below their legitimate level and held there for any length of time, but they can be inflated, and paradoxical as it may seem, with benefit to the producer without any corresponding evil to the consumer, for the effort of those who run corners is to get as much of the article out of the way as possible, and into the hands of the distributers for consumption. Those who run corners are "after" the short sellers and will gladly part with the product at fair normal value if assured that it will not get back into the channels that lead to their doors. This is to their interest. So that the consumer is not the one to suffer from this unnatural effort to raise values.

When, for instance, wheat was forced to $2 a bushel in the Chicago market, no one heard that the price of bread had been advanced; it had not. The only one who suffered was the short seller. The producer had gained what he (the short seller) had lost, or at least a portion of it. So that if the objection to active speculation be because of its unnatural effect upon values, the objection does not hold, because no one suffers from it but the operator who sells what he may not be able to deliver, while our farming community is the gainer in the transaction.

But an active trading in the commodities named in this bill is beneficial to the farmer in that it admits of his marketing his crop at whatever time prices suit him best. If May wheat, corn, or cotton is bringing a better price to-day than cash wheat, corn, or cotton, and he has facilities for carrying his product until May, he wants to be in a position to sell it for future delivery; and if later, for any reason, he concludes to hold it until July he wants the privilege of "buying in" what he sold for May and reselling again for July.

Every restriction contained in the bill is a tax upon the farmer. If you tax the dealer, it comes directly from the pocket of the farmer. If you prevent a marketing of his product for future delivery, you add to the margin the local buyer must take from him, and at the same time you disturb and demoralize conditions that now prevail the world over and which are but the outgrowth of our enormous development. You seek by unnatural methods to overturn natural methods in the distribution of this great wealth of the soil, and the producer will be the first to rebel against it should this effort go unchecked.

With reference to one reason given for advocating the passage of this bill, viz, that quotations may be based upon the offerings of the real product by the owners thereof rather than upon the alleged fictitious values created through speculation, etc., I beg leave to refer to the doctrine laid down by John Stuart Mill, which is as follows:

> When speculation in a commodity proves profitable, it is because in the interval between buying and reselling the price rises from some cause independent of the speculators, their only connection with it consisting in having foreseen it.

And experience has demonstrated this over and over again.

Now, I maintain, as a matter of fact, that prices decline more rapidly when there is not what is termed a "short interest" in the market. It is fallacious to suppose that a short seller is not going to be called upon to deliver the goods at the end of the month for which he has sold, unless he has bought them back in the meantime. And this very fact adds strength and steadiness to the market, for any sale of product not already acquired is a source of strength to the market the mment the sale is consummated.

If some extraordinary influence occurs, such as bank failures, or panics of any kind, the best supporters of the market are the short sellers, who then become the buyers and take their profits; while the ordinary and regular purchasers are quite likely to keep out of the market for a time.

If, as is not infrequently the case, the producer, satisfied with the ruling market prices to-day for, say, September delivery, sells his product for that delivery in anticipation of the bountiful crop promised him, finds in a month from now that from some change in conditions that it will not be convenient for him to get his product to market in that month, is he to be deprived of the opportunity to buy back what he has contracted to deliver in September and resell it for October or November?

Is the pioneer who wishes to break a large tract of ground in the Northwest by sowing to flaxseed for the first crop, to be deprived of a method of insuring him a profit in the venture by selling that crop for fall delivery when occasion offers, and the opportunity to protect himself by a purchase in the markets at any time where, through the visitation of floods or for any other cause, his crop is threatened with destruction?

These are but some of the restrictions that it is proposed to place upon the producing classes of this country through the effort to legislate in behalf of contracted markets for the various products of our soil. And I protest against it, not only because it is contrary to the natural laws of trade, but because I believe it to be a blow aimed at the farming community of our country, such as it has never experienced in this generation.

Our boards of trade furnish the opportunity to the consumer, the producer, the manufacturer, the exporters, and to the buyers of the world. The latter are enabled to purchase for immediate shipment or for future requirements and deliveries, and oftentimes these latter contribute in no small degree to the enhancement of values, and are a natural and effective support to our markets.

This system of dealing in futures has proven to be a decided benefit to all concerned, to the farmer as well as to the consumer and exporter. Take it away and you take away a ready and easy mode which the producer now enjoys of marketing his product at any moment at fair value. Take it away and you place him at the mercy of the local buyer, who fixes the prices at which he shall sell—several points below the then cash price, at the nearest commercial center, after allowing for the cost of transportation to that point. The local buyer is compelled to do this to protect himself by proper margin against any possible decline in values while he is getting the product to market.

This margin comes out of the producer. The buyer at this commercial center fixes his price upon the last quotation from the seaboard, and the buyer at the latter point upon the last quotation from Liverpool (where our surplus finally goes), and each in turn must protect himself by a margin similar to the one exacted by the local purchaser, and the sum total of these margins must eventually come out of the farmer, the producer; from no one else. This would be the legitimate and logical result of prohibiting trading in futures, and the restrictions contained in this bill would amount to an absolute prohibition such as is named. It is claimed for the bill that such restrictions do not apply to legitimate sales where the product in question is intended for actual delivery. But in effect they do, and in this wise: The maintenance of steady and fair market quotations is largely due to active speculation; that is, to markets where transactions are large and frequent. Any operator will choose that market for business which is most active, where speculation is constant and rapid. On such a market the holder of grain or cotton or provisions may sell almost without limit, without appreciably affecting prices. On such a market the manufacturer or the consumer may buy without stint and not fear that prices will be "run up on him" to any appreciable extent. Small fluctuations may be frequent throughout a day's business, but as a rule the general level holds good to a degree that does not affect the consumer or the producer unfavorably.

The facts are that this is a great surplus producing country, and the system which has been fostered and built up through the medium of our great exchanges is simply the outgrowth of the necessities of trade, and provide most admirably, notwithstanding the various criticisms that have been indulged in concerning them, for the disposition of not only this surplus, but of that which is taken and distributed for local consumption throughout the length and breadth of our own land.

It is the opinion of those best fitted to judge, those who from long experience and constant attention to the demands of trade and commerce, whose interests are coincident with those of the producers, in whose interests all other interests are centered, because dependent thereon, that the passage of such a measure as the one proposed would unsettle business already demoralized and sensitive, unsettle prices and become a disturbing factor in the effort at recovery from a depressed and despondent season of gloom, disaster, and ruin, such as we have but just experienced.

Mr. Chairman, a word concerning the Chicago Board of Trade—not in defense of the personnel of its membership, because defense from calumny and venomous personal attack directed from irresponsible and ignorant sources is not worthy the dignity of notice by any friend of that body, nor would that friend be thanked for any such gratuity—but of the board as an organized commercial exchange, and I refer to this particular exchange, because the concentration and quintescence of venom displayed by the advocates of this bill has been directed to and focalized upon it. Why, one would suppose from some of the loose criticism indulged—many times by those who ought to know better—that we had a veritable "Monte Carlo" set up in Chicago, for no other purpose than to extract the spare cash from our gullible country cousins as they come to our city, or to take from the laboring man the hard-earned surplus of his toil.

It is a favorite theme for the anarchist and the demagogue to decry any system that appeals to the passions of those who hate to see their neighbors prosper, particularly when that system represents energy and aggression in the development of our commercial interests and an enlightened advancement in the progress of mankind. The popular notion in some quarters seems to be that the Chicago Board of Trade is a big organized gambling fraternity, and a foe to legitimate trade and commerce. It does not seem possible that such ridiculous sentiment can be very general, and yet that it does exist there can be no question.

Its relation to the commerce of this and other countries is apparently but little understood, and in its relations to the producing classes equal ignorance is shown. Nor can it better be explained than by quoting an extract from the admirable report of a recent president of that institution, Mr. Charles D. Hamill, who shows this relationship, not only of the Chicago board, but of all the leading exchanges, to be as follows:

> The primary function of boards of trade is to bring the consumer and producer together, the buyer and the seller, so that each may be unhindered in the pursuit of his industries, and may market and purchase his goods at the smallest expense both of money and of time. Boards of trade have no private interest to promote. Their welfare depends upon the value of the services which they render to the commercial public in the interests of fairness and justice, and in providing, without expense to either, the information from all parts of the world which is essential to the profitable conduct of business.
> The commercial exchange stands, therefore, for equity and fair dealing and employs its facilities for the benefit of the buyer and seller, and for the unhindered distribution of products and the economical exchange of surplus commodities. This is the attitude and the only attitude which the commercial exchanges of the nineteenth century occupy. It is a nineteenth century idea of commerce that no advantage shall be enjoyed by either the buyer or the seller and that no man or section shall be permitted to take any advantage whatsoever with reference to all facts concerning supply and demand.
> It is the province of boards of trade to spread upon the bulletins of the world for the information of all, the facts derived from the great marts of trade, from great manufacturing industries and sections, concerning the movement of merchandise, rates of transportation, and all facts which enter into the commercial life of men. Without these facilities which boards of trade or commercial exchanges create, the commercial development of to-day would not have been possible, and notwithstanding in this great system of commerce there are some defects, these institutions have contributed in manifold ways most materially to those results which make memorable the achievements of the nineteenth century.
> As long as the present conditions of trade and commerce, both foreign and domestic, prevail; as long as men strive for supremacy in the markets of the world; as long as ships laden with merchandise sail the seas; as long as cars freighted with commodities fly across the continent; as long as products are exchanged and men mingle together; as long as ambition rules the mind of man, so long will boards of trade continue to exist, harmoniously and economically presiding over and directing the manifold and magnificent forces of mercantile life.

The very able exposition of the buying and selling of futures by Mr. George F. Stone, the accomplished gentleman, student, statistician, and long-time secretary of the Chicago Board of Trade, is deserving of more than passing notice in the discussion of this subject in the national House of Representatives. No intelligent consideration of this matter would be complete without a reference to his treatise on this question, published in the Annual Reviews of that body covering the last three or four years, and certainly no one is more competent to speak, by reason of long experience, familiarity with detail, and power of reasoning on this subject than is he. His reputation for integrity and conscientiousness of purpose among his friends and his standing in the commercial world are equally high; his name is a synonym in the grain trade for all that is elevating, progressive, and painstaking in the promulgation of information and suggestions for the benefit and betterment of the producer, the middleman, and the manufacturer; and I commend his writings to everyone interested in this proposed legislation. As he very aptly puts it—

> Legislation never will make high prices; never will make a market no more than it can make a currency of intrinsic value, and the greenback theory can never be successfully applied to wheat. When we raise a surplus we have got to take our chances with other surplus-producing wheat countries. That is all there is to the whole business.

The marketing of the products of this great surplus-producing country with the highest advantage to the producer, is one of the great economic problems of the day, and the present system, so completely developed for the favorable handling of our enormous crops, is simply the outgrowth of a natural demand created to meet the requirements of the times and to provide for the prompt disposal of products at their fair market valuation. It can not be obliterated without the doing of great injustice to all concerned—to the producer as well as to the middleman and consumer—and no one in his senses is asking that it shall be.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I wish to refute and deny the allegation purporting to have emanated from the distinguished chairman of the committee, that the exchanges of the country are satisfied with his bill in its present shape. Such, I say, is not true.

In an interview with the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Post, published on the 5th ultimo, Chairman HATCH is reported as follows:

> "It looks," he says, "as though the measure would this time succeed in getting upon the statute books. All of the objectionable features which have heretofore caused the antioption bill to be antagonized have been eliminated. The only sections which will now meet with any serious opposition are those relating to bucket shops; the regular dealers in futures are pretty well satisfied with the bill."

This was on May 5. Just how well satisfied these dealers are with the bill can best be told perhaps by the following telegram received by me from the president of the Chicago Board of Trade on May the 9, just four days later. It reads as follows:

> CHICAGO, May 9, 1894.
> It is the unqualified and decided opinion of this board that the Hatch bill if passed would result in greater injury to the producer and to the consumer, as well as to business interests generally, than anything which has threatened the industries of the country.
> CHAS. L. RAYMOND, President.
> Hon. J. FRANK ALDRICH,
> Washington, D. C.

And the secretary and representative of the Toledo Produce Exchange, Mr. Denison B. Smith, says:

> The [present] system of trading for future delivery is the outgrowth of necessity in the economical movement of the surplus product of the country, which has adapted itself in an eminent degree to the conditions which those necessities have ordained, and which, more than any other ever invented, works in complete harmony with the interests of the producers. In the strongest terms I desire to emphasize this point in opposition to the theory of the author of the bill and others who are not students of and not familiar with the operations of the system. All the proofs and precedents defend the present system of trading for future delivery as one that favors the interest of the farmer, and which is in no need of Congressional legislation.

And again:

> The Hatch bill, in every line and feature of it, is a bill for the depression of prices of agricultural products and the demand for it is unreasonable and groundless.

The directors of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis through their president, Mr. William G. Boyd, responds to the assertion by saying:

> This bill is in the interest of the wealthy classes, although claimed for the farmer. It is a backward step that should be revolting, abhorrent, and not acceptable to the intelligent manhood and honor of the Representatives in the Congress of this country.

And the president of the New York Cotton Exchange, Mr. James O. Bloss, has this to say:

> The claim may possibly be made that, as the present bill is different in its character from those that have preceded it, the testimony heretofore referred to is not applicable to this measure. In reply to any such claim, however, it may be said that, though the present bill is in some respects quite different from those that have preceded it, nevertheless the same spirit of prohibition and suppression of speculative transactions as thoroughly pervades the present bill as any of its predecessors, while the taxes proposed even on transactions that are conceded to be legitimate and in the line of good business are such as to hinder and obstruct business, so that taken as a whole the present bill is quite as obnoxious and objectionable as any of those that have preceded it.

And so I might go on, and in an unbroken line of testimony quote the universal protest of the great commercial bodies of the country, who appreciate and understand the serious consequences that would come to the producer through the operation of legislation such as is proposed.

I hope the bill will not pass. [Loud applause.]

WHY WHEAT IS CHEAP.

Senator PEFFER's Subcommittee on the Causes and Remedies of Agricultural Depression has prepared a much more sensible report than might have been expected by those who have watched the uneconomic vagaries of that gentleman in the past. The report admits well-known facts that lie at the basis of the discussion. In regard to wheat, which is the article that attracts greatest attention just now, it is stated that the farming area in the United States has been more than doubled in the last twenty-two years, while the population is far from being twice the thirty-eight and a half millions of 1870. There is a greater yield per unit of area, and the cost of production has been vastly reduced by the methods of bonanza farming in the Northwest, the average cost in the Dakotas being about 35 cents per bushel. In California, under the improved methods of plowing, seeding, and harvesting, the cost of producing a bushel of wheat has been reduced to about 22 cents on an average crop. The price to be paid by the consumer is further reduced by a big shrinkage in the cost of transportation. A steamer can carry 100,000 bushels across the Atlantic in ten days, where formerly thirty to forty days were required for the passage of a ship containing 10,000 bushels. Similar cuts have been made in the cost of transportation over inland routes.

Of course, these reductions have taken effect in other lands as well as here. Especially is this the case with Indian wheat, the transportation of which from Bombay and Calcutta to Liverpool has been cheapened 50 per cent by the opening of the Suez Canal. As the wages of farm hands in India are but 6 to 10 cents of our money per day, wheat costs only 13 cents per bushel on the farm. Twelve cents more puts it on board ship, and 25 cents additional places it on the wharves at Liverpool or London. The report may slightly understate the cost of laying down Indian wheat in the British Isles, but evidently the offerings of that grain are a great element in the competition which our surplus wheat meets with. And insomuch as the price of wheat we sell abroad fixes that of the wheat that is consumed at home, by just so much is the price to the American consumer kept down and the farmer obliged to sell at figures which he claims and believes do not net him a fair profit for his investment of capital and toil.

In the discussion of this subject it is important to remember that there is little real cause for complaint if the selling price of wheat declines in proportion to the cost of producing the grain. Such reduction has been submitted to without grumbling by the manufacturers of cotton and woolen cloth, iron, and other staple articles of consumption, and ought to be accepted by the producers of wheat and silver. Also, if by the introduction of new processes a large part of the demand for any article can be supplied at a great reduction of cost, those who keep on producing by old-fashioned methods are unable to control the market and have to sell at a disadvantage. This may seem cruel to those who thus suffer from the march of improvement, but there is no help for it, and the rule is so nearly universal in its operation that it is useless for those engaged in any one department to complain.

It may be hard for those who can not produce wheat or silver at the prices which yield a fair profit to the bonanza farmers and the owners of rich mines to be told that they must operate at a loss or work on different lines. But they have to do it all the same, and there is little hope for a radical improvement in either till the dropping out of the poorer paying areas permits the production to be reduced enough to lessen the offerings in proportion to the demand. The report tells a truth that is of world-wide application in the words that "large quantities of 35-cent wheat thrown on the market must have a depressing effect on the general average of profits in wheat farming."

PRICE OF WHEAT IN THE '40'S.

All the talk about wheat selling now at the lowest price on record is directly in the face of the evidence furnished in the semi-centennial issue of the Journal of Monday last. In his interesting reminiscences C. M. Pendelton, of Crystal Lake, said: "We used to haul our wheat into Chicago with two pair of oxen and a cart, picking our way over the prairie before there were any established roads. We hauled about 40 bushels of wheat to a load, and the first wheat I got 47 cents a bushel for."

In the issue of the Journal of September 2, 1844, printed in fac simile on Monday, 56 cents is quoted as the top notch on wheat in Chicago. On August 31 advices by mail from Cleveland (August 26) placed the price there at 65 cents with 71 asked, 70 bid at Buffalo. The Journal of September 4 printed advices from New York of date August 27, quoting wheat at 84 to 85 cents.

In November, 1842, wheat was quoted as low as 38 to 40 cents.

A comparison of the figures in Chicago and New York, the latter being 50 per cent higher, will give the farmers of the Western States some idea of what they owe to the great lines of transportation across the continent, against which they are continually howling and attempting to legislate. Improved means of transportation have brought the prices of the seaboard almost to the barnyards of the farmers.

[Extract from an editorial in the Memphis Commercial, March 19, 1894.]

TOO MUCH LEGISLATION.

It is an old complaint that America is a political nation, and that business and general interests suffer because this is true. The American people have never had too little, but entirely too much, legislation bearing upon questions of finance and trade. For instance, in 1859 a governmental enactment forbade the flying of the American flag by the ships of individual owners. That practically annihilated American maritime commerce and gave to England nine-tenths of the tonnage on both imports and exports.

Again, the Government has again and again levied taxes, imports, and penalties. It has again and again lifted these as regarded certain businesses, and given great bonuses to favored trades. The result is that the onus of politics weighs upon every branch of trade and every artery of commerce. If men were left to transact their affairs according to natural laws of value received, according to natural laws of barter and exchange, with no penalties, with no aids of Government, there is no reason to doubt that values would naturally adjust themselves, and that distribution, demand, supply, and taste would simplify the complex economical questions of the world by a process as simple as the swapping of knives done by school boys. As it is now, business is simply legislated almost to death.

[Editorial from the Chicago Tribune of May 18 last.]

LOWEST PRICES FOR WHEAT.

Again wheat has "broken the record." The price for the standard grade in this market went down to 53¼ cents per bushel yesterday, the inside figure for July delivery being 55⅛ cents. That is 1⅛ cents below the bottom point touched during the panicky conditions of last summer which followed the announcement that the mints in India had been closed to the coinage of silver. It is 1 cent less than the 55 cents of June and July, 1861, which was the lowest record made in a third of a century preceding 1893, and the average of the market since last June is lower than for any corresponding time in this market since 1852, when spring wheat averaged about 43⅛ cents per bushel for the whole season of buying from the farmer.

It also may be noted that the purchases of wheat made in this city forty years ago were from the "prairie schooner," or farmer's wagon, so that our market of those days corresponded to that of several hundred miles farther West to-day. Putting all these facts together, it may be claimed that wheat in this market was never before so low in price as it is now.

The transportation factor thus enters unequally into the problem for comparison of prices in this city to-day with those of the long ago. It enters more equally into the price problem for different dates in the English markets. Changing English currency into American, we have the following as the average London prices per bushel for the periods named:

From 1840 to 1849, the last-named year immediately following the discovery of gold in California, $1.73; from 1850 to 1859, $1.67; from 1860 to 1865, $1.51; in the next ten years, $1.71. This week the price of No. 2 red winter wheat in Liverpool has been quoted at 4*s.* 7*d.* per 100 pounds, which is equal to little more than 68 cents per bushel after paying all charges for transportation from foreign countries.

The latest price in London is less than 10 per cent above half the 40*s.* per quarter of 8 bushels which used to be talked of as a safe figure at which to buy whenever the market dipped to that figure. The present price here is less than a tenth more than half the $1 which not a few people in the trade can remember to have been for years regarded as an equally safe buying point in this market. Of course reduced transportation charges have a great deal to do with this reduction.

Wheat can be sent from Chicago to Liverpool for little more than 9 cents per bushel, or about a quarter of what the same service cost twenty to twenty-five years ago. But after allowing for that there still is a big shrinkage from the advance due to the discovery of gold in California and Australia. Doubtless much if not all of this should be set down to the account of cheaper methods of production. The use of farming machinery enabled the grower to dispense with much human labor, and the subsequent cheapening in the the price of that machinery decreased the outlay necessary to the employment of this labor saver. Greater competition by the wheat-growers of other countries, notably those of Russia, India, Australia, and South America, has done the rest.

The accelerated decline of the last two or three years may have been made all the greater by the panic of last year, but the great inciting cause was the enormous crop of wheat raised in the United States in 1891, followed by one of much more than the average yield. It was the big surplus from those two crops that broke down prices, and that surplus appears to have been at least 100,000,000 bushels more than was officially estimated in the years named. It is fair to suppose that there will be a reaction from the depth of excessively low prices when the world finds that the accumulation has been worked off, and there is some reason to think that point is near being reached now.

The fact once established, there may be a revulsion that will carry the market as much too high as it is now too low. But, whatever other conditions may be, so long as we have a surplus that must be offered for sale in the United Kingdom the sellers here will have to accept for their wheat what it would sell for abroad after making allowance for cost of transportation and handling. That price is reckoned on the gold basis. Probably the wheat prices of the future will be reckoned on the same basis; and if, owing to free coinage, the money should be paid in depreciated silver, the money received would do the American farmer no more good than if it were paid in dollars each one equal in buying power to a gold dollar. So it is idle to talk about silver inflation as desirable because its advocates think it would enable the American farmer to realize a larger number of "dollars" per bushel.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] occupied more than two hours in his address to-day, I hope the Chair will recognize, following the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH], who has just taken his seat, some gentleman on the same side of the question, so as to equalize the time as nearly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had already determined to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GOLDZIER].

Mr. GOLDZIER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I propose to occupy the attention of the committee for an hour, I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, if it would be agreeable to him, to allow the committee to rise now, so that I may have the hour to which I would be entitled to-morrow.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, the time, of course, is limited for this discussion, and must necessarily be so. We must reach a conclusion in a short time. I should be exceedingly glad to oblige the gentleman from Illinois if possible.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Of course, if the gentleman objects, I will proceed now.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will occupy a half hour now. I will move that the committee rise at 5 o'clock, and he can resume his remarks to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri, if my colleague will allow me, that it is exceedingly awkward to cut a speech up in that manner. It is getting late in the afternoon, and many of the members have left the Hall. You have had the best part of the day in the discussion when the House was full, and it seems to me that it would be only fair and right if somebody on your side would take half an hour now, and let my colleague have his hour entire to-morrow.

Mr. HATCH. That would be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. GOLDZIER. I hope that will be done.

Mr. HATCH. I will be glad if there is any gentleman present who desires to occupy a half hour on either side of the question, that the Chair would recognize him to go on now.

Mr. GOLDZIER. That would be very pleasant to me, as I should prefer to speak to-morrow.

Mr. HATCH. I am very desirous to accommodate the gentleman from Illinois in any way, and if any gentleman present on either side desires to occupy a half hour now, I hope he will signify his wishes by addressing the Chair. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER] said he desired to occupy some time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, as this subject has been under discussion I desire to be heard upon it; but was not prepared to proceed to-day with my address. I have some communications, however, on the subject, coming from actual dealers in wheat, that I would like to have read at the desk in my time, if possible. That will absorb, perhaps, twenty or twenty-five minutes this afternoon, and I can occupy the remainder of the time hereafter, if it is agreeable to the committee.

Mr. HATCH. The time, of course, to be taken out of the gentleman's hour, when he desires to address the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. All right, if I have half an hour left.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALKER. Allow me to say that I object to two or three men getting in ahead of me. I have had five men ahead of me already.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] now.

Mr. WALKER. I will say that I wish to speak to-morrow, after the gentleman has spoken on that side.

Mr. GOLDZIER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

WALKER] desires to speak now, I will yield my place, with the understanding that I am to follow him. If not, I presume the Chair has the right to recognize the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WALKER. I decline to take the floor now, but I want to speak to-morrow, after the gentleman completes his speech.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to give notice to the House that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike out the word "future" and everything that pertains to it in this bill, leaving it simply to apply to the word "option."

Mr. HATCH. We have not reached that stage yet, and it is not necessary for the gentleman to give notice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. GOLDZIER. With the understanding that I am entitled to the floor in the morning; because otherwise I should not yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER] is recognized.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, this measure ought to be entitled "A bill to depress prices of farm products and to interfere with the freedom of contract and legitimate trade."

I have studied the bill with care and candor, and with a full desire to discover any merits that it might possess. I have failed to find in it a single feature which will benefit the farmers, while its entire effect, if it shall ever become a law, will be to heap additional burdens upon the farmer.

There is no district represented on this floor whose people have a deeper interest in the prosperity of the farming classes than the one which I represent. We buy each year the larger portion of all the marketable grain raised by the farmers of that group of Northwestern States whose productiveness is the marvel of the world.

In the year 1892 the millers and dealers living in my district handled 72,727,000 bushels of actual wheat alone, and the city which is my home is the largest primary wheat market in the world. Our people own very largely the grain elevators of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Northern Iowa. Besides grinding 45,000,000 bushels of wheat into flour annually, we manufacture over 400,000,000 feet of lumber each year, which is mainly bought by the same farmers from whom this wheat is purchased.

I state these facts to illustrate how vitally the prosperity of the community for which I specially speak is identified with the prosperity of the farmers of the Northwest.

The report of the committee having this measure in charge states that its first object is revenue. I assert that to whatever extent it produces revenue it does so at the expense of the farmer. The speculator can usually take care of himself, and in this case particularly he would see to it that the tax levied upon him for dealing in wheat was made to come out of the original price of the grain in the hands of the producer.

The farmer, already sufficiently burdened, will pay the tax levied by this bill. The farmer asks for relief and he is given increased oppression.

That such a measure can protect the producer against low prices is a delusion. Its effect would be exactly the reverse, because such a bill would disorganize and demoralize the present admirable system of marketing and moving the crops, a system which has been built up through years of experience by the cooperation of producer, dealer, and manufacturer. It would destroy the confidence of the owners and representatives of capital in the safety of the grain business and in the security of funds advanced for the purpose of handling farm products. Of the bankers, wholesale dealers, and business men generally, who are familiar with the tenor of this bill, 90 per cent are opposed to its provisions and to its passage. Its enactment would be a turning back of the hands upon the dial, equivalent to an abandonment of the railroad and the telegraph, and a return to mule teams and stagecoaches.

Chicago is everywhere recognized as the greatest speculative wheat market of the world. If speculation, including the buying and selling of "futures," tends to depress prices, why is it that for many years, as shown by the official records, Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago, during the months covering the moving of the crops, have uniformly been the highest-priced markets, relatively, on the globe? This one fact demolishes at a blow the entire theory upon which this measure is based.

With a thorough knowledge of the facts, I assert that the forms of contract and dealings which are practically prohibited by the pending bill are absolutely necessary to the safe and conservative transaction of the grain business in this country and throughout the commercial world. If this measure shall be enacted and sustained by the courts, it will be in operation just long enough to show its effect, to introduce confusion where now order prevails, to substitute uncertainty and risk for certainty and safety, to demoralize markets, and bring distress most of all to the producer.

Mr. Chairman, to substantiate what I have said, I will ask the Clerk to read a few communications I have received from several of the largest legitimate grain dealers in this country, if not in the world, men whose financial standing is unquestioned, and whose business methods commend themselves to the admiration of the present generation.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., May 5, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Please do everything possible to defeat the proposed measure known as the Hatch anti option bill. It is a matter of the greatest importance to the producers and legitimate handlers of grain that the bill should not pass.

Our firm handles between 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 bushels of grain per annum, and never speculates. We simply buy and sell grain as merchants, which requires a large capital and a large credit, which latter we command on account of the safe methods now pursued in the grain trade.

Except temporarily, higher prices have prevailed in the fall when the crop is being delivered by the farmer than in the spring, when the market is being manipulated by the speculator, and the decline in prices is borne by the speculator. I attach hereto a detailed statement of prices prevailing in Minneapolis and Chicago on wheat covering the months of September, October, and November and May 1st for the past five years, which shows that the average price of May wheat for the fall months for the five years in Minneapolis was 84⅛ cents per bushel, and the average price on May 1st for the same period was 79⅜ cents; in Chicago for the fall months the average price was 85⅜, and on May 1 it was 81⅛ cents.

Now, it is conceded by all that the great bulk of the crop is marketed between September 1 and December 15, and this statement shows that the farmer got the advantage of the speculator in the Minneapolis market 5 cents, and in the Chicago market 7 cents. If there was no way to sell for future shipment the burden shown to have been borne by the speculator would have fallen upon the farmer. The Minneapolis market can not possibly take care of the grain as fast as it is marketed there during the three fall months, and the consequence is that parties buyng for future delivery must insure themselves (or, as the trade calls it, "hedge") in some other markets later on buying it back and delivering in Minneapolis or Duluth.

The present low price of wheat is not, by any means, the result of selling futures. It is not to be expected that wheat should command relatively as high prices to-day as ten years ago. All the machinery that the farmer buys costs not much more than half what it did ten years ago. Transportation from North Dakota to the seaboard this year is not over half what it was ten years ago. Wheat in North Dakota to-day is worth as much to the producer at his station as it was ten years ago, when the price in New York was 20 cents per bushel higher than now.

Prices of all commodities throughout the world are lower, and together with the unfavorable financial condition of the country contributes towards bringing about the present low prices of grain, but the chief and most important reason lies in the fact that the supply is greater than the demand. Competitors in the production of wheat are springing up in all lands, and even in our own country new territory is constantly coming in, such, for example, as Oklahoma, which, it is estimated, will produce this year 10,000,000 bushels against practically nothing five years ago.

On account of low prices the grain must be handled on close margins, and it can not be handled on close margins unless it can be handled with safety.

Yours very truly,

F. H. PEAVEY & CO.

Hon. LOREN FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 29, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I consider the Hatch bill bad from beginning to end, and one that will have direct tendency to reduce the price of products in place of making them higher. It would place the trade in a very few hands, and make it impossible for us to hedge our wheat and protect ourselves against loss in the decline of prices. I think it will entirely destroy our system of handling grain and make us speculators in place of legitimate dealers, and when you destroy our system of protecting ourselves with our grain you destroy our grain as collateral to a very large extent.

I think if we are unfortunate enough to ever have this bill become law that my views will be fully sustained in regard to the effects of the bill, and those who take a prominent part in helping this to become a law will be known in the Northwest as being parties to getting a law passed that has done a very large amount of harm to legitimate trade.

There are a great many things done in the grain trade, as well as in all other trades, that if we could wipe out we would be glad to do so, but in attempting to do it in the way they have started in on the grain and provision trade, they do very much more harm to the legitimate trade than they do to the illegitimate trade, in my opinion.

In order to take care of the large amount of grain that is marketed and give a man all the facilities to take care of himself that he needs, he wants the privilege of selling his wheat in the best market, regardless of where he expects to ship it, and get it back into the market that he wishes to deliver in when the market is ready to take it.

We find it very necessary in the fall of the year, when large amounts of grain are being delivered in the country, to sell the wheat in Chicago or New York, or some other market aside from our own, as our market is overstocked and will not take it all, and bring it back here when our market is in better shape. If we are deprived of anything of this kind it will reduce the price of wheat very materially in the country, and so far as selling wheat "short" having a tendency to bear prices, I think it has the opposite effect. It had a direct tendency to sustain the market, as there are a great many times that the "short" sellers are the only buyers of wheat. To prove this statement you only have to refer to Chicago market, which does more of this kind of trading than any other market in the world, and is the highest, and has been for the past ten or fifteen years.

Yours, very truly,

GEO. W. VAN DUSEN.

Hon. LOREN FLETCHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Hon. LORIN FLETCHER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Referring to the Hatch antioption bill, we would say, there are no provisions in this bill against short selling or selling property that is not owned at the time sale is made. The original Hatch-Washburn bill it was claimed was for that purpose alone.

The framers of this bill profess to believe that there will be buyers for the commodities named in it, in any amount for future delivery under the trade restrictions they propose. I believe that to tear down a system of dealing that has taken years to build up and develop, and substitute an experiment, is a dangerous proceeding, and when we attempt to put our immense crops on the market, governed by these new conditions, buyers will hesitate to invest, not knowing what the result will be, and panic will follow in markets of all articles included in the bill.

The farmers in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, will market about 60,000,000 bushels of wheat between September 1 and December 1 on an average crop of 110,000,000 bushels. Of this amount there will be needed for shipment to the eastern mills and for export about 10,000,000. The mills in those three States will need about 20,000,000 bushels before February 1, and millers as a whole will not buy more than two months ahead of their grinding, and the speculators who have heretofore bought will not buy if they will be obliged to take and pay for, at maturity of contract, or any other time, without the privilege of settling otherwise than actually taking and paying for it. Who will buy and carry the remaining 30,000,000 that the speculators have heretofore bought?

Nearly all debts of our farmers are due in the fall months, and it is necessary for them to sell at that season to meet obligations. It is possible that wheat will be cheap enough next fall to make it safe for elevator men to carry their houses full without sales of futures to protect them against any probable decline, but the banks will not loan them money for that purpose. The bank with largest capital in Minneapolis has a resolution on its record book, passed within the last year or two by its directors, against loaning money to elevator men who are not known to sell futures against their purchases of wheat, and I have no doubt most other banks have the same rule in force.

Farmers must have money to meet these obligations when due, to paymerchants and others who have made their paper due in the fall, or there will be more widespread distress in that section than was experienced during the last year's panic. The privilege of selling futures has enabled buyers to pay from 8 to 15 cents more per bushel in the fall months for several years than it would sell for the following spring. We speak only of wheat, as it is a business we have been engaged in for more than thirty years in Minnesota and the Dakotas—long before it was possible to sell futures. When navigation closed on the Mississippi the price of wheat would be reduced 10 or 20 cents a bushel to cover any probable decline before it opened again the following April or May.

Very truly yours,

BROOKS BROS.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the foregoing, I desire to have read by the Clerk the views of some of our largest and most conservative bankers and financiers; men who know their business thoroughly, and who would not loan their money to speculators. Men who hold dear the prosperity and welfare of every legitimate industry of the producer as well as the dealer and manufacturer alike.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 31, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I am glad to learn from the public press that you are using your influence against the Hatch antioption bill. As manager of this bank, which is very heavily interested in the grain and flour business, I earnestly hope that your efforts in opposition to the bill will be crowned with success.

From the best information that I can obtain, it seems to me that the bill will very materially interfere with the business of legitimate grain dealers. By "legitimate grain dealers" I mean elevator men who buy their wheat and sell it for future delivery, and who are thus protected against fluctuations in the market. In loaning the bank's money on grain we consider it one of the greatest protections we have when we know that the borrower has already sold the wheat for a fixed price. We feel so strongly about this that we refuse to do business with people who "stand on their wheat" and do not protect themselves by selling for future delivery.

As a banker, therefore, lending not only this bank's money but very large amounts for other banks on wheat collaterals, I am very much interested in the legitimate grain-dealer having all the facilities he now enjoys for protecting himself against the fluctuation of prices.

So far as I know, my views are those which are generally entertained by the bankers in this section of the country, who are just as much opposed to wheat-gambling as anyone else, but who do not wish to see it stopped at the expense of our best customers, namely, the legitimate grain-dealers and elevator companies of this city.

Yours very truly,

J. W. RAYMOND,
Vice-President.

Hon. LORIN FLETCHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., May 4, 1894.

DEAR SIR: We beg you will use your best influence to defeat what is known as the "Hatch antioption bill."

In our judgment it will destroy the most complete, economical, and efficient system known in any country for the prompt handling of our immense crops. It will undoubtedly hurt the legitimate dealer in grain, but most assuredly will it be oppressive to the producers upon whose shoulders the burden will fall.

With the present system legitimate dealers can work with safety on a very small margin; and with equal safety our banks can and do make large loans at a low rate of interest to move the crops. And on account of the safety of the present system (enabling legitimate dealers to sell by wire for future delivery) competition has made the margin received for handling grain smaller than ever before known in this country.

If the bill passes, trade generally, in the rural districts especially, will be demoralized. Farmers will get a less price for their produce, for no merchant can work on so close a margin if the Hatch bill passes as he can now work under the present system, and all classes of trade, in our judgment, will suffer thereby.

You will find the grain men who most oppose the bill are among the most prominent, legitimate, grain dealers in the country.

Hon. LORIN FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

J. W. Raymond is vice-president and manager of the Northwestern National Bank.

Perry Harrison is cashier of the Security Bank.

T. J. Buxton is president of the City Bank.

H. G. Sidle is president of the First National Bank.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7007, had come to no resolution thereon.

REPRINT OF GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, the supply of copies of the bill H. R. 7477, the general deficiency bill, has been exhausted, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the House order a reprint of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, by unanimous consent, Mr. HUTCHESON was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for five days, on personal business.

The House then, on motion of Mr. HATCH (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. BLACK of Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 2556) for the relief of Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts. (Report No. 1110.)

Also, a bill (H. R. 3005) for the relief of George Isenstein. (Report No. 1116.)

By Mr. COX, from the Committee on Claims: A bill (H. R. 859) for the relief of B. D. Greene. (Report No. 1117.)

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. HOUK: A bill (H. R. 7490) designating the natives of the Territory of Alaska as natives—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 7498) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River from a point within the limits of the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, known as Eagle Point, to the opposite bank of said river in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WILSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 7499) to grant to the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, certain lands within the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., for cemetery purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. McRAE: A resolution to fix a day for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on the Public Lands—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when,

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 12th instant, certain information relative to the extent to which the system known as the padrone system now prevails, by which immigrants from Italy and other countries fall into the hands of agents or bankers who entice or force them into contracts, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Albuquerque, N. Mex., remonstrating against the removal of a portion of the Ute Indians from Colorado to New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented resolutions adopted at a recent session of the New England Typographical Union, of Concord, N. H., April 2 and 3, 1894, favoring the Governmental control of the telegraph service; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of F. B. Hussey and sundry other citizens of Greenville, N. H., praying that the pending tariff bill be so amended "that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members, and dependents of such members, shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Beatrice and Fremont, in the State of Nebraska, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 86 citizens of Lancaster County, Nebraska, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes, the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of sundry woolgrowers of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, praying for the retention of the present duty on wool; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of H. G. Torbert and sundry other citizens of Dubuque, Iowa, and the petition of E. W. Weeks and sundry other citizens of Guthrie Center, Iowa, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of the Citizens' Association of Brightwood, D. C., praying that they be granted a hearing before the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, on the subject of permitting the Brightwood Railroad Company to extend its tracks to the center of the city; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Union City, Tenn., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations, be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MARTIN (for Mr. BUTLER) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Colleton, S. C., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented the petition of W. F. Slemons, ex-member of Congress from Arkansas, praying that he be allowed the sum of $500, being the balance due him in contesting his seat in the Forty-sixth Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio relative to the centennial of the conquest of the Indian nations, and as it is the memorial of a State Legislature, I ask that it be read.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Joint resolution relative to the centennial of the conquest of the Indian nations.

Whereas the year 1895 marks the centennial epoch of the conquest of the Indian nations and the establishment of peace in the territory now comprised in the State of Ohio and adjacent country northwest of the Ohio River; and

Whereas said conquest was made by the army under command of Gen. Anthony Wayne, a gallant and meritorious soldier in the war of the Revolution and the Indian wars, the battle of Fallen Timbers, on the Maumee River, August 20, 1794, completing the chain of victories and subduing the Indian tribes; and

Whereas the treaty of peace made on the 3d day of August, 1795, at Fort Greenville (built on the site of Greenville, Ohio) by Gen. Wayne on behalf of the United States and various Indian nations occupying the territory northwest of the Ohio River was of national importance and established peace and permitted the extension of American settlements therein: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That steps be taken to properly observe the one hundredth anniversary of this important event in the history of our Western country;

That the United States Government should erect a suitable memorial structure on the site of Fort Greenville to perpetuate the memory of Gen. Anthony Wayne and his gallant army, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested, through the governor, to secure such a memorial; that to accomplish the intent of this resolution the Ohio Archæological and Historical Society is hereby authorized and directed to take the necessary steps to secure a suitable centennial celebration at Greenville, Ohio, on August 3, 1895, and to obtain, if possible, through Congress, such a memorial as will fittingly and appropriately perpetuate the centennial of this important event and those conspicuous in its history.

That the governor of Ohio be authorized to invite, on behalf of this State, the States of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Kentucky, which States furnished most of the soldiers in the campaign of 1794, and to send representatives to participate in such celebration; and also the States of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, which States, with Ohio, comprised the territory northwest of the Ohio River, to send representatives to this centennial, and to invite said States to prepare such tablets or other mementos for such memorial structure as they may desire.

Adopted March 22, 1893.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that an appropriation be made for a national exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in the fall of 1895; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COURT AT MONTPELIER, VT.

Mr. PUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier, to report it favorably and without amendment. At the request of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2141) granting a pension to Joseph Porter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2142) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico," approved March 2, 1889; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2143) for the relief of Rufus Betz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2144) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah E. Comly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2145) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Hendrickson, deceased, late major, retired, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 93) requesting the President to negotiate a treaty with Great Britain providing for the arbitration of disputes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ENGINEERING.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby instructed to transmit to the Senate all reports, addresses, and papers in his hands pertaining to the proceedings of the World's Congress Auxiliary relating to military engineering.

STATISTICS RELATING TO WHEAT, ETC.

Mr. PEFFER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

First. The number of bushels of old wheat, including the visible and invisible supply on hand, respectively, there is likely to be left over in this country on July 1, 1894.

Second. Any information he has regarding the condition of old wheat now held in elevators, storehouses, mills, or in farmers' hands.

Third. The number of bushels of wheat that is likely to be raised in each of the States, respectively, in 1894, based on its present per cent of condition and harvestable acreage.

Fourth. The number of acres of winter and spring wheat, respectively, that have been abandoned from the whole acreage sown for this year's crop, and whether any deduction from that cause was made, and if so, how much, in his report for June 10, 1894.

Fifth. To furnish such information as he has in relation to the quantity of old corn likely to be left over in this country on July 1, 1894, and the quantity likely to be raised in each State, respectively, in 1894, based on the weather conditions and climatic influences that have affected corn, oats, and grass, as set forth in the weekly reports of the Weather Bureau under his Department, or otherwise in his possession to this date.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not think the resolution will bring on any discussion. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

UNEXPENDED PENSION APPROPRIATION.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate what amount of the appropriation for the payment of pensions will remain unexpended at the close of the fiscal year 1894.

HARBOR AT EVERETT, WASH.

Mr. CALL (for Mr. SQUIRE) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the cost of dredging the bar at Everett, in the State of Washington, so as to make a fresh-water harbor in or near the river with the greatest depth of water practicable: Provided, That if the information necessary to make such estimate is now in the possession of the Chief of Engineers it may be made without any further survey. The Secretary of War is directed to cause such estimate to be made and reported to Congress without delay.

PUBLIC SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PEFFER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare and report, as soon as practicable, a bill providing for the establishment of a system of public savings banks, to be conducted under the surveillance of public officers in connection with the Post-Office Department.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the subject now nor to detain the Senate more than a moment, for I expect to avail myself at sometime in the future of a favorable opportunity to discuss the matter at length.

However, I wish to say that the matter of postal savings banks has been before Congress a great many times in one form or another during the last ten or twelve years. The late Postmaster-General was particularly active in urging the subject upon the attention of Congress. A large number of bills have been introduced into both branches of Congress upon the same subject within a few years. I have found in my cursory examination of the history of the work that one obstacle in the way of success has been the difficulty which committees of Congress have had to make up their minds that the Government could safely or properly undertake a banking business. On account of that prejudice, and I think it is only a prejudice, committees have hesitated to recommend any action.

I think in view of the history of the last two years, more especially of last year, with the failure of many of our savings banks, with the failure of many of our national banks, and now with the congestion of money in the large banks of the great cities of the country when it ought to be out doing money duty, the people can see more clearly the relation which the people's financial interests sustain to the Government as an agency of the people, and it is for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to that feature that I shall discuss it at length when an appropriate occasion arises.

We must, in my judgment, eventually arrive at a system of public banking. I do not care just now to use the word government, because so many people, even statesmen, learned in the law and learned in politics, have an idea, at least it so appears, that the Government is some great institution like a prince, power, or potentate, wholly disconnected from the people, whereas in the theory of our Government and the spirit of our laws and of our institutions the Government is only an agent of the people to execute the people's will.

So in this resolution I have used the word "public" instead of the word "Government," but eventually it will come to that; the people will do their own banking through rules and regulations provided by the Congress of the United States, and it will eventually take the form of what we shall then call Government banking.

I ask that the resolution may be permitted to lie on the table, and at some convenient season I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to discuss it more at length.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go to the Calendar. Then it can be called up just as well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to state in this connection, not in reply to the Senator from Kansas, that following the suggestion of Postmaster-General Wanamaker some years ago I introduced a bill providing for postal savings banks. I did it believing that the English system in that regard might well be followed in this country. I do not, however, in any advocacy that I may make of that system go to the length, nor do I think I could be induced to go to the length of paternalism suggested by the Senator from Kansas, that the Government of the United States should be bankers for the people of the United States, and that all private institutions of a banking character should practically be wiped out by that sort of a paternal government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Kansas. My proposed substitute reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and report upon the practicability and feasibility of providing by law for the establishment, etc.

I simply desire to say in this connection that I do not agree that the Senate should adopt any resolution directing the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to do what in their judgment they may not approve of—that is, to formulate and report a bill and recommend its passage to Congress; but I think it is entirely competent for the committee to inquire into the matter and report what in their judgment is desirable to be done in the premises. I ask that my amendment may go to the Calendar likewise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

OBSCENE LITERATURE, ETC.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2065) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with amendments, in line 26, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "one," and in line 27, after the word "than," to strike out "five years" and insert "one year;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit with any express company or other common carrier for carriage from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia any obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of an indecent character, or any article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, or any article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use, or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made, and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, with any express company or other common carrier for carriage from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or who shall take from such express company or other common carrier with intent to sell, distribute, or circulate any matter or thing herein forbidden to be deposited for carriage, shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned at hard labor not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT HASTINGS, MINN.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5806) to authorize the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct and maintain a wagon bridge over the Mississippi River.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2586) granting certain property to the city of Newport, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 3291) to amend section 22 of an act to regulate commerce, as amended March 2, 1889;

A bill (H. R. 5103) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota;" and

A bill (H. R. 6078) to authorize the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1950) to authorize the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Companies, or either of them, to construct and maintain a bridge over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2586) granting certain property to the city of Newport, Ky., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 3291) to amend section 22 of an act to regulate commerce, as amended March 2, 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5103) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 6078) to authorize the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 608, page 112, line 14, after the word "packages," it is proposed to insert "5 cents per 100 pounds;" so as to read:

Salt in bulk, and salt in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, 5 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. PEFFER. On that amendment I desire to be heard very briefly, Mr. President.

At the outset, I wish to say that personally I believe that salt ought to be on the free list, and have so believed for a number of years, perhaps as long as ten years, since I have been studying the subject; but, while that is true, I represent a constituency, a portion of whom are interested in very large measure in the salt industry. So far as my correspondence with the people of Kansas concerning their mechanical and manufacturing industries is concerned, this is the only one to which my attention has been called particularly and forcibly by the men who are interested in the work there.

At the city of Hutchinson, which is very near the center of the State of Kansas—and that, as Senators know, is the center of the United States and of the world—there is a substratum of salt about 350 feet in thickness. At the time that body of salt was discovered, prepared salt, ready for use, was selling in Kansas and in all the region roundabout at $2.50 a barrel, but our people, with the aid of some outside means, set to work to develop their salt mines. To-day there are three or four—I am not quite certain as to the exact number—large salt factories at work; and now they are selling salt at from 50 to 55 cents a barrel. It was only a few years ago, in 1887, if I remember correctly, that we began to work on these mines. The Hutchinson salt factories are now turning out about 1,250,000 barrels annually, in addition to over two million packages of fine dairy and table salt.

Our Kansas manufacturers tell me that their trade extends far down into Texas, southwest of us. They tell me further that in that neighborhood they come into competition with the British salt, that is salt brought in from England, and that, although the people will not be benefited in any way by a reduction of the duty upon salt or by a removal of the duty, yet these manufacturers, who are engaged in the business of furnishing the people with salt, if they have free competition with the British article, will necessarily be more or less restricted in the territory with which they trade. They say to me, if a reasonable duty is retained upon foreign salt, the Kansas industry will extend nearly to the coast line, down into and beyond Galveston, and in that region across Texas; that there the British reaches them and comes in competition with them, and that there the transportation charges about equalize each other.

That is all there is in this thing. It is simply to give our own manufacturers a larger market for salt, which they tell me candidly, and I think they are right, will not be affected at all in price although the duty should be removed, but it is so small that it would not affect the territory of the trade. When it comes to retailing salt among the people, a duty of 5 or 10 cents upon the hundred pounds is so small as that the people who purchase it by retail would not get any benefit from the removal of the duty, and the territory of the manufacturers, who have invested large amounts in the salt establishments there would be extended to that extent. That, I think, is well worthy of the consideration of the Senate.

This bill is being conducted upon protection lines. Yesterday, by a very encouraging vote, we determined that we would protect the quicksilver industry. The persons who are particularly interested in that industry, both consumers and producers, are alike in favor of a duty upon the foreign article, with two objects in view, one to keep down the price of quicksilver in the markets generally to operate as a regulator of the world's price of the product, and the other to keep in operation the already developed manufacturing industry in the United States.

There is no question but that the more we foster and encourage and protect domestic manufacturing industries up to a reasonable line the better it is for all parties concerned. Our people are unanimous upon that point. While it was alleged in recent years that the Democratic party were a party of free traders, yet the truth is that they have not been free traders, they have been protectionists; and now, in the management of this bill, they boldly proclaim to the world that this is a protection measure. That being true, while, as I said in the earlier stages of this discussion, the people in Kansas are ready for free trade if the rest of the world is, and that I am ready for free trade if other Senators are—I leave it entirely with them—I submit, in view of the course we are taking upon the pending bill, in view of what we did yesterday, that the salt industry in Kansas is entitled to protection as much as the quicksilver industry in the State of California, or the collar and cuff industry in the State of New York, or the woolen industry in the State of Rhode Island.

When I first received suggestions from the salt manufacturers in Kansas asking me to urge a retention of at least a reasonable duty upon foreign salt, I wrote an answer substantially like this:

While, as you know, I am in favor of free salt, yet I am your representative, and if you will show me any good reason why a duty of any amount ought to be retained on foreign salt, I will present your argument to the Senate and urge that it be incorporated in the law.

In answer to that letter I received the following letter, dated Hutchinson, Kans., December 16, 1893, directed to me:

Your valued favor of the 28th ultimo was duly received, and I have delayed answering the same thinking I might be able to gather more details for your information. I presume it is useless, however, to submit statistics, as you have them at hand and much more accessible than they could possibly be to me. Inasmuch as you have a desire to know the facts as relates to this field, however, will say that there is no doubt but that free salt would have a very serious effect upon us as manufacturers. Aside from the State of Kansas, Texas comes in as our second largest consumer of salt. The cities of Galveston, Houston, San Antonio, and in fact all Southern Texas are using foreign salt, we not being able to market any in competition with the imported salt, notwithstanding the present duties.

In conversation with Wallis, Landis, & Co., prominent importers of Galveston, a few days ago, they told a representative of ours that with free salt they would be able to control the trade as far north as Fort Worth, Tex. This would have a serious effect upon our Texas trade and cut off hundreds of cars annually, and I am not so sure but what they would be able to come farther north than intimated, by these prices Armour now imports all their salt used on export meats on account of duties being refunded. In conversation with a packer in Iowa he said that they would be able to bring all the salt up the Mississippi River at less than we could freight it across by rail. There is no question in my mind but what the output of this field would be greatly decreased if salt is admitted free of duty; aside from this I do not see any good grounds for it, nor do I know of anyone demanding it. To-day we are placing salt here on cars at 57 cents per barrel. The package and packing costs 30 cents of this amount, leaving but 27 cents for 280 pounds of salt or $1.73 per ton of 2,000 pounds.

Certainly the consumer is getting salt cheap enough; you can scarcely buy sand so cheap. A reduction of the output not only affects the manufacturer, but supplants that much labor in manufacturing, as well as in the production of the salt, the latter alone amounting to thousands of cars per annum to this point for the evaporation of the salt. It goes still further and reduces the revenue of the railroad companies; you can readily see that the loss sustained is widespread. The duties collected during the decade of 1873 to 1883 was $7,765,021.73; this was under the present duty. In 1868, when the duty was 18 and 24 cents per hundred-weight, the duties collected amounted to $1,136,175.36; with the reduction of duties the revenues were decreased nearly one-half million dollars, while the amount imported amounted to practically the same. In 1889 the revenues collected from salt were nearly one-half million dollars.

With the abolishment of this duty we lose all the revenue we now gain, and at the same time supplant labor instead of increasing it. As for the State of Kansas, last year we manufactured 1,080,000 barrels. This, for a new field is certainly surprising, and supplants anything in the way of development heretofore, and to have it absolutely crippled at this time when it is about the only industry, with the exception of lead, that Kansas is interested in in the way of dutiable goods, it looks to us as placing us at an unfair advantage as compared with Eastern manufacturers. I feel quite sure that the general public does not demand the removal of duty, and especially is this true of the people of Kansas. My recent letter to you and Mr. MARTIN was given to the press. I inclose you herewith copy of letter received from a gentleman at Fort Scott, Kans., which explains itself.

I will state that the letter referred to has reference to the printed communication to which the writer alludes:

You can see other people are interested as well as ourselves. This gentleman is an entire stranger to me. If there are any other facts that I can give you I shall be pleased to furnish them. Trusting that you will see your way clear to resist a reduction of the tariff in this particular, I remain

Yours, truly,

J. M. MULKEY, Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the present duty on salt?

Mr. PEFFER. Twelve cents and 8 cents per hundred pounds, depending upon whether it comes in packages or in bulk. This is the letter to which Mr. Mulkey refers:

FORT SCOTT, KANS., November 29, 1893.

MY DEAR SIR: I have read your letter to the tariff committee, which is published in the papers, with a good deal of interest and appreciation, but if you will pardon the assumption, I do not think you put the case as strongly as the occasion demands; the idea that anybody is going to be benefitted by the placing of salt on the free list is the veriest humbug. Who is demanding it, and who is to be benefitted by it? Not the laboring man, mechanic, store-keeper, professional man, or any housekeeper, for scarcely a family in these United States will use a dollar's worth of salt in a year.

Not the farmer either, for stock salt is delivered in the lump almost as cheap as stones; not the packing houses, who sell all the salt they use at the price of salt meat; in fact nothing that is sold as merchandise in any store is as cheap as salt, and to place it on the free list is to kill off a most important industry, which is of great value to the State of Kansas, as well as to Michigan, New York, and West Virginia, without any corresponding benefit to any class of people; it is not like sugar or wool, or other articles of necessity, of which it can be claimed that the loss of the producer is more than counterbalanced by reduced prices to consumers, for salt is so cheap now that no one feels the price that he pays for it. I have failed to find any reason given by an intelligent man for placing it on the free list, and I hope you will fully expose the humbug that the so doing is going to benefit anybody.

Sincerely yours,

F. B. RAY.

J. M. MULKEY,
Secretary, Hutchinson, Kans.

The point that is made by both of these persons and which I make in their behalf, I say to Senators, is not with the expectation of making salt any cheaper to the people whom I am proud to represent, but in order that the area of territory in which the manufacturing interest which I represent may be enlarged or that at least their present territory may be saved to them. If the duty on salt is entirely removed and the foreign article comes in without paying taxes of any kind, then the lines which our people now enjoy will be gradually withdrawn and a large part of the territory which they now supply with salt will be cut off.

Mr. President, I have presented their case plainly, fully, and sincerely, and I trust that the Senate will act favorably upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Kansas takes his seat I should like to ask him the extent of the salt deposit in Kansas. I think he has not stated that as fully as he might.

Mr. PEFFER. I stated the depth of the bed. The thickness of the salt deposit is about 350 feet. That is the average where it has been bored through in different places. As to its extent, how much territory it covers, we do not know, but I am confident that it is not less than 150 miles extending north and south, probably 30 miles east and west, and it may be more. It extends across away up into the Sullivan Valley. The Indians were making salt in that region before white men came there by simply gathering the deposits from the evaporation of the sun.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the deposit is practically inexhaustible.

Mr. PEFFER. Yes, sir; it is practically inexhaustible. My attention has just been called to the production of salt. I mentioned that we began only in 1887, and that we have now increased our production to considerably over a million barrels a year. By the kindness of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], I have the annual production before me. In 1888 the production was 155,000 barrels. That was the first year of our production. In 1889 the production was 450,000 barrels; in 1890 it was 822,666 barrels; in 1891 it was 855,536 barrels, and in 1892 it was 1,480,100 barrels.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator giving the production of the State of Kansas?

Mr. PEFFER. Of Kansas alone. In addition, we are producing a very large quantity of fine table and dairy salt, which is put up in small packages and is not included in this barreled salt at all, nor does it include the rock salt that is sold in large chunks to men who raise stock. The salt is laid down in the field or put in troughs so that the cattle may lick at it as they pass without spreading it in the grass, as we did formerly with the lower grades of salt. The product of dairy and fine salt last year amounted, as I read to you, to over 2,000,000 packages. So the development is wonderful in extent. I think it not only fair, but I think it right in every sense of the word that the territory in which my people operate shall be protected.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire simply to supplement the argument of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] by a statement furnished me on behalf of the American salt industry. They say:

Until ten years ago our coast cities and towns, and those adjacent thereto, were very largely dependent upon foreign sources for their supply of salt.

In 1884 the importations of salt amounted to 454,488 tons, and the total American output 814,367 tons.

Of the latter amount New York State produced 250,000 tons, and was the main domestic source of supply of the Eastern, Middle, and South Atlantic States. Domestic common salt then sold in New York City for about $5.50 per ton and Liverpool common for about $6.50 per ton, and the same salts are now sold for $4.50 and $5, a decrease in price of 18 per cent on domestic salt and 23 per cent on imported salt. In 1884 the domestic manufacturers did not make a salt satisfactory to the salters of hides, and this trade had to pay from $8.40 to $8.96 per ton for the imported coarse salt.

In 1887 a salt was made in this country that was suitable for the hide trade and was sold for $6 per ton. When it was found that this salt gave entire satisfaction for hides the importers met the reduced figures, and prices on both grades were reduced to $5.50. It remained at this price until domestic competition further reduced the price on this grade to $4.50.

The development of the American salt industry in New York has therefore effected a saving to the beef trade of nearly 50 per cent on the cost of their coarse salt.

The large buyers of salt, even in our coast cities where the greatest saving would apparently be effected, are not asking for free salt; on the contrary, some of the largest, D. H. Sherman and Joseph Eastman, are even protesting against the removal of the duty, believing it to their interest as buyers of salt to have the American industry given adequate protection.

That free salt would effectively drive the domestic article from the seacoast is made manifest by the operation of the clause in the present tariff law, giving the deep-sea fishermen on the coast free salt. For years the American manufacturers have made every effort to sell the fish trade at Gloucester and other New England towns, as well as the Potomac Region, and although the American salt is perfectly suited for this purpose, as proved by its extended use on the Great Lakes, they have never been able to compete with the foreign product in price, and to-day not a pound of domestic salt is being used for curing fish on the Atlantic coast.

We do not allude to this fish question with any intention of advocating that a duty be charged on salt for this trade, but quote it as an example of what would surely happen with all trade on and near the coast if salt were admitted free. But why is imported salt able to drive out our domestic product?

Can the foreigner make it so much cheaper than can we? No. Our companies can, notwithstanding their higher cost of labor and fuel, produce their salt practically as cheap as it can be made in England or in any country not favored by a hot tropical sun. Then, why do they ask protection? Because the British Salt Union can ship their salt as ballast from the works near Liverpool to New York City at a total cost for transportation of 3 shillings, or 72 cents per ton, and the American producer has to pay $2.25. Salt is carried from Liverpool to New Orleans for 3 shillings, or 72 cents per ton, and the freight from the salt works within one or two hundred miles of that city is, I believe, $2 per ton. The British Salt Union can land their salt in Boston at a total freight cost of 2 shillings, or 48 cents per ton, and the freight on domestic salt is $2.69.

It is to protect them against these ballast freight rates that the domestic salt companies ask protection. They do not ask for a duty that will enable them to sell the fish trade, or secure trade that they have never before had, but simply ask for a sufficient duty to partially overcome the enormous advantage the foreign manufacturer has in freight rates, and give them some chance to retain the trade they have had for some years.

I intended to read also the statement of the Onondago Coarse Salt Association and a memorandum of the New York Salt Association, but if there be no objection I will ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follow:

REPLY TO CIRCULAR LETTER OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, UNITED STATES SENATE, RELATIVE TO CUSTOMS LEGISLATION.

To the honorable the Finance Committee of the United States Senate,
Hon. D. W. Voorhees, chairman:

Having been kindly furnished a copy of a "Circular Letter of Inquiry, No. 1, Manufacturers," of your honorable committee, bearing date of December 20, 1893, we beg leave to submit the following for its consideration:

We desire to answer said inquiry generally, hoping that our position may be thus the better understood. The persons and companies who compose our association are the manufacturers of what is known as "coarse salt," produced by solar evaporation on the Onondago salt springs reservation at and about Syracuse, N. Y. There is a total capital of more than $2,500,000 employed here in this industry, and many laborers.

We favor the retention of the present "specific duty" on salt, which is 8 cents per 100 pounds on salt in bulk and 12 cents on salt in packages.

The salt imported into the United States comes, in the main, from England, the Mediterranean, and the West Indies, and is sent from those countries chiefly as ballast for vessels seeking here return cargoes, being taken at nominal rates of freight. The wages of the English salt-maker are from 50 to 60 per cent lower than ours. The great bulk of the West India and Mediterranean Sea salt is obtained from the so-called lagoons, requiring no labor except that which is incurred in the harvesting of it.

Prior to 1857 the salt manufacture in the United States was almost wholly confined to the Onondaga salt springs, in the State of New York, and to the States of Virginia and Ohio. Since that time, beginning with the discovery and use of the wells at Saginaw, in Michigan, salt has been found, either in salt wells or salt rock, over most of the States and Territories of the Union, notably over almost the entire surface of Western New York, the whole peninsula of Michigan, in the northern part of Ohio south of Lake Erie, Southwestern Louisiana, Kansas, Nebraska, California, Utah, the province of Ontario, Canada, on Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair, and St. Clair River.

The struggle for a market between the producers of domestic salt has lowered the price to a point where, at the present rate of wages, the business can not continue, especially if the duties on imported salt are removed, for to-day salt can be, and actually is, landed at New York and other places from foreign ports at a freight less than it costs us, only 300 miles distant, to put our product there.

The consumption of salt in this country follows closely the population, and to-day 65,000,000 bushels, of 56 pounds, is our requirement. There are to-day in existence in this country salt works enough to make twice the above amount, if required, and the wells and mines already developed are sufficient to supply the world's demand for centuries to come without exhaustion, and at a price to the consumer far lower than it will ever be if domestic manufacture goes to the wall in its double strife with home competition and free foreign salt, as it inevitably must, unless labor is greatly cheapened.

The present duty of 8 cents per 100 pounds barely permits our salt to reach tide water and compete with the foreign article without profit.

We are utterly driven from the market of salt for use in the deep-sea fisheries and packing of meats for export, where the use of foreign salt is now free by act of Congress, although the universal testimony of the fishermen and packers is that our salt at the same price would drive out the foreign article by reason of its acknowledged superiority.

The report from Washington for 1892 gives as the export of salt from the United States, 93,000 bushels, while in the sixties, before the discovery of brine at Goderich, Canada, on Lake Huron, the annual export to Canada alone from the Onondaga salt works had reached 625,000 bushels. Now there is no export, and free salt could be brought into Central and Western New York and laid down at the very doors of its manufactories from the practically inexhaustible wells of Canada at a far cheaper rate than the present cost of labor in its production at our wells and mines.

England to-day actually forbids the manufacture of salt in her East India empire, which has not only a very extensive seacoast and numerous islands with a great number of lagoons well adapted for the manufacture of sea salt, but rock salt in inexhaustible quantities; and she excludes peremptorily the use of any salt except that made and exported in English vessels from England, or made in her East India empire for the Crown, and levies a tax on both, yielding a revenue only second to the land tax. Spain, France, and Italy, the three great producing countries of the Mediterranean Sea, exact an enormous excise on the domestic use of salt, and forbid absolutely the importation of any foreign article, while all permit and foster, without charge of excise, the exportation of this commodity. The result of the policy of these nations is that the cost of salt to the ordinary citizen consumer of their countries is largely in excess of its cost to the citizen of the United States.

But not long will it be so, when salt shall be admitted free, when our even now struggling industry shall be paralyzed or destroyed in an unequal competition with the cheaper product of foreign cheaper labor. We will then soon be made to pay to the English Salt Union the price which it exacts elsewhere.

Salt is an article of prime necessity, like the elements of air and water. Nothing can fill its place in the human economy; the supply from foreign sources is always precarious, depending on the accidents of peace and war, on blockades and other circumstances; domestic capital and industries should therefore receive at least so much encouragement in any system of commercial regulation as will secure in all circumstances the national independence in a point of such vital concern.

It ought to be considered that salt fitted for commerce and use is preeminently the result of combined labor and capital; of capital applied in the erection of expensive plants; and of labor employed in the process to which the crude material is subjected. In the commercial value of this article no appreciable estimate is made of the brine in its native condition. The cost of salt in the market is simply the cost of the capital and labor used in the production; and the protection offered to it by revenue and the tariff laws is precisely the same in principle and in fact as that afforded to any other branch of manufacturing industry. It seems necessary to state this because it is contrary to a received impression among those who have little or no acquaintance with the subject.

By many persons salt is supposed to be one of the bounties of the Creator, ready prepared for the use of man, requiring neither capital nor skill, and only labor enough to gather it up like manna in the wilderness. Their delusion has inspired no small amount of ignorant and empty declamation against the impost duty on the article. It is wholly a delusion. Salt is a bounty of the Creator in the same and only in the same sense as a thousand other things bestowed on man by a beneficent Providence, which must be transmuted by capital, labor, and skill into shapes and forms fitted for the economy of human life. More than most other things its value in commerce and its adaptation to use depend on the capital of the producer and the labor and skill which he employs. Why then, we ask, should a discrimination be made against this article in a system of commercial laws and regulations enacted, whether for protection or revenue, or for both?

The competition between our different domestic interests, and between them and foreign salt, insures the utmost moderation in the price of the article. A repeal or material reduction of the tariff would bring blight and paralysis upon this branch of industry. The duty is the precise advantage which it enables to compete with the foreign article in the great markets of the country. The loss of this advantage would be fatal, and we would be forced to retire from the competition.

The first effect of the removal of the duty might be to reduce the price of foreign salt in the competing markets; but that effect would be transitory merely. It would take place in the interest distinctly of the importer, and result in his gaining possession of the market. Domestic salt would not, perhaps, wholly disappear from the country, but the foreign product would have undisputed control on the seaboard, in the great cities and adjacent country, on the tide waters and the navigable rivers.

Domestic commerce in this article, if it existed at all, would shrink into strictly interior territory, pressed closely even there by its rival. But what then? Importers are not understood to be beings of angelic nature. Sole possessors of the chief markets, it is inconceivable that they would not accept all the advantages of the situation. Competition is the great regulator of prices and the best guaranty for moderation which the consumers of manufactured articles can possibly have. The duty once removed, domestic salt could not longer compete with the foreign in our markets, and the consumer here at home would have to submit as best he might to the exactions of the foreign producer and the importer.

We would not be understood as advocating a high protective tariff, or even a tariff for protection rather than for revenue. We are of different political parties. We assume that there must be tariff laws at least for revenue. In any revision of them some discrimination will be found expedient in order to the incidental protection of domestic industries. We contend that in all legislation upon this general subject domestic salt presents the very highest claim to a favorable consideration.

Salt is now one of the cheapest articles of commerce, especially when the relative cost of labor entering into its manufacture is considered. We by no means concede that a repeal of the duty on it would make it any cheaper to the great mass of consumers; the contrary, we think, is plainly true.

We contend for a tariff on salt because the imported article competes most injuriously with the manufacture of our own people. While tariffs are levied, whether for revenue or protection, we ought not to be singled out for sacrifice to appease the interested clamor of a particular class of foreign producers and importers. Rather, we say, give us a free-trade system, and restore to us the antewar prices of labor and of other things which enter into the cost of the article we produce. But since this can not be, let us not be made the victims of a selfish raid against one of the interests which most needs and should have the benefit of the national legislation.

The above statement is approved by and made on behalf of all the manufacturers of salt on the Onondaga salt springs reservation, Onondago County, N. Y.

Very respectfully, etc.,

THOS. MOLLOY,
Secretary of the Onondaga Coarse Salt Association.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., February 7, 1894.

RELATIVE TO THE DUTY ON SALT.

FEBRUARY, 1894.

The salt industry of the United States represents an invested capital of over $20,000,000.

In 1882 the domestic production was about 812,000 tons.

In 1892 the domestic production was about 1,637,000 tons, showing an increase in ten years of over 100 per cent.

In 1882 the importation was 364,000 tons.

In 1892 the importation was 176,000 tons, showing a decrease in ten years of over 50 per cent.

To demonstrate the necessity and the advisability of retaining the present duty on salt, we propose to herein briefly prove three general facts:

First. That since the establishing of a duty sufficient to enable the American manufacturer of salt to cope successfully with the foreigner, prices have dropped very materially, and that these prices will remain low as long as domestic competition continues.

Second. That the removal of the whole duty on salt, so long as the condition of freights remain as they have for the past five years, must result in the severe crippling of all and the closing up of the large majority of the salt works in the eastern part of the United States.

Third. That the existing duty is not an appreciable tax on anyone, and that its removal would not result in prices to the ordinary consumer being lowered a particle.

To take up our first statement:

In 1860 there was practically no duty on salt, and the average price was about $3 per barrel.

The Michigan salt industry was established this year, and in 1862 a duty of 18 cents per 100 pounds bulk and 24 cents in sacks was imposed.

The price steadily dropped as domestic competition increased, and in 1866 the average selling price was $1.80 per barrel.

In 1872 the duty was reduced to the present rate of 8 cents per 100 pounds in bulk and 12 cents per 100 pounds in packages.

In 1883 the selling price was reduced to 81 cents per barrel on account of the competition arising from the development of the salt fields in Western New York.

Improvement in the methods of manufacture, and the increasing competition, have steadily reduced the price until in 1893 the average selling price at the works of common salt was not over 53 cents per barrel of 280 pounds, and this price includes the barrel, which costs about 25 cents.

In 1883 England exported to this country 239,459 tons, and the selling price on common salt was 81 cents per barrel.

In 1893 England exported to this country 60,056 tons, and the selling price was 53 cents per barrel.

The selling prices on all grades of salt in this country have been reduced in direct proportion as the importations of competing grades have been decreased.

The salt works and mines in New York, Michigan, Kansas, Ohio, West Virginia, and Louisiana alone, if steadily worked ten hours per day, could produce ten times the amount of salt consumed in the United States.

This enormous capacity of production and the ease with which new works can be established make it impossible that prices can be advanced to yield more than a very moderate profit on the actual capital invested.

In confirmation of our second statement that the removal of the whole duty on salt would close up a large majority of the salt works in the eastern part of the United States:

In the year 1892 the States of New York and Louisiana, whose chief markets are the coast and tributary points, produced nearly two-fifths of the entire production of the United States.

For many years foreign producers of salt have enjoyed the benefit of having their goods brought to this country as ballast at nominal rates of freight.

Salt is imported to this country from three general sections: From England, from the West Indies, and from the Mediterranean ports.

First. Salt from England.

England exports to this country nearly all grades of salt, the principal being "rock" salt, "common" evaporated salt, and the finer grades of dairy and table salt known as "factory filled."

The principal salt works in England are in Cheshire, on the river Weaver, about 15 miles from Liverpool, and the salt is transported by water to Liverpool by the salt companies on their own lighters at very small expense.

The ninth (last) edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, published in 1888, under heading of salt (volume 21, page 233), says, speaking of the Cheshire district:

"The price of salt at the works may be said to range from 4*s.* 6*d.* to 6*s.* per ton, the former being less than the cost price as given before the British parliamentary commission in 1881. It is there stated to be: Brine, 6*d.*; labor, 10*d.*; fuel, 3*s.*; rent, interest, etc., 1*s.*; total, 5*s.* 4*d.* Thus the margin of profit is but small, almost the only gain being said to accrue from the lightering, most of the salt manufacturers doing the carriage in their own flats."

Vessels from Liverpool for United States ports want salt for ballast, and bring it at a nominal rate of freight. The highest freight for sailing vessels we have heard of from Liverpool to New York during the last two years is 3*s.* 6*d.* per ton. Many cargoes have come for 1*s.*, and the average is about 2*s.*, or 48 cents, per ton of 2,240 pounds.

Small lots of sacked salt by steamer pay as high as 7*s.* 6*d.*, but the regular lines are generally ready to take it for 5*s.*, and the "tramp" steamers for considerably less.

Freights to Boston are much lower than to New York, steamers taking salt right along for 1*s.* per ton, and large quantities have, during the past year, been carried from Liverpool to Boston by steamer free of freight.

Sailing rates from Liverpool to Philadelphia are a little higher, averaging about 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton (60 cents).

H. E. Falk, salt merchant, of Liverpool, issues each month Falk's Salt Circular, which is accepted in all parts of the world as the authority on prices, freight rates, etc.

The rates quoted in these circulars substantially confirm our own data.

The average freight rates for the last four years were about as follows:

Steam: New York, 5*s.*; Boston, 1*s.* 6*d.*; Baltimore, 4*s.* 6*d.*; Philadelphia, 6*s.* 10*d.*; New Orleans, 3*s.*; Savannah, 4*s.* 3*d.*; Wilmington, 3*s.* 9*d.*; Norfolk, 3*s.*

Sail: New York, 2*s.*; Philadelphia, 2*s.* 6*d.*; San Francisco, 12*s.* 6*d.*; Savannah, 2*s.*

When the present rate of duty was enacted in 1872, the average sailing freight rates from Liverpool to our North Atlantic ports were 15*s.* ($3.66) per ton, and the steam rates ranged from 18*s.* to 21*s.* ($4.40 to $5.12).

These freight rates amounted to an additional protection to domestic salt.

Large quantities of salt for Chicago, Duluth, and other ports on the Great Lakes are shipped on a through bill of lading from Liverpool, are brought by steamer to Montreal, and thence via Canadian railways and lake transportation to destination.

Second. West Indies.

The second general section from which salt comes to the United States is the West Indies, including Turks Island, St. Martens, Curacoa, etc. The salt from this section is "solar-evaporated" sea salt—i. e., salt made from sea water by evaporating it by the natural heat of the sun. This process of salt-making can not be profitably used in this climate, but in the hot southern latitudes, assisted by labor which costs but a few cents a day, salt can be made by this method for about 75 cents a ton.

A part of the salt coming here from the West Indies is brought by the owners of vessels to provide the vessel with ballast and sold here for "vessel's account." The difference between cost and selling prices, minus the duty, is credited as freight. This ranges from 4 to 7 cents per bushel, the average being about 6 cents per bushel, equal to $1.68 per ton.

With the duty removed the owners of vessels would venture in this direction to a much larger extent than at present, and, not finding a ready purchaser on arriving at any of our seaports, would, rather than put the salt in store, offer it at prices that would demoralize the market, to the great detriment of all depending upon it as an outlet for a constant production.

Third. Spanish and Mediterranean ports.

The third section includes Spanish and Mediterranean ports. The methods of manufacture there are the same used in the West Indies, and labor but little higher. The average freight rate from the Spanish ports is about 4*s.* per ton, and from Mediterranean ports from 1*s.* to 2*s.* higher.

Italian vessels can easily afford to bring salt from the Mediterranean freight free, as their Government pays them a handsome subsidy, which they do not receive unless they carry a merchantable cargo.

DOMESTIC SALT.

The larger part of the domestic salt used at all the seaports or tributary points on the North Atlantic coast of the United States is produced in New York State.

There are two principal salt districts in the State—the Syracuse region and the Western New York salt fields, located in Wyoming and Livingston counties.

The former have an advantage of being on the line of the Erie Canal, which enables them during the canal season (May to November) to get their product to New York City at an average freight of about $1.20 per ton; but they are at a disadvantage by having a weak brine, for which they have to pay a royalty to the State, and a high-priced fuel.

Nearly all the money invested in salt works in New York State during the past ten years has been used in developing the Western New York fields.

When canal freights are very low salt can be shipped from this district by railroad to Rochester, and thence to New York City by canal at cost of about $1.85 per ton of 2,240 pounds, but for certainly eight months of the year the companies in western New York are dependent upon railroads, and have to pay $2.25 per ton to New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; $2.69 per ton to New Haven, Boston, Providence, and Gloucester; $3.47 per ton to Portland, Bath, etc., and $3.25 to $6 per ton to Southern ports.

The average freight on imported salt is at least $1.50 per ton less than the average freight from the New York Salt Works to Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore.

The average cost to the importer of foreign salts landed in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or Savannah, duty paid, is about as follows:

Liverpool ground, $4.70 to $5 per ton, 2,240 pounds.

West Indies, $4.95 to $5.60 per ton, 2,240 pounds.

Mediterranean, $3.96 to $4.48 per ton, 2,240 pounds.

Deducting the present duty of 8 cents per 100 pounds, or $1.78 per ton, as proposed in the Wilson bill, the cost of imported salt would be reduced to, f. o. b. New York City to, say—

Liverpool ground, $2.92 to $3.47 per ton.

West Indies, $3.16 to $3.81 per ton.

Mediterranean, $2.13 to $2.69 per ton.

To meet these prices in New York City salt must be sold for less than $1 per ton f. o. b. cars at the works.

In Philadelphia and Baltimore the conditions are practically as in New York, but in Boston, Portland, and the South, domestic salt would be at a disadvantage even greater than in New York.

By comparison with the cost of manufacturing salt in England (as given before the Parliamentary Commission), where labor and fuel are much lower than here, and considering the amount of work necessary to mine, hoist, screen, and grade a ton of salt, it is self evident that this price is far below the lowest possible cost.

Salt can be brought from Liverpool to New York for, say, 48 cents per ton, and as this amount includes discharging, it can without any expense be loaded on a canal boat and during most of the canal season carried to Buffalo for 55 cents per ton. Therefore, for $1.03 per gross ton English salt can be carried from Liverpool to Buffalo. Our lowest freight to Buffalo is 59 cents per ton, and as all our Western shipments are made via this port on salt shipped to Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas, and all Western points, we would have an advantage in freight of only 44 cents per ton.

With domestic salt practically excluded from the seacoast the slight advantage of say 44 cents per ton, gained in shipments to Buffalo and the West, is entirely inadequate to enable us to compete successfully with the foreign producer, who will be willing to sell his surplus salt in the Western markets without profit, or even at a small loss.

The cost of producing salt being made up almost entirely of labor, a reduction in wages is the only means by which the present cost could be reduced.

The present duty of 8 cents per 100 pounds, or $1.78 per ton, is barely sufficient to enable domestic salt to compete with foreign, and with this duty removed it must result in effectively shutting out domestic salt on our coast and eventually closing most of our salt works.

There is a provision in the present tariff law that enables the deep-sea fishermen on our coast to get the salt for curing their fish free of duty, and the operation of this provision is the best proof we can offer of the inability of the domestic producer to compete with free salt.

American salt is perfectly suited for curing fish. It is used exclusively on the Great Lakes with perfect results, and when, due to some extraordinary cause, such as the wrecking of several salt-laden vessels, a shipment of domestic salt has been made to the coast fishermen, it has given perfect satisfaction.

For years the American salt companies have made every effort to sell the fish trade at Gloucester and other New England towns, as well as the Potomac region, but they have never under ordinary circumstances been able to meet the importers' price, and to-day not a pound of domestic salt is being used in this extensive industry.

The argument has been made that the greater part of the salt imported has to be stored, and 50 cents per ton is thereby added to the cost. It is true that a part of many cargoes is stored, but it is generally the case that the greater part of the cargo is sold before the vessel arrives, and is either taken by the purchaser direct from the vessel's side or stored for his account and accommodation. Storage charges are common to both importer and domestic dealer, as no salt dealer can conduct a business of any extent without constantly carrying a stock at the principal points of consumption and distribution.

Salt imported by the regular steamers is seldom, if ever, stored, but is distributed direct from the dock.

IN CONFIRMATION OF OUR THIRD STATEMENT, THAT THE PRESENT DUTY IS NOT AN APPRECIABLE TAX ON ANYONE.

Salt for commercial purposes.—For commercial purposes salt is largely used for packing meats, salting hides, curing fish, freezing ice cream, and in the manufacture of chemicals, soap, and glass. For all of these uses the cost of salt would not average more than 1 per cent of the total cost of supplies and materials used, and therefore a little higher or lower cost to the packer or manufacturer is a matter of trifling importance.

Table salt.—The argument is used that salt is a necessity of every poor man in the land.

A family of four to six persons use on the average 75 pounds of salt per year. The present duty on this amount is 6 cents; so if a family benefited by the full amount of duty proposed to be removed a saving of 6 cents per annum would be effected.

They usually buy their salt in 3-pound bags. The cost of the salt in a 3-pound bag is practically nothing, the selling price being made up almost entirely of the cost of the bag, labor of filling, weighing, and sewing same, and the handling and profit of the salt jobber (not the manufacturer), the wholesale grocer, and the retail grocer. A 3-pound bag of salt retails for 5 cents; the removal of the duty would reduce the cost one-fourth of a cent. As our currency is not of a denomination to make possible a selling price of 4¼ cents, it is quite evident that the cost of a small bag would not be reduced to the consumer.

Dairy salt.—Dairy salt is imported in packages and therefore pays a duty of 12 cents per 100 pounds. The extra 4 cents per 100 pounds is added as a duty on the fine linen sacks in which this grade of salt is imported; consequently the duty on the salt is but 8 cents per 100 pounds.

One pound of salt will salt 16 pounds of butter. A reduction of the full amount of duty would effect a saving to the farmer of 1 cent on every 200 pounds of butter salted by him, and even this trifling reduction would result to the benefit of the dealer and not the farmer, as in the case of table salt.

In the seaboard cities the dealers and large consumers, who can take their salt in quantity from the vessel, would effect a slight temporary saving on the cost of their salt.

The average selling prices for several years on the cheaper grades of domestic salt have been about $4.25 per ton for mineral salt and $4.75 per ton for evaporated salt.

If forced to sell below these prices the American works must sooner or later shut down, the time depending only upon the amount of money they are willing and able to spend in continuing a hopeless fight with the importer.

A condition would soon exist when the British Salt Union, which has already made several ineffectual attempts to gain control of the industry in this country, could buy up some of the salt works for a mere song. These they could operate, and could well afford to sell below cost at those points where the domestic salt still had a fighting chance, and by that means close all the salt works in the States adjacent to the coast.

The price would then be advanced, and we would in the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States be entirely dependent upon foreigners for our supply of that most necessary article.

If there are to be any import duties in this country, whether for protection or for revenue, we contend that the salt industries have the very highest claims for your consideration.

There is no salt trust in this country; the most moderate profits only have been made in recent years in this trade; the selling prices have never been advanced by pools, combinations, etc., and the average selling price is far cheaper than that of any other manufactured article produced in this country.

Common coal and sand are the only articles we can think of that are sold as cheap as salt.

Nearly 70 per cent in value of the dutiable salt imported to this country in 1892 was shipped by one company (the British salt trust), represented in this country by a single firm.

There is no intelligent demand for a reduction in the duty on salt, and the only beneficiaries under such an act would be the British Salt Union and the salt merchants in the West Indies and Mediterranean.

We therefore pray that the honorable Senate of the United States will give this important matter their most careful consideration before sacrificing an industry of most vital importance to the whole country.

GEO. H. SMITH,
SAM'L T. KERR,
EDWARD W. BROWN,
Representing the Salt Industry of New York State.

(Output in 1893, 485,000 tons evaporated salt, 125,000 tons mineral rock salt.)

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to make salt free. I think we ought to have a reasonable duty on salt. I really do not know of anybody who of late has asked to have the duty removed, except the importers. If Senators will take the replies to tariff inquiries found in Bulletin No. 40 they will see that from all the States in which salt is manufactured the universal statement of the salt manufacturers is that the duty ought to be continued. In that bulletin the matter is discussed for 73 pages. If Senators will look at it they will be convinced, I think, that the importers and the manufacturers fought this matter out before the Committee on Ways and Means, and that the importers won the day. As I look at the replies to these inquiries that is just exactly all there is to this matter. The salt manufacturers of the United States united in a memorial which runs through ten or twelve pages of the bulletin. I am not going to read it or ask to have it inserted in the RECORD, but I wish to read the three propositions which they say they will demonstrate and prove. They ask to have the duty retained on salt. They say:

To demonstrate the necessity and the advisability of so doing we propose to herein briefly prove three general facts.

First. That since the establishing of a duty sufficient to enable the American manufacturer of salt to compete successfully with the foreigner prices have dropped to one-fifth of what they were in 1860; that salt is now the cheapest manufactured article we have (10 pounds for 1 cent for common salt), and these low prices will continue as long as domestic competition continues.

Second. That owing to the ballast freight rates enabling the British manufacturer to transport his salt from Liverpool to the United States for less than one-fourth the freight from any domestic works to the coast, the removal of the whole duty on salt must result in the severe crippling of all, and the closing up of the large majority, of the salt works in the Eastern part of the United States.

Third. That the existing duty is not an appreciable tax on anyone, and its removal would not result in the prices to the ordinary consumer being lowered a particle.

There are the three propositions which they set out to prove, and in reading the memorial which has been introduced and printed here as a document, I insist that they most abundantly prove and maintain the truth of those propositions.

Mr. President, another matter struck me; that is, that the salt manufacturers in Louisiana are in favor of a duty on salt. Myles & Co., of New Iberia, La., who have $500,000 capital invested, say:

Either kind of duty will do—

That is, ad valorem or specific—

but a specific or ad valorem duty is most vitally necessary to the salt industries of the United States, because they produce more salt than can be consumed, and free competition from abroad will curtail the market, and it is impossible to find a foreign market for American salt.

The Lone Star Salt Company, of Dallas, Tex., with an invested capital of $200,000, say:

A specific duty equal to the one now collected, say $2.40 per ton, is necessary to place Texas-made salt on a parity with the English article, because ships coming to Galveston from English ports for cotton bring large consignments of salt in sacks as ballast, on which little or no charge is made

Then they give the price of freights from Liverpool or England, and show that they can not compete with the foreign manufacturers; after which they say—and I wish to call attention particularly to this:

We wish to protest against the placing of manufactured salt on the free list. First, because it is already the least burden upon the "breakfast table," possibly, of any article of food; the burden is so light as not to be felt by even the poorest. So far as Texas is concerned, the increase in the cost of manufacture over Northern salt makes it impossible for us to seek a market north of the northern boundary of our State, much less at the halfway point. We are forced to seek a market towards the East, and are confined to a narrow strip of territory on each side of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railway in Louisiana, terminating at the Mississippi River; towards the southeast, in Louisiana, we are able to go halfway to New Orleans, on the line of the New Orleans and Texas Pacific; in our own State, 200 miles west, we strike the sparsely settled praires; towards the south, 200 miles, we go into competition with Liverpool salt, made by English workmen at wages one-half as great as paid by us, put up in bags costing less than our own, and brought to Galveston and New Orleans in ballast, at a cost of 12½ cents per sack, against a rail rate from our works of from 30 to 40 cents per sack to the same points.

Thus, you see, any advantage which is gained by manufacturing in large quantities is denied us. The comparatively recent discovery of salt in Texas and the short time since the establishment of our industry have made it impossible for us to obtain a strong foothold with our product, as against the old established and well known English article, so that competition with it is only possible under the most favorable circumstances and with the present amount of tariff.

Should the Senate vote to place salt on the free list, the result will be to destroy our industry. Interior manufacturers will not suffer, as rail freight rates will to some extent neutralize the reduction in the tariff, but with works so near the seacoast, and with the large number of cotton ships going out of Galveston and New Orleans, and loading English salt as ballast back, the situation as regards our investment is disheartening.

I call attention to the replies of these two manufacturers, one from Louisiana and the other from Texas, as showing that it is not Northern salt industries alone which are to be affected by the bill. If the sugar planters of Louisiana can obtain a duty upon sugar, why can not the salt producers of Louisiana and Texas have the duty retained upon salt? There is no duty on sugar now. The Senate places a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem upon it. There is a duty upon salt. The Senate proposes to remove it. The Louisiana Senators insist that for the sugar industry there must be a duty, whether revenue or protective. Why will they not insist that for the Louisiana salt-maker and the Texas salt-maker the duty shall be retained?

I refer only to these two replies. All the replies in this bulletin are very interesting. I will refer only to the reply of the Empire Dairy Salt Company, of Warsaw, N. Y., showing the wholesale prices:

Year.	Common fine (per barrel).	Dairy and table (per ton).
1884	$0.85	$6.00
1890	.60	5.00
1892	.55	3.50
1894	.52	3.00

That includes, for the barreled salt, the covering, the barrel, which is 28 cents, leaving salt without the covering at 22 to 24 cents a barrel.

Mr. President, salt is cheaper than sand. Astonishing as it may seem, I repeat, barreled salt is cheaper than sand. We have to use in all the cities sand which comes in barrels, and salt can be purchased cheaper than sand. If the industry in this country has succeeded in bringing salt to this low price, so that it is cheaper than sand by the barrel, literally, to use a familiar phrase, cheaper than dirt, why should we do anything which the producers of salt insist will injure or destroy their business?

There has been no demand for the removal of the duty, as I said. I have the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, containing the views of the majority and the minority. I have been looking it over, and while the report dwells much on putting certain articles upon the free list, like wool, iron ore, lumber, and a variety of other articles of which it speaks, it does not mention the fact that the committee have put salt on the free list. It seems to cut no figure in the argument. I can not understand it upon any other theory than the one which I have named, that the importers ask for it; the producers of the United States object to it; the matter seems to have been fought out before the committee, and the importers won.

Mr. President, who is to gain by removing the duty from salt? Nobody. That is perfectly apparent. The poor men, the poor people of the country, who go to purchase their salt at the grocery store will not get one cent benefit from it in a year. That everyone knows. If they could get the entire benefit of the removal of the duty, it would not amount to 4 cents a year. The ordinary family does not consume, I imagine, more than fifty pounds of salt a year. The duty on salt is 8 cents per hundred pounds. If all of it could be given to the purchasers of salt, the family which uses salt would not get 4 cents a year benefit by the removal of the duty, while a family of five persons, if the duty which has been placed upon sugar is to be added to the cost of sugar, will be charged about $6.50 by reason of the duty. What compensation is it to that family to take the duty off salt? If they could get the entire benefit of the taking off of the duty, they might possibly get 4 cents in a year.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Connecticut has been speaking about the cheapness of salt, and comparing it with sand. We are putting salt on board cars in Kansas at $1.89 a ton for the salt alone; that is, the salt exclusive of the casks in which the salt is placed. The barrel, including salt, is put upon the car at 57 cents, and the cask amounts to 30 cents. Deduct the 30 from 57, and you have 27 cents. There are 280 pounds in a barrel. Multiply it by 7, and you have $1.89 a ton as the cost of the salt alone put on the cars.

Mr. PLATT. That reënforces what I was saying, that salt is practically as cheap as dirt.

But there is another feature to which I wish to allude, and then I shall take my seat. This is purely a revenue duty. The salt which we imported last year paid a revenue of something like $400,000. I have not the exact figures before me, but that is near enough for the purposes of the argument. I have alluded over and over again to the strange desire of those who are in charge of the fashioning of the bill to get rid of our revenue. If there is any earthly reason why we should get rid of our revenue in the matter of salt, why we should relinquish the $400,000 which went into the Treasury from importations of salt last year, I am unable to discover it. I wish to confess my astonishment over and over again that the revenue derived from the duties on these articles, which, from the Democratic standpoint at least, are purely revenue duties, should be abandoned. I can understand the reason why those who are fashioning the bill should resort to an income tax and an additional tax on whisky or spirits.

That is done in order that we may not raise money from customs where the customs duties would be protective. That is the object of the income tax; that is the object of the additional tax upon spirits. It is because the party in power will not by protective duties raise the money which they ought to raise for the expenses of the Government. But I do not see exactly how that motive should lead to the abandonment of the revenue that comes to us from these articles which from the Democratic standpoint have a purely revenue duty upon them. Perhaps the reason is the same. Throw away what they call purely revenue duties, put the tax on incomes, put the additional tax on whisky, and then there will be so much less money to raise by incidentally protective duties upon our manufactured articles.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] will be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, wherever there is an opportunity for capital and enterprise you are sure to find some men from New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania in the western parts of our great empire. I have respected constituents who are somewhat interested in the production of salt, and I will put into the RECORD a few observations and interesting facts.

Prior to 1857 the salt manufacture in the United States was almost wholly confined to the Onondaga salt springs in the State of New York and to the States of Virginia and Ohio. Since that time, beginning with the discovery and use of the wells at Saginaw, Mich., salt has been found either in wells or rocks over most of the States and Territories of the Union, notably over almost the entire surface of Western New York, the whole peninsula of Michigan, the northern part of Ohio, Southwestern Louisiana, Kansas, Nebraska, California, Utah, the province of Ontario, Canada on Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair, and St. Clair River. So the production of salt has become very general.

The competition between the makers, with the assistance of a very small duty on foreign salt, has brought the price so low in this country that many of our establishments have given up the business, and many more would do so if this duty shall be removed, especially those within easy reach of tide water, where the foreign competition would rush in. Ultimately I think it is quite probable, as the writers of a brief memorial before me prophesy, there will be an increase in the price of common salt by reason of foreign competition and a halt in domestic production.

Now, where does the salt come from that would compete with us? In the main from England, the Mediterranean, and the West Indies, sent from those countries chiefly as ballast for vessels seeking cargoes here. That is not an unusual experience. Foreigners will put down granite or sandstone in the harbor of New York from across the Atlantic cheaper than we can send it from the Connecticut River or the Sound shore to New York, and while we pay freight on it abroad the ship is glad to get it, for it is better than the ordinary ballast, which they would be obliged to carry from the New York wharf and dump in some appointed place, whereas when salt or granite serves as ballast the consignees are glad to take it at the wharf.

The English salt-maker works for from 50 to 60 per cent of the wages received by our salt-makers, and he will have his salt carried 3,000 miles for nothing. It seems ridiculous at first thought that we should have successful competitors 3,000 miles away in so cheap an article and so heavy in proportion to the money involved, but it is a fact.

Here is another extremely interesting fact in connection with this matter when considered in the light of the claim that Great Britain rejects protection, and is a successful, practical example of the free-trade doctrine. England to-day actually forbids the manufacture of salt in her East India empire, where there are near 300,000,000 people, and salt is absolutely essential to the enjoyment of their fish and rice diet. The exemplar of free trade forbids the manufacture of salt in the East India empire, which has a very extensive seacoast, as school boys know, and numerous islands, and a great number of lagoons well adapted for the manufacture of sea salt, and for rock salt in inexhaustible quantities. She excludes peremptorily the use of any salt except that made in her empire and exported in English vessels from England or made in her East India empire for the Crown, and she levies a tax on both kinds of salt second only to the land tax.

I can not imagine a more cruel and senseless form of oppressive taxation than Great Britain is imposing there on a people who work for next to nothing, struggle desperately for a livelihood, and experience an occasional famine. If there is anybody who thinks England is especially the type of political wisdom, I commend to him this attempt of England to protect her own industries in one section of the empire by the cruel torture of her people in another section.

The memorialists whose pamphlet I hold in my hand here are very reasonable men I think. They say they would not be understood as advocating a high protective tariff, or even a tariff for protection rather than for revenue. They are of different political parties. They assume that there must be tariffs at least for revenue; that in any revision of them some discrimination will be found expedient in order to the incidental protection of domestic industries; they contend that domestic salt presents a claim for favorable consideration; and they contend for a tariff because the imported article competes most injuriously with the manufacture of our own people.

I will read two of their answers to the inquiries sent out by the Finance Committee. These come from the Ohio and West Virginia Salt Association. I presume some of my constituents have stock in the association. Inquiry 18:

What component materials of your manufacture are, to you, raw materials?

Answer. Our cost is composed of labor almost entirely. No allowance is made for the salt in the earth or for the coal before it comes from the mines.

So, as near as one can calculate it, it is mathematically true that the whole of it is labor. They proceed:

The mining of the coal used is about 17 cents for a barrel of salt; the furnace labor, repairs, and expense, about 20 cents; the cooperage manufactured, about 22 cents (no allowance is made for value of timber standing uncut); making total actual cost in labor, 59 cents per barrel of 280 pounds net (and the barrel is worth 25 cents of the 59).

Inquiry 23:

How do you propose to meet any reduction of duty on the goods you manufacture?

Answer. Do not know how to meet any lower price. Wages already low. Can not be further materially reduced without scandalizing humanity and causing riots.

That, Mr. President, is true not alone of the salt industry. There are features in the bill which will exemplify this truth in due time. The common American suffers nothing from this duty. It is not perceived. It simply resembles those little bits of iron around a steam engine that serve to regulate the labor of the enormous engine itself. It is a regulator, a breakwater, a temporary check against unfair competition.

We have had no finer example of a just protection than salt furnishes, unless it be the example given yesterday when the common sense, and I might say, the humanity of the Senate refused to leave quicksilver open to an unreasonable domination from outside. Of course, beyond the comparatively trifling interest of a few in some of the Western salt-producing works, I have no personal interest in the matter, but I believe that a small duty of 6 or 8 cents a hundred pounds would be fairly a part of the general system of reasonable governmental oversight, in which, without being properly charged with undue paternalism, we may take a little care that our citizens shall not be struck under the belt. To say the least, it would afford a very pretty contrast with the practice of free-trade Great Britain in the case of British India.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not know that any citizen of Iowa is interested in the production of salt, nor have we salt mines in that State. Therefore it may be said that so far as our interests are concerned, they are the interests of consumers of salt.

I think the removal of the duty from salt is a kind of tradition which comes down from the ancient period when a struggle was made to repeal the salt duty, and it has been a part of the Democratic creed for a great many years. I do not remember a single instance where there has been a discussion on the tariff question that we have not been appealed to in one form or another to repeal the salt duty.

Bulletin No. 40 contains some valuable information in regard to this question. Among other things, it discloses that there has been an increase since 1883 of the production of salt equal to 50 per cent, and that the 9,000,000 barrels or 10,000,000 barrels, in round numbers, produced in 1892, cost about the same amount of money to the consumer that the 6,000,000 barrels did which were produced in 1883; showing that by this increased production and this development of the salt industry there has been a constant diminution of the price.

In the State in which I live we are fortunate as to the production and development of the salt industry in Kansas, and it has been of great value to the people of Iowa as giving us another local competitor in the production of salt for our market. Kansas salt enters into the consumption in Iowa quite largely. We also have the competition of the Michigan salt, which is a great production.

We have also the competition in a large degree of the salt manufactured in Western New York. So, whatever may become of this duty, whether salt is placed upon the free list or not, it is not probable that any foreign salt will ever reach the State of Iowa unless it shall come to New Orleans by means of cheap transportation, and thence up the Mississippi River. I doubt, however, whether much will come in that way. We, therefore, are interested in this local competition in the production of salt.

I was greatly impressed by what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] just told us, that if there is not a duty such at least as is proposed upon salt, the effect will be practically to drive out the production of salt in Kansas, except for a little local circle where the competition as to transportation will not interfere with it. I think that would be a misfortune. Here is an area in Kansas, a stratum of 350 feet in thickness, 30 miles in width, and from 100 or 150 to 200 miles in length, where salt can be produced, as shown by the Senator from Kansas, at 27 cents per 280 pounds. That salt has a radiation of consumption of 400 or 500 miles under existing conditions; but if salt shall come free into the ports of New Orleans and Galveston, that radius will be greatly diminished, and the production diminished correspondingly.

Why is it that we should propose here to take off this entire duty? The Senator from Kansas proposes a uniform duty of 5 cents per 100 pounds, which is a reduction on the average of one-half of the existing duty. Are we to take no account of the developments in our own country as to this article of essential consumption? for it is necessary in the preservation of meats, it is used largely in our chemical industries, and we have inexhaustible resources for its production.

I am surprised somewhat that I hear no voice from the States which are very largely interested in this production.

West Virginia has been interested more or less in the production of salt for a great many years. We hear nothing about it on this floor. The State of Louisiana has immense resources for the production of salt. Why is it that the Senators from that State have said nothing respecting the repeal of the duty, when the people who are engaged in its production, as shown by these bulletins and pamphlets, declare that their industry will be destroyed if salt is placed upon the free list, because they will come in competition wholly with salt produced in England? Is it because this salt industry, as compared with other industries, is a small one that, whilst we are giving protection and encouragement to the great industries of our country, we are to stand by here and let these small industries be stricken down in these States? For myself I do not understand why it is so.

As consumers of salt in one of the interior States in this Union far from the seaboard, we, in Iowa, are interested, and greatly interested, in the domestic competition in this production; and we are told that by the striking down of the duty the competition will be greatly arrested, if not in some respects destroyed. So I shall vote cheerfully for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, and I trust it will receive the support of those interior States and of the States which are border States, as relate to the ocean, which are interested with us in maintaining this industry in our own country as against England.

Why should we now be especially interested in allowing English salt to come in here without interference or competition? Under this amendment, as it stands, practically nothing but English salt will come in. The amendment proposed by the committee yesterday excludes everything but salt from Great Britain itself; it excludes the salt of Mexico; it excludes the salt of Spain; it excludes the salt of the Dominion of Canada. So this provision, as it stands now, is a mere gratuity to the English Government, which imposes upon its own colonies a prohibition as to salt, in order that she may find a market in India for her own product. Therefore, upon no ground can I find a reason for placing salt upon the free list at this moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. LODGE and Mr. PEFFER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], but the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] is not here, and I will transfer for the present my pair with the Senator from Iowa to the Senator from Kansas, and vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. PATTON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If it be agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi I suggest that we transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. GEORGE. That is agreeable to me. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. It has been suggested to me to transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], so that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Camden,	Hill,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Patton,	Wilson,
Coke,	McMillan,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

609. Sauerkraut.
610. Sausage skins.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out paragraph 610.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas that amendment of the committee is withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

611. Seeds: anise, canary, caraway, cardamom, coriander, cotton, croton, cummin, fennel, fenugreek, hemp, hoarhound, mustard, rape, St. John's bread or bene, sugar beet, mangel-wurzel, sorghum or sugar cane for seed, and all flower and grass seeds; bulbs and bulbous roots, not edible, all the foregoing not specially provided for in this act.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend paragraph 611 by striking out, after the first word "Seeds," the words "anise, canary, caraway, cardamom, coriander, cotton, croton, cummin fennel, fenugreek, hemp, hoarhound, mustard, rape, St. John's bread or bene, sugar-beet, mangel wurzel, sorghum or sugar cane for seed, and all flower or grass seeds."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment to that paragraph is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "and grass," before the word "seeds," in line 4, on page 113.

I do not think that the Senator from Arkansas desires to make clover and herdsgrass seed free. The seed imported would not be as good as those we raise here at home, and these are articles of considerable profit to the farmers to raise for sale. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, before the word "seeds," it is proposed to strike out "and grass;" so as to read "and all flower seeds."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that my amendment is the provision of the present law, and it has been in the law constantly. This makes no change in the law, and I can see no reason for any change being made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

612. Selep, or saloup.
613. Shells of all kinds, not cut, ground, or otherwise manufactured.
614. Shotgun barrels, forged, rough bored.
615. Shrimps, and other shellfish.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend paragraph 615 by adding, after the word "shellfish," the words "canned or otherwise."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

616. Silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph in line 14, on page 113, after the word "cocoon," to insert "but not doubled, twisted, nor advanced in manufacture in any way;" so as to make the paragraph read:

616. Silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not doubled, twisted, nor advanced in manufacture in any way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

617. Silk cocoons and silk waste.
618. Silk worm's eggs.
619. Skeletons and other preparations of anatomy.
620. Snails.
621. Soda, nitrate of, or cubic nitrate, and chlorate of.
622. Sulphate of soda, or salt cake, or niter cake.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that paragraph 622 may be passed over for the present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

623. Sodium.
624. Sparterre, suitable for making or ornamenting hats.
625. Specimens of natural history, botany, and mineralogy, when imported for cabinets or as objects of science, and not for sale.

Spices:

626. Cassia, cassia vera, and cassia buds, unground.
627. Cinnamon, and chips of, unground.
628. Cloves and clove stems, unground.
629. Ginger-root, unground and not preserved or candied.
630. Mace.
631. Nutmegs.
632. Pepper, black or white, unground.
633. Pimento, unground.
634. Seeds of all kinds not specially provided for in this act.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out paragraph 634.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

635. Spunk.
636. Spurs and stilts used in the manufacture of earthen, porcelain, and stone ware.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as a new paragraph the following:

636½. Stamps: Foreign postage and revenue stamps, canceled or uncanceled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

637. Straw.
638. Stone and sand: Burr stone in blocks, rough or manufactured, or bound up into millstones; cliff stone, unmanufactured; freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, and other building or monumental stone, except marble, unmanufactured or undressed, not specially provided for in this act; pumice stone, rotten stone, and sand, crude or manufactured.

Mr. HALE. In paragraph 638, in line 20, I move to strike out the words following the word "unmanufactured," down to and including the word "act," in line 22, in order to conform to what the Senate did upon the granite schedule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The exemption is "not otherwise specially provided for in this act." It seems to me that that would save it, so that there would be no difficulty.

Mr. FRYE. It is all specially provided for.

Mr. HALE. When we came to granite, we put granite, free stone, and all the articles enumerated in the amendment I have offered, on the dutiable list, and I simply ask to strike this out to conform to that action.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 638, line 20, after the word "unmanufactured," it is proposed to strike out "freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, and other building or monumental stone, except marble, unmanufactured or undressed, not specially provided for in this act;" so as to make the paragraph read:

638. Stone and sand: Burr stone in blocks, rough or manufactured, or bound up into millstones; cliff stone, unmanufactured pumice stone, rotten stone, and sand, crude or manufactured.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

639. Storax, or styrax.
640. Strontia, oxide of, and protoxide of strontian, and strontianite, or mineral carbonate of strontia.
641. Sugars all: All tank bottoms, all sugar drainings and sugar sweepings, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, and concrete and concentrated molasses, and molasses.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out paragraph 641.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I am anxious to know who in the Senate is in favor of free sugar and who is not.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the words proposed to be stricken out may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out the following paragraph:

641. Sugars all: All tank bottoms, all sugar drainings and sugar sweepings, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, and concrete and concentrated molasses, and molasses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called on the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and make this announcement for the day.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is not present. Believing that, if present, he would vote as I do, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], so as to enable the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and myself to vote.

Mr. CULLOM. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], that, if agreeable to him, we transfer our pairs.

Mr. GEORGE. That is satisfactory to me, and I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were here I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon, who is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], I being paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], that we transfer our pairs so that the Senator from Oregon and I can vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is satisfactory to me, and I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Roach,
Bate,	George,	McPherson,	Smith,
Berry,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Harris,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Call,	Hunton,	Pasco,	White.
Camden,	Irby,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Quay,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Power,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Proctor,
Carey,	Hale,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Teller.
Cullom,	Higgins,	Perkins,
Dubois,	Hoar,	Platt,

NOT VOTING—30.

Blanchard,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gray,	Martin,	Turpie,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Vilas,
Cameron,	Hill,	Morgan,	Washburn.
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Patton,	Wilson,
Coke,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Squire,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to say that the vote which I have just now cast is not to be taken as an index of the way I may vote when we have acted on all the schedules when the bill comes out of Committee of the Whole and we are brought to a final vote upon the sugar question.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say in connection with the vote which has just been taken upon the subject of sugar, paragraph 641, that I have voted thus far with the committee on the subject of sugar and on many other things for the purpose of getting the bill as speedily as possible out of Committee of the Whole and into the Senate, where it can be finally shaped and speedily put upon its passage. My vote upon the question just taken is no indication whatever of what my vote will be upon the final passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

642. Sulphur, refined, lac or precipitated, and sulphur or brimstone, crude, in bulk, sulphur ore, as pyrites, or sulphuret of iron in its natural state, containing in excess of 25 per cent of sulphur, and sulphur not otherwise provided for.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move, in line 7, after the word "sulphur," to strike out the word "refined."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

643. Sulphuric acid.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to add the proviso printed in small type, leaving out the word "daily" after "levied" in line 14.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "acid," in line 12, page 115, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That upon sulphuric acid imported from any country which imposes a duty upon sulphuric acid exported from the United States, there shall be levied and collected the rate of duty existing prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he use the same language in the thirteenth line that is used in the salt proviso.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the same words going in there that were used in the salt paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "country," in line 13, insert "whether independent or a dependency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

644. Sweepings of silver and gold.
645. Tallow and wool grease, including that known commercially as degras or brown wool grease.
646. Tapicoa, cassava or cassada.
647. Tar and pitch of wood, and pitch of coal tar.
648. Tea and tea plants.
649. Teazles.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the paragraph 649 be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

650. Teeth, natural or unmanufactured.
651. Terra alba.
652. Terra japonica.
653. Tin ore, cassiterite or black oxide of tin, and tin in bars, blocks, pigs, or grain or granulated.
654. Tinsel wire, lame, or lahn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move at the end of paragraph 654, after the word "lahn," to strike out the period and insert, "and bullions and metal threads of gold, silver, and other metals."

Mr. PLATT. It can not be possible that the Senator from Arkansas should desire to do that. It is a manufacture of my State which, as I remember, has been seriously affected by the duty which has already been placed upon those articles in the bill. I wish the Senator would withhold the amendment for a little time until I can have an opportunity to explain the matter to him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the amendment if there is objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

655. Tobacco stems.
656. Tonquin, tonqua, or tonka beans.
657. Tripoli.
658. Turmeric.
659. Turpentine, Venice.
660. Turpentine, spirits of.
661. Turtles.
662. Types, old, and fit only to be remanufactured.
663. Uranium, oxide and salts of.
664. Vaccine virus.
665. Valonia.
666. Verdigris, or subacetate of copper.
667. Wafers, unmedicated.
668. Wax, vegetable or mineral.
669. Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) of persons arriving in the United States, not residents thereof, but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale.
670. Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) in actual use of residents of the United States returning thereto from foreign countries, not exceeding $250 in value and not intended for use of other persons nor for sale: Provided, however, That all the wearing apparel and other personal effects of such persons so returning as may have been by them taken out of the United States to foreign countries, and which have not been advanced in value nor improved in condition by any process of labor or manufacture in such countries, shall be admitted free of duty without regard to their value, upon their identity being established under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraphs 669 and 670 and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraphs 669 and 670 and insert:

669. Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) of persons arriving in the United States, but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale: Provided, however, That all wearing apparel and other personal effects of residents returning from other countries as may have been by them taken out of the United States to foreign countries, and which have not been advanced in value nor improved in condition by any process of labor or manufacture in such countries, shall be admitted free of duty without regard to their value, upon their identity being established under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator proposes to strike out the limitation of $250. What is the significance of that proviso?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is practically the present law. The two paragraphs as found in the bill make a difference between citizens of the United States and foreign persons. My amendment simply treats all persons alike, whether residents of the United States or foreigners coming into the country.

Mr. HOAR. That I understand, but the difference between the foreigner and the American, under the bill as it stands, is that the foreigner's wearing apparel and personal effects will come in without limit as to value, but the citizen of the United States has a limit in value not exceeding $250. That is stricken out by the amendment so that it is proposed to have the wearing apparel of all persons, if it be strictly wearing apparel, come in without limit as to value.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, and the proviso——

Mr. HOAR. Let me complete my statement, because it will go into the RECORD and I should like to have it state the point fully for the comprehension of anyone who may read it. The proviso which the Senator retains goes on to provide that all wearing apparel not advanced or improved shall be admitted free of duty without regard to value, when it is provided that all shall come in without regard to value. It seems to me that the proviso should not be included in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. VEST. I do not exactly catch the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts. The meaning of the amendment as it stands now is simply to do away with the $250 limit which is found in the House provision.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator before he proceeds will allow the proviso which is included in the amendment to be read again he will see it is inappropriate. Let the Secretary read it.

Mr. VEST. The meaning of the proviso is simply to retain that portion of the House provision which says that persons visiting foreign countries can bring back their wearing apparel without paying duty, provided it has not been improved or changed while abroad. That is the provision of the bill as passed by the other House.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator from Arkansas has previously proposed in his amendment to have it come in without limitation as to value.

Mr. HALE. The proviso applies to another class of goods.

Mr. VEST. All we propose to take off is the limitation as to value. Does the Senator want to strike out the provision, so that a person going from this country abroad can have his clothes altered or improved and bring them back free of duty without regard to the increased value?

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Massachusetts perhaps did not observe that the proviso applies to another class of articles entirely from the others. The proviso applies to articles taken by our citizens abroad. The other provision applies simply to clothing that may be purchased abroad.

Mr. HOAR. It is proposed, unless I misunderstood it, to make it read:

Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) of persons arriving in the United States.

The words "not residents thereof" it is proposed to strike out, so that it is to apply to Americans returning as well as to foreign persons coming in from abroad. All wearing apparel and other personal effects, not merchandise, it is provided shall come in free, and then we have the provision:

But this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale.

Then it goes on and provides that wearing apparel and other personal effects of such persons as have been taken out of the United States and not advanced in value or improved in condition shall be admitted free of duty upon establishing identity, etc. You have admitted that free of duty without regard to limit under the previous provision, unless I misunderstand it, because it is wearing apparel and other personal effects which have been admitted. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, as this is a very important matter, affecting the convenience of a large and rapidly growing number of travelers, that his amendment be printed so that we can see it in print, and go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VEST. It is well enough to understand each other. Paragraph 669 of the bill as it comes to the Senate provides that—

Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) or persons arriving in the United States, not residents thereof, but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale.

That applies exclusively to foreigners who have never been in this country.

Mr. HOAR. Not as the Senator from Arkansas moves to amend the paragraph, because he strikes out the words "not residents thereof."

Mr. VEST. That is included in the other provision. Let the Secretary read the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraphs 669 and 670 and insert:

669. Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) of persons arriving in the United States, but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale: Provided, however, That all wearing apparel and other personal effects of residents returning from other countries as may have been by them taken out of the United States to foreign countries, and which have not been advanced in value nor improved in condition by any process of labor or manufacture in such countries, shall be admitted free of duty without regard to their value, upon their identity being established under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. HOAR. My criticism is that everything provided for in the proviso is admitted free in the preceding proposition as the Senator from Arkansas has moved it.

Mr. VEST. Then strike out the proviso. It can be fixed afterwards in conference. To save debate, let it go out.

Mr. HOAR. If that is done we can call it up again if there is any mistake about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the paragraph be read as it will stand without the proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as it now stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

669. Wearing apparel and other personal effects (not merchandise) of persons arriving in the United States, but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort and convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale.

Mr. HOAR. That is all we need.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

671. Whalebone, unmanufactured.

Mr. PEFFER. Is it understood that paragraph 670 is to be passed over.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The motion was carried to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is stricken out.

Mr. PEFFER. I did not know that was done. I wanted to move to amend it, but if it has been stricken out of course it can not be amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That pargraph is stricken out. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to reserve the privilege for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to move to insert a paragraph to be numbered 671½. He is at present out of the Chamber but has an amendment prepared to come in at this point, and will offer it when he comes in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Wood:

672. Logs, and round unmanufactured timber not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

673. Firewood, handle bolts, heading bolts, stave bolts, and shingle bolts, hop poles, fence posts, railroad ties, ship timber, and ship planking, not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. HALE. In order to save two readings, I will now move to strike out paragraph 674 and the paragraphs following to paragraph 683, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

Mr. HALE. Then the paragraph can be read once, and we can save two readings.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraphs 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, and 683.

The paragraphs are as follows:

674. Timber, hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharves.
675. Timber, squared or sided.
676. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber.
677. Pine clapboards.
678. Spruce clapboards.
679. Hubs for wheels, posts, last blocks, wagon blocks, oar blocks, gun blocks, heading, and all like blocks or sticks, rough hewn or sawed only.
680. Laths.
681. Pickets and palings.
682. Shingles.
683. Staves of wood of all kinds, wood manufactured: Provided, That any of the articles mentioned in paragraphs 672 to 683, inclusive, when imported from any country which lays an export duty on the same or any of them, shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HALE. Since the Senate considered the first part of the lumber schedule it has put upon the dutiable list, different from the action of the other House, the articles of sugar, iron ore, and coal, and largely advanced the rate upon lead. I hope on reflection the Senate will conclude to strike the great product of lumber from the free list. That is the object of my amendment, and I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, on which he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], who is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], that we transfer our pairs.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] will stand paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I announce for the day my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] having been transferred to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] that we transfer pairs, so that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be paired with my colleague [Mr. MORGAN], and he and I can vote.

Mr. QUAY. That is agreeable. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By agreement I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and myself will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted.

Mr. GIBSON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON].

Mr. McLAURIN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I announce for the day to save time, and I shall not repeat it any more, my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. GORDON (after having voted in the negative). Since I transferred my pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] that Senator has come into the Chamber and voted. I will therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Morrill,	Quay,
Allison,	Hale,	Perkins,	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert as paragraph 671½, after the word "wood," in line 14, page 117, the following:

Lumber of any sort, planed or finished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the proper place for his amendment would be as paragraph 676½ instead of the place he proposes. It can be offered at that point just as well.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well, let it come in at that place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after paragraph 676:

676½. Lumber of any sort, planed or finished.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is a very sweeping and comprehensive one. I do not know what is lumber planed and finished. I never have heard any such phrase used as applied to lumber. I do not know whether, when finished, it means made up into houses or furniture or what. I can understand what boards planed on one side or on both sides and tongued and grooved mean; but I do not understand what finished lumber is. I should think such a provision would let in furniture and everything else that can be manufactured from wood.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to state that this is the identical language used in paragraph 178. The language used there is, "lumber of any sort, planed or finished." I simply transfer the language from that place to page 117 as paragraph 676½.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will insert the word "unmanufactured" after "lumber" it would cover it. "Lumber, unmanufactured," would convey his idea.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; I do not want to insert that word.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then you extend the provision to doors and windows.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 178 the words which follow the word "finished" modify and qualify the paragraph; but the Senator from Nebraska proposes to leave out these words, and his amendment would allow all kinds of finished lumber, I think—lumber made up into wagons, certainly into doors, and everything of that sort—to come in free of duty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? Let it read, instead of "lumber of any sort, planed or finished," "each side of the board so planed or finished." It means, clearly, each side of the plank so planed or finished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the vote is taken I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to paragraph 684, page 118, wherein there is a disposition of the fine woods known as cedar, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, etc., which are to be admitted free when unmanufactured. The lumber made from those woods is very valuable, and if all this class of lumber is to come into the United States free when finished, I suggest that it will be a great boon to a great many people who are now manufacturing very expensive furniture.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I think his suggestion is fair, and I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to adding the words "except as otherwise provided in this act."

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa would not call the woods that are mentioned in paragraph 684 lumber?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not; but these woods are carefully described in paragraph 684, showing that it is not intended that this class of lumber shall come in, when finished, free of duty. This lumber costs $150 and as high as $200 per thousand feet without being either planed or tongued or grooved. If it is to be brought in free not only planed, tongued, and grooved, but finished—that is, ready for the manufacture of furniture, or ready, for example, for the Pullman Car Company or the Wagner Car Company, or the fine cars that are now made of these beautiful woods—it seems to me it will greatly disturb a very valuable industry in our country which ought to be certainly cared for, and which it is not contemplated, I think, in any suggestion the Senator has made, shall be disturbed.

Mr. ALLEN. With the consent of the Senate I will withdraw my amendment and ask to have the words "rough or dressed" added to paragraph 676, so that that paragraph will read:

Sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed.

I will present my amendment in that shape.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HALE. We could not hear on this side what the Senator now proposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "lumber" in paragraph 676, page 117, add "rough or dressed;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not rise with any hope of defeating this amendment. The Senator from Nebraska some fifteen or twenty minutes ago, when voting against free sugar, took occasion to say that his final vote upon the bill had not then been determined in his own mind. Now he wishes more free lumber, and he will get it, of course, because that is the understanding. That is the reason why he is to vote in favor of the bill. I do not expect to prevent the transaction which is now going on, but I do have the curiosity to know whether the bargain is yet complete. I do desire to know whether the transaction may be now considered as closed, and whether the Senator from Nebraska has finally concluded to vote for the bill; or whether we shall see him rise in his seat again and notify the other side of the Chamber that he has not yet concluded what his final vote will be, and come in and move to put something else not a product of the State of Nebraska upon the free list and get that as a consideration for the vote which he is to give.

We are anxious—I am certainly anxious—to know when the Senator from Nebraska will be entirely foreclosed upon by the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to say in as polite language as I can to the Senator from New Hampshire that his statement or insinuation that there is any bargain between any person on this side of the Chamber or in the Chamber at all and myself is entirely untrue, and I am inclined to think that the Senator from New Hampshire knew it was untrue at the time he stated it. I have made no bargain. I propose to make no bargain. I propose to vote as I see fit upon this measure and upon every other measure that comes before the Senate. If when the pending bill is finally finished it is in my judgment a better measure than the law now in force I shall vote for it. If it is not, I shall vote against it. In that respect I desire to assure the Senator from New Hampshire that I am a free lance.

I desire to state in this connection that it is none of the Senator's business how I propose to vote upon this or upon any other measure. I am not here to represent his views upon any question. I am sent here to oppose his views upon a majority of the questions that come before this body.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska that it is my business how he votes, and that it is entirely competent for me to comment upon his vote or upon the vote of any other Senator in this Chamber, just as my own conduct and my own vote are open to be commented upon by any Senator.

The Senator says that he has had no understanding. Mr. President, what has taken place upon this floor this morning can not be mistaken by Senators and will not be mistaken by the country. The Senator rose and gave notice that he did not know how he should finally vote upon the bill. He disappears from the Chamber for fifteen minutes and comes in and moves an amendment for the destruction of the lumber industry of this country, and he is about to receive it from the hands of his Democratic associates. I propose to make it my business to call to the attention of the Senate and the country the action of the Senator from Nebraska, who comes here, as he claims, not as a Democrat, not as a Republican, but who is making himself a Democrat in substantially every vote he gives, and who is destroying an important industry of New England by his votes and his bargains with the other side of the Chamber.

If the Senator does not like that he may make the most of it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Nebraska does not represent the feeling of the other side upon this question. If there is anything in his amendment which proposes to add to the paragraph the words "dressed or undressed," it must refer to lumber that is planed or is worked upon by labor and machinery out of the rough boards. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska does not carry the force of a committee amendment. No Senator is bound to vote for the amendment upon the other side of the Chamber. In fact, the majority of the committee put on the dutiable list, in paragraph 178, "lumber of any sort, planed or finished, for each side so planed or finished, 50 cents per thousand feet, board measure; and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, $1 per thousand feet, board measure; and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per thousand feet, board measure; and in estimating board measure under this schedule no deduction shall be made on board measure on account of planing, tonguing, and grooving," thereby recognizing this advanced condition of lumber as being properly a subject for duty.

That provision was stricken out by the Senate and has been standing open for further consideration. I hope that instead of voting in the bill the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, who wants to strike at every form of manufacture of lumber no matter how advanced, the Senate will vote it out and leave this subject for the further consideration of the committee itself, which, before the bill gets into the Senate, can consider this proposition of planed lumber. Therefore, I hope that the Senator's amendment, as it does not come with the force of a committee amendment, will not be sustained upon either side.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it seems to me that this proposed amendment, while perhaps not so great in amount, is one of the most objectionable features which it has been proposed to introduce into the bill. It may furnish the Senator from Nebraska a text to talk about to his constituents, but it will not save them one dollar in money. The charge for dressing lumber is precisely the same in Canada that it is in the United States. The amendment would merely transfer the labor to Canadian mechanics instead of having it done at our own mills. It will not save the American consumer one dollar in money. Free rough lumber may do so; but to make the manufactured lumber free does not, as I said, save one cent in the charge, which, as everybody familiar with the interest knows, is precisely the same in Canada that it is in the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the object of the Senator from Nebraska in moving the amendment is to add planed, tongued, and grooved lumber to the free list, and that is his only object, I understand. It is what I presume he intends to cover by the amendment. I ask the Senator if that is true. If it is, I suggest to him that in paragraph 676 he could add after the word "sawed" the words "planed, or tongued and grooved." There are some other suggestions in regard to the paragraph which I intend to make later on; but if the Senator means to cover the articles which I have mentioned and no others, as I understand is his purpose, it can be accomplished by putting into the paragraph the words "planed, or tongued or grooved" in addition to "sawed," so that there would be a limitation upon the provision placing lumber on the free list.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I remember the old adage, "Beware of the Greeks when bearing gifts." If I thought the Senator from Rhode Island intended to benefit the prairie States——

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not for the amendment, but I am trying to find out what the Senator from Nebraska wants to accomplish; and I am trying to suggest to him some method of accomplishing that purpose and not accomplishing a great deal more.

Mr. ALLEN. If I thought the Senator from Rhode Island had the faintest consideration for the rights of the people of the prairie States, who are compelled to purchase lumber to construct homes with, I would listen with a great deal more patience to his suggestions than I do now. I certainly think that the great grain-producing States of the Union whose citizens have no timber of their own, and who are compelled to purchase their building material from the States which produce lumber, ought to have some consideration at the hands of the Senate.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] says that the consumer of lumber will get no benefit from this amendment; that taking off the tax will not result in any benefit to him. If that be true, and a duty does not protect, I can not understand why the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from New Hampshire should be so persistent in insisting that a tariff shall be placed upon lumber for protective purposes. If free lumber will not afford the consumer some advantage, then certainly taxed lumber will not afford any advantage to the manufacturer of lumber.

The Senator from New Hampshire, who has been conspicuous in this debate all the way through, and probably deservedly so, who seems to want everything in New England protected, from a mustard seed to a pine tree, and is not willing to make any concessions to any other portion of the country, carries this debate, in my judgment, a little too far, especially a little too far for a proper consideration of the truth, when he insinuates that there is any bargain between the members of the Finance Committee in charge of the bill and myself or any other representative of the Populist party in this Chamber. I know of nothing to be gained by a man performing the rôle of the baboon upon matters of this kind and putting himself in the attitude of accusing every person who fails to agree with him with some corrupt purpose or corrupt practice.

It may be funny to him. He may enjoy it. It may get into the newspapers, and people may think he is a remarkably smart man in consequence of it. It may result in his benefit in a great many ways. It may add to his campaign stock in the State from which he comes. But nevertheless, Mr. President, it is a low insinuation, an untruthful insinuation, and an insinuation that no man actuated by a high and lofty purpose would make. And I believe the Senator who made the charge knew it was a falsehood.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Nebraska answer a question? Does he understand that the effect of his amendment, if adopted, would be to do more than admit free into this country lumber that is planed and grooved?

Mr. ALLEN. Such lumber as we ordinarily use in the construction of our houses, barns, and fences. That is the kind of lumber I am looking at.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, after this personal colloquy, which I was very sorry to hear, I wish to call the attention of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to one point. If they are looking for revenue, it has been a very unhappy hour to the Government of the United States, owing to the amendments which have been made to the existing law in the wood schedule. You have already surrendered—I have added up the figures—$1,041,777 of revenue, and I believe without the slightest benefit to any citizen of the United States, and with no benefit to anyone except the dealers in lumber who live on our northern border or the fewer number of persons who bring wood of various kinds to us from the South.

If the amendment first proposed by the Senator from Nebraska had been adopted I do not know what would have been the result. No one can tell the construction which would have been put upon the language. But without it, the other side of the Chamber have surrendered more than a million dollars of revenue without any beneficial effect to any human being, because the immediate effect of this repeal of revenue is to advance the the price of the lumber which comes into competition with our own, and it may be said as a rule that the advance is always made by the importer so as to meet the demand in the American market. It is true that we can by building up industries in our own country reduce the price of foreign articles, but we can never reduce the price of foreign articles by repealing a revenue. The price is always advanced to meet the demand in the home market.

We have already surrendered a million dollars of revenue this morning. I tell Senators on the other side that if they do not keep a more careful account than I fear they are doing as to the effect of these various amendments upon the revenue features of the bill, they will find at the end of the controversy that there will be a deficiency in the revenue from imported goods far below what has been estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury or by these gentlemen themselves. The propositions made already by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] have lost us half a million dollars of revenue without any benefit to our people, and taking the whole classes together there has been a loss of over a million dollars of revenue, which is no small matter.

I fear the effect of the action on the bill as we go along with it is constantly to reduce the revenues of the Government. Although the Republican party is not in power and I am not to be considered a fair custodian or guardian of the present Administration, after all they are the agents of the people of the United States, and the evil results of what they do will fall upon the people of the United States. Therefore we on this side are bound to call attention to the natural effect and result of these amendments.

I do not wish to indulge in this debate further than to call the attention of Senators constantly to the effect of the amendments being made in reducing revenue which is necessary to carry on the operations of the Government. We have always thought that sufficient revenue could be collected from imported goods to pay all the ordinary expenses of the Government. That we have tried to accomplish, and I believe it would have been accomplished by the McKinley act but for the threatened change in our tariff laws. In doing this we have left excises on various domestic articles and the internal revenue to meet the extraordinary expenses of the Government growing out of pensions and the civil war. That has been the policy of the Government; but if the policy now adopted is pursued we shall not have enough revenue from imported goods to pay one-half of the ordinary current expenses of the Government, and the deficiency will have to be made up by direct taxes upon our own people, as a tax on incomes and the like.

Therefore, I always see with regret any duty on imported articles repealed, unless there is some strong reason for it. I would a great deal rather levy taxes upon foreigners than upon our own people. It is much easier to collect them at foreign ports than to collect them in our own land. Every effort to reduce rates of duty which produce handsome revenue without causing any injury naturally shocks my mind, because I have been always looking to see that enough is provided by Congress from duties on imported goods to carry on the ordinary operations of the Government.

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the Senate and the members of the committee to the language of the amendment. I ask the Secretary to report it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of paragraph 676 add:

rough or dressed,

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee, who is present, and the Senator from Missouri to the language of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska which I have just had read, "rough or dressed." Whether the Senator so intended or not, it goes a great deal further than either the committee or the Senate ever intended to go.

I do not know, and no Senator can tell, what under those words would be construed as lumber to be admitted free of duty. There is a very great range between rough and dressed lumber. It may include lumber so far worked upon as to become frames for houses ready to be put up; it may include sashes and blinds, all completed, unpainted, as they are produced by our own manufacturers. The amendment provides for the free admission of all lumber, including dressed lumber, and what the word "dressed" may be interpreted to mean nobody can tell. Therefore I call the attention of the committee and the Senators in the management of the bill to the fact that here is a matter going far beyond what they ever intended, or what the Senate ever intended.

For this reason I hope that few Senators will vote with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to make this amendment, which is so clearly crude and uninterpreted, and will be vague, general, and dangerous in its operation. Neither the Senator from Arkansas, nor the Senator from Missouri, nor the chairman of the committee has in any way proposed a clause so sweeping as this, and I hope they will not now sustain it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLAURIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. I have announced my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr.

BLACKBURN] stands paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], so that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and I can both vote. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] will stand paired. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allen,	Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Pugh,
Berry,	Gray,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Harris,	McLaurin,	Vest,
Caffery,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Call,	Irby,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Pasco,	White.

NAYS—21.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Platt,	Squire,
Allison,	Hawley,	Power,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Proctor,	Washburn.
Cullom,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,
Dubois,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Frye,	Perkins,	Shoup,

NOT VOTING—36.

Blanchard,	Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Patton,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Pettigrew,
Butler,	George,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Camden,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Smith,
Cameron,	Gordon,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Carey,	Gorman,	Martin,	Turpie,
Coke,	Hansbrough	Mills,	Vilas,
Davis,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Wis.	Wilson,
Dixon,	Hill,	Morgan,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: I rise merely to say that I was detained in the committee room upon service of the Senate for the last half hour, and I now understand that a vote has been taken upon the lumber schedule, in which my people are very much interested. I wish to announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who votes opposite to the way I do on this schedule, therefore no loss came to the people of my State because I did not vote, but I wish the fact to be stated in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Chair "where we are at" in the lumber schedule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At paragraph 683.

Mr. ALLISON. The prior paragraphs have not been read. I wish to offer an amendment to paragraph 676.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I propose that the Secretary go back to where he suspended on the former reading and read each paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

674. Timber, hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharves.
675. Timber, squared or sided.
676. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the phraseology of paragraph 676 as it now stands will admit free of duty all lumber of every name and nature used not only in building houses, as was suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], but in all the finest furniture that is manufactured in the United States, the duty on which has yielded and does yield a large revenue, and which is in no sense an article of necessity, but should rather be regarded as an article of luxury. Under the existing law and under prior statutes we have always made a distinction between the fine cabinet woods and other woods. We do not produce in the United States any very large amount of cabinet woods. So in 1890, in the last revision, we provided in section 220 as follows:

Sawed boards, planks, deals, and all forms of sawed cedar, lignum vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed, 15 per cent ad valorem; veneers of wood, etc., 20 per cent ad valorem.

We drew a distinction there between the ordinary woods of our own country and the fine cabinet woods, the cabinet woods being required to pay 15 per cent ad valorem, which would amount in many instances to $15 a thousand feet, instead of one or two dollars as provided in other paragraphs of the existing law. Fifteen per cent ad valorem as computed in thousand feet as to mahogany and the other cabinet woods, such as rosewood, satinwood, etc., will amount in some instances to $20 a thousand.

The Senator from Nebraska has secured an amendment to this paragraph which allows these woods to come in free not only in the rough, but to come in in practically the finished state.

I know of no reason why we should give up the revenue which is derived from duties on an article which may be called essentially an article of high comfort, if not of luxury. Therefore, I move at the end of the paragraph to insert what I send to the Secretary's desk, and I hope the Senator from Arkansas will permit the amendment to be made without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of paragraph 676 as amended:

Except boards, plank, deals or other lumber of cedar, lignum vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Speaking for myself, without having had time to consult with other members of the committee, I am very much inclined to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. Rough lumber is now admitted free, and it seems to me that there is no impropriety in excepting the fine cabinet woods from the operation of the paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. All rough lumber is not admitted free. Logs not sawed are admitted free. We have a large number of mills in our country sawing the logs, one in Baltimore, two in Philadelphia, a half dozen in New York, and several in Chicago.

Mr. VEST. The only difficulty about this matter in my mind is whether these woods which are used for furniture, like mahogany and the others enumerated in paragraph 684, are classified as lumber. I wish I could ask some expert about it. That has been my difficulty in the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I can say to the Senator that they are classified as lumber. They are sawed in this country, and also sawed very largely in Honduras and other South American countries. There are I know very large saw mills for sawing this lumber established in Honduras and in other countries where mahogany and satinwood are largely produced. Under the provision as it now stands of course all this lumber will come in free of duty, not only sawed, in the rough, but finished.

Mr. VEST. If it is lumber, of course.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will do no harm.

Mr. VEST. I see no objection to it. We can change it afterwards in conference if the bill ever gets there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

677. Pine clapboards.
678. Spruce clapboards.
679. Hubs for wheels, posts, last blocks, wagon blocks, oar blocks, gun-blocks, heading, and all like blocks or sticks, rough hewn or sawed only.
680. Laths.
681. Pickets and palings.
682. Shingles.
683. Staves of wood of all kinds, wood unmanufactured: Provided, That any of the articles mentioned in paragraph 672 to 683 inclusive, when imported from any country which lays an export duty on the same or any of them, shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this act.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in paragraph 683, line 9, after the word "that," to strike out "any" and insert "all;" in line 10, after the word "in," to strike out "paragraph" and insert "paragraphs;" and in line 13, after the words "duty on," strike out "the same or;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That all of the articles mentioned in paragraphs 672 to 683 inclusive, when imported from any country which lays an export duty on any of them, shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 13, after the word "duty," I move to insert "or imposes discriminating stumpage dues;" so that it will read:

Which lays an export duty or imposes discriminating stumpage dues on any of them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

684. Woods, namely, cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all forms of cabinet woods, in the log, rough or hewn; bamboo and rattan unmanufactured; briar root or briar wood, and similar wood unmanufactured, or not further manufactured than cut into blocks suitable for the articles into which they are intended to be converted; bamboo, reeds, and sticks of partridge, hair wood, pimento, orange, myrtle, and other woods, not otherwise specially provided for in this act, in the rough, or not further manufactured than cut into lengths suitable for sticks for umbrellas, parasols, sunshades, whips, or walking canes; and India malacca joints, not further manufactured than cut into suitable lengths for the manufactures into which they are intended to be converted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In paragraph 684, line 3, there is a misspelling in the word "umbrellas," which will be corrected if there be no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, at the end of paragraph 684, add the following proviso:

Provided, That the thirteen preceding paragraphs shall take effect on and after January the 1st, 1895.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state the purpose of the amendment. If we are to have lumber of all kinds on the free list, there ought to be at least six months in which to enable parties engaged in this industry to adjust their business to the proposed change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. PETTIGREW).

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi, we will transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I have announced my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that we again transfer our pairs and vote, so that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] will stand paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. QUAY. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER. Under the arrangement I have announced several times to-day I vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. SMITH. I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] that we transfer our pairs, so as to leave the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. SMITH. All right. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Perkins,	Shoup,
Allison,	Hawley,	Platt,	Squire,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Power,	Teller,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

685. All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, rags, and flocks, including all waste, or rags composed wholly or in part of wool: Provided, That this paragraph shall take effect on and after August 2, 1894.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words inclosed in brackets in lines 10 and 11, and insert what follows in small type leaving out the words "carded waste."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, after the words "bur waste," it is proposed to strike out "rags, and flocks, including," and insert "slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and;" and in line 12, after the word "wool," to insert "and all the foregoing not otherwise herein provided for," so as to read:

685. All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and all waste or rags composed wholly or in part of wool.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not include carded waste?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Carded waste was put on the taxable list.

Mr. ALLISON. Should not the words "not otherwise provided for" be inserted?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the words "not otherwise provided for in this act" should be inserted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I shall move that amendment when the amendment which I have offered is acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the proviso at the end of the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 13 and 14 of the paragraph, as follows:

Provided, That this paragraph shall take effect on and after August 2, 1894.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now ask for a vote on the paragraph as it stands.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator means to move to strike out the paragraph?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I ask a vote on the paragraph as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question now pending.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator will probably have to make the motion to accomplish his object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I have the right in all these paragraphs, because each paragraph is treated as a separate proposition, to call for a vote as to whether a paragraph shall be retained or stricken out. However, I will move to strike out the paragraph, which will answer the same purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to strike out paragraph 685.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the paragraph be read as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph as amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

685. All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and all waste, or rags composed wholly or in part of wool: all the foregoing not otherwise herein provided for.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit this proposition to the Senators on the other side: As the question about wool and woolens will probably be under debate in the Senate when the bill is reported to the Senate, if it is agreeable to Senators on the other side, I am perfectly willing that the controversy about this matter shall go over until the bill is reported to the Senate.

I sincerely hope and trust that Senators on the other side will see their way clear to avoid the entire destruction of the sheep industry of the United States.

On the whole I would rather the question should go over until the entire matter is considered in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator withdraws his amendment for the time being?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is withdrawn for the present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

686. Works of art, the production of American artists residing temporarily abroad, or other works of art, including pictorial paintings on glass, imported expressly for presentation to a national institution, or to any State or municipal corporation, or incorporated religious society, college, or other public institution, including stained or painted window glass or stained or painted glass windows; but such exemption shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 686, in line 20, after the word "institution," to strike out "including stained or painted window glass or stained or painted glass windows."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment of the committee is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee being withdrawn, the reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

687. Works of art, drawings, engravings, photographic pictures, and philosophical and scientific apparatus brought by professional artists, lecturers, or scientists arriving from abroad for use by them temporarily for exhibition and in illustration, promotion, and encouragement of art, science, or industry in the United States, and not for sale, and photographic pictures, paintings, and statuary imported for exhibition by any association established in good faith and duly authorized under the laws of the United States, or of any State, expressly and solely for the promotion and encouragement of science, art, or industry, and not intended for sale, shall be admitted free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but bonds shall be given for the payment to the United States of such duties as may be imposed by law upon any and all such articles as shall not be exported within six months after such importation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, extend such period for a further term of six months in cases where applications therefor shall be made.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 687, on page 120, line 5, after the words "photographic pictures," to strike out "paintings, and statuary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. My attention was temporarily diverted at the time paragraph 686 was passed upon. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas what action was taken on the amendment reported by the committee striking out the words in lines 20 and 21 in the bill as printed?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment was withdrawn, and those words remain in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that paragraph 102 imposes a duty on "all stained or painted glass windows," and those words are in the free list in two different places. I do not know what action the committee intend to take as to the paragraph we passed over yesterday, which also contains a similar provision.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This provision is that these articles when imported for the purpose of "presentation to a national institution, or to any State or municipal corporation, or incorporated religious society, college, or other public institution," shall be admitted free; otherwise, they are to be taxed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Paragraph 585 contains these words:

Including stained or painted window-glass or stained or painted glass windows, specially imported in good faith for the use of any society or institution incorporated or established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or for encouragement of the fine arts, and not intended for sale.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not hear the question of the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to know what action was taken on paragraph 585, which contains the words I have just read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The words in italics were withdrawn, and they are stricken from the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not know that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to know what the understanding was in regard to paragraph 685, relating to wool.

Mr. SHERMAN. That goes over until the question of the duty on wool is submitted in the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As I understand, then, by common consent paragraph 685 is agreed to as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHERMAN. No action was taken upon it. It goes over to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But the effect of it is to agree to it as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator may move to strike it out if he desires.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That has been disposed of in the same way the other paragraphs have been.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I had intended to offer an amendment to the paragraph as in Committee of the Whole, and I give notice now that when the bill is reported to the Senate, unless some other Senator does so, I shall move, in line 14, on page 119, paragraph 685, to strike out the words "August 2, 1894," and insert in lieu thereof the words "July 1, 1895."

Mr. SHERMAN. That has already been stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That proviso has already been stricken out.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I understand that has not been done.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been done on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last two lines of paragraph 685 have been stricken out.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask that the paragraph may be read as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read at the request of the Senator from Oregon, if there be no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let it be read; but I dislike this way of violating a unanimous consent agreement and going back to things which have been passed upon.

The Secretary read as follows:

685. All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and all waste or rags composed wholly or in part of wool; all the foregoing not otherwise herein provided for.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now ask for the regular order.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let the proviso be read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The proviso was sticken out.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then, so far from the amendment that I suggested having been agreed to, the very reverse has been agreed to; and while the committee reported in favor of postponing the taking effect of these paragraphs until the 2d day of August next, they now have stricken out those words; so that the provision will take effect immediately on the passage of the bill. That is the present situation of the question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follow:

688. Works of art, collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, science, or manufactures, photographs, works in terra cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, and artistic copies of antiquities in metal or other material, hereafter imported in good faith for permanent exhibition at a fixed place by any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts or of science, and all like articles imported in good faith by any society or association for the purpose of erecting a public monument, and not intended for sale, nor for any other purpose than herein expressed; but bonds shall be given under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, for the payment of lawful duties which may accrue should any of the articles aforesaid be sold, transferred, or used contrary to this provision, and such articles shall be subject, at any time, to examination and inspection by the proper officers of the customs: Provided, That the privileges of this and the preceding section shall not be allowed to associations or corporations engaged in or connected with business of a private or commercial character.

689. Yams.

690. Zaffer.

SEC. 3. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the importation of all raw or unmanufactured articles, not enumerated or provided for in this act, a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem; and on all articles manufactured, in whole or in part, not provided for in this act, a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. I had intended to offer at this stage of the bill an amendment, which was yesterday ordered to be printed, the object of which is to provide that alcohol used in manufactures and in the arts shall not pay the internal-revenue tax which is provided for in the bill, but I think it will be more proper to withhold the amendment until we reach the part of the bill which relates to the tax upon alcohol. I shall offer it at that time. The provisions of the amendment are taken from a bill which was passed by the Senate in 1889.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4. That each and every imported article, not enumerated in this act, which is similar, either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any article enumerated in this act as chargeable with duty shall pay the same rate of duty which is levied on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned; and if any nonenumerated article equally resembles two or more enumerated articles on which different rates of duty are chargeable there shall be levied on such nonenumerated article the same rate of duty as is chargeable on the article which it resembles paying the highest rate of duty; and on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value; and the words "component material of chief value," wherever used in this act, shall be held to mean that component material which shall exceed in value any other single component material of the article; and the value of each component material shall be determined by the ascertained value of such material in its condition as found in the article. If two or more rates of duty shall be applicable to any imported article it shall pay duty at the highest of such rates.

SEC. 5. That all articles of foreign manufacture, such as are usually or ordinarily marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, and all packages containing such or other imported articles, shall, respectively, be plainly marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in legible English words, so as to indicate the country of their origin; and unless so marked, stamped, branded, or labeled they shall not be delivered to the importer except under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend section 5, in line 23, before the words "so marked," by striking out "unless" and inserting "until;" and in line 1, on page 123, after the word

"importer," by striking out "except under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no article of imported merchandise which shall copy or simulate the name or trade-mark of any domestic manufacture or manufacturer shall be admitted to entry at any custom-house of the United States. And in order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this prohibition any domestic manufacturer who has adopted trade-marks may require his name and residence and a description of his trade-marks to be recorded in books which shall be kept for that purpose in the Department of the Treasury under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and may furnish to the Department facsimiles of such trade-marks; and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of the same to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of the customs.

SEC. 7. That all articles of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction of vessels, including machinery and equipment, built in the United States for foreign account and ownership or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, after the passage of this act may be imported in bond, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose no duties shall be paid thereon. But vessels receiving the benefit of this section shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States more than two months in any one year, except upon the payment to the United States of the duties on which a rebate is herein allowed: Provided, That vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out section 7 and insert what I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 7, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership, or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, and all such materials necessary for the building of their machinery, and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment, after the passage of this act, may be imported in bond under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purposes no duties shall be paid thereon. But vessels receiving the benefit of this section shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States more than two months in any one year except upon the payment to the United States of the duties of which a rebate is herein allowed: Provided, That vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to have that amendment read once more for information.

Mr. HOAR. I think there is some mistake in the phraseology of the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the amendment be read once more.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest, in order to give Senators an opportunity to look into it, that the amendment be passed over informally.

Mr. HOAR. I think that had better be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 8. That all articles of foreign production needed for the repair of American vessels engaged in foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 9. That all articles manufactured in whole or in part of imported materials and intended for exportation without being charged with duty and without having an internal-revenue stamp affixed thereto shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, in order to be so manufactured and exported be made and manufactured in bonded warehouses similar to those known and designated in Treasury Regulations as bonded warehouses, class 2: Provided, That the manufacturer of such articles shall first give satisfactory bonds for the faithful observance of all the provisions of law and of such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Whenever goods manufactured in any bonded warehouse established under the provisions of the preceding paragraph shall be exported directly therefrom or shall be duly laden for transportation and immediate exportation under the supervision of the proper officer who shall be duly designated for that purpose, such goods shall be exempt from duty and from the requirements relating to revenue stamps.

Any materials used in the manufacture of such goods, and any packages, coverings, vessels, brands, and labels used in putting up the same may, under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, be conveyed without the payment of revenue tax or duty into any bonded manufacturing-warehouse, and imported goods may, under the aforesaid regulations, be transferred without the exaction of duty from any bonded warehouse into any bonded manufacturing warehouse; but this privilege shall not be held to apply to implements, machinery, or apparatus to be used in the construction or repair of any bonded manufacturing warehouse or for the prosecution of the business carried on therein.

No articles or materials received into such bonded manufacturing warehouse shall be withdrawn or removed therefrom except for direct shipment and exportation or for transportation and immediate exportation in bond under the supervision of the officer duly designated therefor by the collector of the port, who shall certify to such shipment and exportation, orladening for transportation, as the case may be, describing the articles by their mark or otherwise, the quantity, the date of exportation, and the name of the vessel. All labor performed and services rendered under these provisions shall be under the supervision of a duly designated officer of the customs and at the expense of the manufacturer.

A careful account shall be kept by the collector of all merchandise delivered by him to any bonded manufacturing warehouse, and a sworn monthly return, verified by the customs officers in charge, shall be made by the manufacturers containing a detailed statement of all imported merchandise used by him in the manufacture of exported articles.

Before commencing business the proprietor of any manufacturing warehouse shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a list of all the articles intended to be manufactured in such warehouse and state the formula of manufacture and the names and quantities of the ingredients to be used therein.

Articles manufactured under these provisions may be withdrawn under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe for transportation and delivery into any bonded warehouse at an exterior port for the sole purpose of immediate export therefrom.

The provisions of Revised States 3433 shall, so far as may be practicable, apply to any bonded manufacturing warehouse established under this act and to the merchandise conveyed therein.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend section 9, in line 16, on page 124, after the words "imported material," by inserting "or of materials subject to internal-revenue tax;" so as to read:

That all articles manufactured in whole or in part of imported materials, or of materials subject to internal-revenue tax, and intended for exportation without being charged with duty and without having an internal-revenue stamp affixed thereto shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. The provisions of this section work a great change in the existing law. This is an entirely new departure in the United States as to the methods of manufacturing goods for exportation. The Secretary of the Treasury is given vast discretionary powers, in fact the integrity of the entire revenue will depend very largely upon the vigilance and ability with which he shall execute the provisions of this section.

The object sought is undoubtedly a good one, but whether the safeguards which are thrown around the business of manufacturing for export by the provisions of the section are sufficient or not, I do not at this time undertake to say. As they stand, however, they are certainly liable to criticism. I hope that the experiment may be a successful one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator from Rhode Island asked for some explanation of section 9.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad to have an explanation, but I did not ask for one, because I did not expect to get it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the section is of sufficient importance to have same explanation made of it by those who are responsible for this bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa, before he proceeds, I wish to return to section 7, which was passed over informally a few minutes ago, to allow Senators to examine the amendment which was offered. In copying there were two or three words omitted, which are now inserted, and I ask that the amendment may be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to read again the entire amendment. It is sufficient to read the modification which has been made by the insertion of a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the amendment was called for sometime ago by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. FRYE. The amendment has been read in full once, and the Senator from California does not want it read again, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to modify the amendment, in line 4, after the words "foreign trade," by inserting "including the trade;" so as to read:

Or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, etc.

Mr. FRYE. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I have understood that section 9 was prepared in the Treasury Department, and that it has received the sanction of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who prepared it; but it certainly is a very broad and widely extended provision. It authorizes any manufacturer who desires to do so, to have established for him a manufacturing bonded warehouse, into which he may import any article which to him is raw material, may commingle it with any product of the United States, and then send that combined product out of the United States free of duty. It may be that this can be done and will be done, without any danger of fraud on the revenue; but I am inclined to believe that the effect of it will be to transfer practically all manufactures of the United States for export to the Atlantic seaboard, and leave the residue of the people of the United States now manufacturing articles for export, to a very large extent in a situation where they can not compete.

I think it will involve the creation of a multitude of offices and officers, to be paid by the manufacturer, and of course to be under his direction and guidance; and it will be an easy thing for great frauds to be perpetrated under this provision. Under it all manufactures of cigars and tobacco, and all manufactures for export of every name and nature can be entered free at the Atlantic seaboard, and carried on with a single man, paid for by the manufacturer, as supervisor.

I do not think it is a sufficient answer to this statement to say that in a limited way this has existed for a great many years. It has existed in regard to the manufacture of medical preparations and cosmetics for some years in two or three specially bonded warehouses; and whilst I have no knowledge that in any way the internal-revenue laws have been violated, it offers such temptation to the violation of those laws as seems to require that such a provision should be limited to the narrowest possible extent.

Mr. PLATT. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. In the bill of 1888 an attempt was made to provide that alcohol used in the arts might be used free of duty, and it was provided:

That any manufacturer, after having provided, at its own expense, on the premises and connected with his manufactory, a secure storeroom, in which all spirits used in the manufactory shall be exclusively entered and stored, and to be separated by a secure wall from all other parts of such manufactory, and with one door only entering therein, and all other openings secured and fastened, and approved by the collector of the district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—

Then great pains were taken to provide that everything that was done in this way should be done in a way to prevent fraud. I do not see why any manufactory can not be converted into a bonded manufactory, and in a way which will not separate and make exclusive the manufacture of these articles for export. There are no safeguards thrown around the factory.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember the proposed legislation in 1888, and I remember that, even with all the safeguards thrown around it, it was supposed to be of such doubtful character that it was finally thrown out, except as respects brandy and other spirits.

Here is an express provision, and it is inserted by the Senate committee, whereby all the spirits and all the alcohol in the United States can be used in these bonded warehouses without any restrictions and restraints such as are thrown around distilled spirits under the internal-revenue laws.

I do not know what the motive or object may be by one single sweep enlarging the provisions as to bonded warehouses; but I confess that I have great apprehensions that it will result in widespread frauds upon the revenue.

Mr. PLATT. I want to call attention a little further to the fact that every manufactory which, under the provisions of this bill, shall engage in the manufacture of articles for export must have a Government officer in the factory. The increase of the official list by this means can not be estimated; it will be very large. These officials are not to be appointed under civil-service regulations, so far as I am at present advised; I think not. They will be politicians who want places; and they are to be paid by the manufacturer. I merely desire to call attention to it now, so that in the future, when frauds arise, it may not be said that attention was not called to the matter when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am a little surprised at the anxiety felt by Senators upon the other side about frauds to be perpetrated in manufacturing in bonded warehouses. The law already provides for a number of things of this kind to be done, and I have heard of no difficulty in their execution. The plain, simple fact, well known by everybody, is that if our manufacturers are to be handicapped by being taxed on the raw materials they use in their manufactories, it will be impossible for them to compete with other nations in the markets of the world.

This section simply provides that the manufacturer of such articles, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, may manufacture them without paying duty upon the goods intended to be sold abroad. Section 8 of the present law provides that all lumber, timber, hemp, manilla, wire rope, and iron and steel rods, bars, spikes, nails, and numbers of other things intended to be used for building ships for foreign account may come in free. Section 9 also provides for articles to be used in the repair of American vessels coming in free. Section 10 provides that all medicines, preparations, compositions, perfumery, cosmetics, cordials, and other like things may be manufactured in a similar way.

We are simply amplifying and extending the law as it now is, and it has operated without difficulty and without fraud up to this time. We have no doubt that it can be just as well executed in the future as it has been in the past. There has been no difficulty heretofore about the execution of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 10. That all persons are prohibited from importing into the United States from any foreign country any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion. No such articles, whether imported separately or contained in packages with other goods entitled to entry, shall be admitted to entry; and all such articles shall be proceeded against, seized, and forfeited by due course of law. All such prohibited articles and the package in which they are contained in the course of importation shall be detained by the officer of customs, and proceedings taken against the same as hereinafter prescribed, unless it appears to the satisfaction of the collector of customs that the obscene articles contained in the package were inclosed therein without the knowledge or consent of the importer, owner, agent, or consignee: Provided, That the drugs hereinbefore mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinbefore specified, are excepted from the operation of this section.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to add after the word "abortion," in line 11 of section 10, the words "or any lottery ticket, or any advertisement of any lottery." That is the substance of a bill which has unanimously passed the Senate at the present session.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the amendment. The bill spoken of by the Senator has not yet become a law.

Mr. HOAR. It has not become a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "abortion," in line 11, section 10, it is proposed to insert "or any lottery ticket, or any advertisement of any lottery."

Mr. HOAR. The bill which passed the Senate is much more extensive and applies to the use of the mails, but this amendment ought to be in the pending bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 11. That whoever, being an officer, agent, or employé of the Government of the United States, shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail obscene or indecent publications or representations, or means for preventing conception or procuring abortion, or other articles of indecent or immoral use or tendency, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 12. That any judge of any district or circuit court of the United States, within the proper district, before whom complaint in writing of any violation of the two preceding sections is made, to the satisfaction of such judge, and founded on knowledge or belief, and if upon belief, setting forth the grounds of such belief, and supported by oath or affirmation of the complainant, may issue, conformably to the Constitution, a warrant directed to the marshal or any deputy marshal in the proper district, directing him to search for, seize, and take possession of any such article or thing mentioned in the two preceding sections, and to make due and immediate return thereof to the end that the same may be condemned and destroyed by proceedings, which shall be conducted in the same manner as other proceedings in the case of municipal seizure, and with the same right of appeal or writ of error.

SEC. 13. That machinery for repair may be imported into the United States without payment of duty, under bond, to be given in double the appraised value thereof, to be withdrawn and exported after said machinery shall have been repaired; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to protect the revenue against fraud and secure the identity and character of all such importations when again withdrawn and exported, restricting and limiting the export and withdrawal to the same port of entry where imported, and also limiting all bonds to a period of time of not more than six months from the date of the importation.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas, who has charge of the bill, or the Chair, whether any change was made in regard to cocoanuts in paragraph 491 of the free list?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there was.

Mr. HOAR. I was called from the Chamber for a moment. I intended to call attention to the matter when it came up, but I did not do it, because a constituent of mine who was interested in the matter had received, as I understood, a communication from a member of the committee saying that cocoanuts were upon the free list. I should be glad to have unanimous consent to have that paragraph treated as still open; otherwise I shall move a reconsideration of the action taken upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The action on the paragraph will be regarded as reconsidered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. Let the paragraph be read as it stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

491. Brazil nuts, cream nuts, palm nuts, and palm nut kernels not otherwise provided for.

Mr. HOAR. Was the word "cocoanuts" stricken out?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. For the information of the Senator from Massachusetts I will state that when paragraph 224 was reached in the reading of the bill the words "cocoanuts and" were inserted before the words "nuts of all kinds."

Mr. HOAR. When was that done?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When the paragraph was regularly reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senate, by unanimous consent, will allow me to make a statement, treating the paragraph as open for the moment, and then I shall not be charged with any want of fidelity to my constituent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I have received two communications from an important firm of importers of foreign nuts and fruits in Boston, in which they state that the domestic product of this sort is exceedingly small and must necessarily, by natural causes, be confined to a very small area in the country. As everybody knows, cocoanuts are a luxury of poor people and children, so far as the fresh nuts are imported for the purposes of food; and it seems to me, therefore, an article which should come within the principle on which tariff duties are imposed. I therefore appeal to the Senator from Arkansas to allow cocoanuts to stand on the free list, where they have stood in all previous tariffs, I believe.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee, with considerable reluctance, yielded to the request and solicitation of a number of Senators to let this article be treated like other nuts, and pay the same rate of tariff. I do not think the committee would be willing now to retrace its steps and put it back.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not ask for a yea-and-nay vote, but I ask merely for a viva voce vote. I move to restore cocoanuts to the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chair will put the question on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert before the word "Brazil nuts," in paragraph 49, the word "cocoanuts;" so as to read:

491. Cocoanuts, Brazil nuts, cream nuts, palm nuts, and palm-nut kernels.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer amendments to sections 14, 15, and 16. As the amendments have but one purpose, I shall offer them as one amendment after the three sections have been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 14. That a discriminating duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed by law, shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, or merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States; but this discriminating duty shall not apply to goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States, entitled, by treaty or any act of Congress, to be entered in the ports of the United States on payment of the same duties as shall then be paid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported in vessels of the United States.

SEC. 15. That no goods, wares, or merchandise, unless in cases provided for by treaty, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, except in vessels of the United States, or in such foreign vessels as truly and wholly belong to the citizens or subjects of that country of which the goods are the growth, production, or manufacture, or from which such goods, wares, or merchandise can only be, or most usually are, first shipped for transportation. All goods, wares, or merchandise imported contrary to this section, and the vessel wherein the same shall be imported, together with her cargo, tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be forfeited to the United States; and such goods, wares, or merchandise, ship, or vessel, and cargo shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted, and condemned in like manner, and under the same regulations, restrictions, and provisions as have been heretofore established for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission of forfeitures to the United States by the several revenue laws.

SEC. 16. That the preceding section shall not apply to vessels or goods, wares or merchandise imported in vessels of a foreign nation which does not maintain a similar regulation against vessels of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer two or three amendments, but there are not Republicans enough here, or Democrats either, to get a second for a call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that is an intimation which requires the roll to be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to suggest that there is not a quorum present. In the face of that suggestion, the Chair will direct the roll to be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Brice,	Cullom,	George,
Allen,	Caffery,	Daniel,	Gibson,
Allison,	Call,	Davis,	Gordon,
Bate,	Camden,	Dubois,	Harris,
Berry,	Carey,	Faulkner,	Hawley,
Blackburn,	Chandler,	Frye,	Higgins,
Blanchard,	Cockrell,	Gallinger,	Hoar,
Jarvis,	Morrill,	Pugh,	Teller,
Jones, Ark.	Murphy,	Roach,	Vest,
Lindsay,	Pasco,	Sherman,	Vilas,
Lodge,	Patton,	Shoup,	Voorhees,
McLaurin,	Peffer,	Smith,	Walsh.
Martin,	Perkins,	Squire,
Mitchell, Oregon	Power,	Stewart,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I offer the amendments which I send to the desk as one amendment, because together they effect one purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 14 by adding thereto the following:

Until after January 1, 1896, and notice of this provision shall be given all nations before the 31st day of December next.

To amend section 15 by inserting after the word "treaty," in line 2, the words:

Hereafter made and ratified.

To amend section 16 by adding thereto the words:

Until after January 1, 1896, and notice of this provision shall be given all nations before the 31st day of December, 1894.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, section 14 of the pending bill provides for a discriminating duty of 10 per cent on certain goods which are brought in on American bottoms. It has been a provision of the law for a great many years, but is to-day of no earthly account because we have given away every advantage we ought to derive from it by reciprocal legislation and by treaties. Undoubtedly, I suppose, the Secretary of the Treasury to-dry would say that he did not know of an instance in the last five years when such provisions as those contained in this section 14 had been applicable, and there had been a discriminating duty allowed.

The pending amendments if agreed to will have this effect: To give notice to all the nations of the earth of a discriminating duty of 10 per cent in favor of all goods brought into the country in American vessels; and that notice will abrogate all treaties hitherto made which to-day stand in our way; and repeal all reciprocal legislation, and it is for the purpose of making another attempt to revive our marine on the ocean that I offer these amendments.

The fathers seemed to understand this question perfectly, and in the first tariff act ever passed in the United States, approved July 4, 1789, the following discriminating duties were imposed on teas per pound imported in American vessels:

Teas imported from China or India bore duties as follows: Bohea, 6 cents; Souchong, 10 cents; Hyson, 20 cents; other green teas, 12 cents.

Imported from Europe—Bohea, 8 cents; Souchong, 13 cents; Hyson, 26 cents; other green teas, 16 cents.

If these teas were imported in American bottoms these duties were imposed, but if they were imported in foreign-owned and foreign-built ships, then the duties were doubled, Bohea tea being 15 cents, Souchong 22 cents, Hyson 45 cents, and other green teas 27 cents, practically doubling the duties on teas imported here in foreign bottoms. On all other goods imported from China or India in foreign ships there was a 12 per cent ad valorem duty.

The same law provided a discount of 10 per cent on all duties on other goods imported in vessels built and owned in the United States as described above.

Thus there was a discrimination of 50 per cent on all teas, and a discrimination of 10 per cent on all other goods brought into the United States in American bottoms.

But that did not quite satisfy the fathers. In the act of January 29, 1795, instead of making a discount of 10 per cent of the duties, they provided for an addition of 10 per cent to all duties on goods imported in foreign vessels, except in cases where such additional duty had been before laid.

Again, the act of March 27, 1804, imposing more specific duties on certain articles, provided for 14 per cent additional ad valorem upon importations of such articles in foreign vessels. The same act also provided that a duty of 50 cents per ton, to be denominated "light money," should be levied and collected "on all ships or vessels not of the United States, which, after the aforesaid 30th day of June next, may enter the ports of the United States."

By the act of July 20, 1789, the following duties or taxes were imposed on all vessels:

On vessels built in the United States and belonging to citizens thereof, or built abroad and owned by such citizens on May 29 of that year, 6 cents per ton.

On all vessels thereafter built in the United States belonging to foreigners, 30 cents per ton.

On all other vessels, 50 cents per ton.

United States vessels in the coasting trade to pay tonnage but once a year and foreign vessels employed in our coasting trade to pay 50 cents per ton at each entry; which was an enormous duty.

What was the trouble which made the fathers provide all these discriminating duties for American ships? It was that in 1789, when the first law was passed, we had but 124,000 tons of shipping engaged in the foreign carrying trade; we carried only 17 per cent of our imports and 30 per cent of our exports; and the wise men of that day determined that we should carry our own imports and our own exports in American-built vessels. So they passed that law. What was the effect? In 1795 we had 529,500 tons of these ships, and carried 92 per cent of our imports and 88 per cent of our exports. In 1800 we had 667,000 tons. We then carried 91 per cent of our imports and 87 per cent of our exports. In 1810 our tonnage had reached 1,000,000, and we were carrying of our imports 93 per cent and of our exports 90 per cent.

The wise men of that day had done well. They had transferred from Great Britain the carrying trade of the United States, which when they entered upon this crusade was 85 per cent, and given it to us; and we carried 93 per cent of our own, and it was done by these laws discriminating in favor of American vessels and against foreign vessels; it was done by men who believed that they ought to look out for their own household first, who loved their own country more than any other and dared legislate as this love prompted.

How much tonnage have we to-day in the foreign carrying trade? In 1810 we had 1,000 000 tons, and were carrying 93 per cent of our exports and imports. To-day we have 938,000 tons, about 100,000 tons less than we had in 1810; and to-day, instead of carrying 93 per cent, we are carrying but 12 per cent of our own exports and imports, and are paying Great Britain $175,000,000 every year to do our own carrying trade for us.

Mr. LODGE. If it would not interrupt the Senator, I should like to ask him, in that connection, if Great Britain has not pursued by indirection the same methods—that is, by the rates on insurance at Lloyd's, and by premiums on iron steamships—of discriminating in favor of her own tonnage down to the present day?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the most persistent, continued effort on the part of Great Britain to prevent our vessels getting any of the carrying trade has been pursued always from the very beginning down to now. The Lloyds will rate our vessels second rate when they ought to be rated even above a first-rate British ship to-day, and the Lloyds control the entire marine insurance of the world, at any rate so far as that of Great Britain and the United States are concerned. Their companies are controlling all the marine insurance in our country, and are discriminating against our vessels.

Mr. PERKINS. It has been also shown to-day in debate that England will not permit salt to be carried from England to the East Indies from her own provinces in any other vessels except those of English build and flying the English flag.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Maine is unquestionably as well informed upon this subject as any member of this body. I wish he would give the Senate the benefit of his views as to how the United States can recover the lost carrying trade. What ought we to do?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I have just offered an amendment to the pending bill which will beyond any manner of question, if it be adopted and the bill become a law, restore the American merchant marine to the old position it occupied in 1810.

Mr. PEFFER. I am to blame doubtless for not having heard the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. It provides a discriminating duty.

Mr. PEFFER. To what effect?

Mr. FRYE. In favor of all goods imported into the United States in American bottoms.

Mr. PEFFER. Another question, because this is a very important matter, and I hope the Senator will pardon me. Does the Senator believe that that policy would be sufficient to overcome the fact that ships, ship-tackle, and shipping outfits are all regarded as property taxable under State laws? Then, further, will it not be necessary in the end for the United States in some way to relieve the shipping trade of State taxation?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, under the Constitution the United States can not relieve ships from State taxation; but I am happy to inform the Senator from Kansas that many of the States do now relieve them from this burden. New York does.

Mr. PEFFER. Does Pennsylvania?

Mr. FRYE. I do not know about Pennsylvania, but New York, of course, is the great important owner of ships. I think Massachusetts relieves them from taxation.

Mr. PEFFER. Another point. If the Government of the United States were to relieve American shipmasters and American ships from all other burdens except those which are necessarily thrown upon them by the difference in rates of interest on money prevailing in England and the difference in the rates of wages prevailing between the English seamen and ours, would that be sufficient to overcome the difficulty, or if we were to make ships and give them as a gift to American seamen and let them run them on the seas free of duty, free of all charges, either from the State or National Government, is there not enough of difference in the rate of interest of money in Great Britain and the United States and in wages of labor to run the American ships ashore and out of business?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator has opened up a pretty wide subject. The rate of interest is a small matter, and would not make any great difference. The difference in wages in the running of British and American ships is very important, I admit, and also the cost of living on board a British ship as compared with that on an American ship favors greatly Great Britain, and so of all foreign nations. But the most serious thing we have to contend with is that our ships on almost every line of the carrying trade are compelled to compete with foreign ships which are subsidized by Great Britain, Germany, France, Spain, and Italy. The result is that where it costs us to-day $7 or $8 a ton to carry goods, it does not cost them over $5. They have that advantage of us, and we have no advantages to offset. We are competing openly with them, left absolutely alone and unprotected and unencouraged.

The provision which I offer is one of immense protection. I have no doubt it would revive our carrying trade upon the ocean. For twenty years I have been——

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator, with his permission, when these preferential laws in favor of American ships were repealed?

Mr. FRYE. We made treaties with Great Britain and with Sweden in 1815. We passed acts of Congress in 1817—in 1828, accepted by Great Britain in 1849—providing for reciprocity, by which all protection to our ships in the foreign trade was gradually removed and the right to again encourage by discriminating duties and tonnage taxes surrendered.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator, with his permission, another question, and that is, if the American shipowners did not maintain the supremacy of the American trade until about 1860?

Mr. FRYE. Just so long as the trade was carried on in wooden ships the United States could and did hold its own with the world, and that was the reason our wise fathers thought that in 1815, 1826, and 1828 they could give those privileges away, that we could compete with Great Britain even, and build ships for her. We were all right, we thought, just as Great Britain thought when she adopted free trade. She believed that she was in condition to stand it, and whether other nations could or not she did not care.

For twenty years I have been trying to restore this American shipping interest to the place to which it is entitled. We have here as powerful a nation as there is in the world, as rich a nation, and more seaboard than any other. We have as good sailors and shipbuilders and as energetic men as can be found anywhere. There is no earthly reason why our flag should not be seen in every port in the wide world, as it was fifty or sixty years ago.

I am not going into the question as to what has caused our decay, because that would necessitate a speech of two hours in length, and I do not propose to delay this bill by anything of the kind. I simply wish to get a vote on this proposition to discriminate—as section 14 recognizes the principle—against all nations in favor of American ships, and give them notice a year in advance that we intend to do so, and thus restore ourselves to our former condition.

I was remarking, when the Senator from Kentucky interrupted me, that for twenty years I have been making this fight. That we have gained immensely in that time there is no doubt, in some respects. We have relieved our ships from an enormous number of burdens, amounting to millions of dollars every year. We never have been able to go the one step further and do what other nations do, put them on an equality by subsidies or by bounties. The Democratic party is committed against bounties and subsidies, but by no vote anywhere committed against a discriminating duty. There is no Democratic vote in the whole history of the country where the party is committed against such a duty. Here is section 14, which provides for a discriminating duty, which has had the vote of every Senator on this floor.

Mr. President, I believe and have always believed that the true method of revival is through discriminating duties; that the fathers were right; but I have always been restrained by these treaties. Many of our treaties have done us immense harm. The Nicaragua Canal would have been to-day built if it had not been for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and if that spook had not been shaken in our faces here in the Senate; and the American merchant marine would have been where England's is to-day if it had not been for the treaties we have made with those countries and our accepted reciprocal legislation. A treaty is no more sacred than a law, and I am in favor of one more trial and of the Democratic party voting for discriminating duties, they having entered upon the race this very day in section 14, which they knew meant practically nothing.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I understood him to say that down to 1860 the United States maintained her supremacy in the carrying trade because she had good ships, and because she could build those ships cheaper than England built theirs. If the conditions were changed, and if the United States could build ships as cheap if not cheaper than the English, could she not regain by that her supremacy on the seas?

Mr. FRYE. No; she could not. I did not mean to say that we retained supremacy down to 1860. We did not. I did not notice the question which the Senator asked me. We maintained our supremacy for a good many years, but not down to 1860. We began to lose very largely our carrying trade along in 1856, 1857, and 1858, and during those years lost more than at any other time except during the war.

Of course we lost more then, for reasons any Senator can comprehend. During the war we could do nothing for our marine, and after the war for six or seven years we were powerless, because our currency was so disturbed, Great Britian had commenced building the iron steamships and had invented the triple and compound engines, and all that sort of thing, and away she went out of our sight. We let her stay there. We never have in earnest tried to catch her from that day to this.

Mr. STEWART. Before 1860, by subsidizing her mail ships on the ocean, England drove the American lines off.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, yes; her whole history has been one of subsidy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Did I understand the Senator from Maine to say a moment ago that we lost more heavily in foreign commerce during the four years of war than ever before?

Mr. FRYE. In our carrying trade.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean to exclude or include the coastwise trade?

Mr. FRYE. Exclude it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to have the figures in support of that statement. Whilst it is true that the foreign carrying trade of this country was not increased from 1861 to 1865, it is equally true that it was substantially as heavy in tonnage in 1865 as it was in 1861. It did not shrink; it simply failed to increase.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Kentucky I think does not know quite so much about this as I do. Pardon the immodesty of the remark.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am used to that from the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. We had tonnage, but where was it? It was tied up at the wharves, because British cruisers were crossing the ocean and capturing it wherever they could lay hands on it, and we did not dare go to sea. Our ships were tonnage, but they were not carrying freight. If the Senator from Kentucky will look at the reports, he will find that we lost in the four years of war 38 per cent of the carrying trade, and we lost before the war, in from 1856 to 1860 inclusive, about 15 per cent of the carrying trade. We have been losing from that time down to last year, and last year it improved just a trifle. But the tonnage does not tell the story, as the Senator will see. We were afraid of you. We feared you would capture our ships.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There was no occasion for that.

Mr. FRYE. We were afraid you would take our men, force them into your army, and make them fight us; and so we stayed at home, at our wharves.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question before he yields the floor. Is it not true that one of the reasons for the failure to develop the American shipping is owing to the fact that the American people have been engaged in expending their energy and money in the great internal development of the country of the United States, by its immense railway systems? I desire to ask the Senator from Maine whether that is not a great reason for the failure to undertake exploiting the business of carrying the commerce of the world outside of the United States. Has not the enlarging of our railroad systems and methods of transportation in the United States, and the development of our far Western region been such as to occupy the capital and the energy of the people of the United States? But now, that having been done to the extent it has gone on, we are better prepared than we have been before to undertake the business of carrying foreign commerce.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Washington is unquestionably right. The Senate will pardon me for not undertaking to go into these questions. I did not propose to make an argument or give a history of our decline in shipping. As the Senator understands, we are very limited in time. At some other time or on some other occasion I shall be very happy to discuss the question and go into it thoroughly. It is impossible to do it now. But the principal reason why we can not compete is that wages of foreign nations are lower than ours and that under the American flag an Italian or any other foreign sailor demands American wages. Another reason is that our sailors live 40 per cent better on board ship than any sailors on the face of the earth. Another reason is that every maritime nation on earth pays bounties or subsidies to its ships and ours pays none. We have allowed this to be done year after year without undertaking to save our own vessels except to a very limited degree two years ago in establishing a postal service.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, my extreme anxiety that the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] shall be adopted leads me to say a few words. I hope that the amendment will be considered by our friends on the other side of the Chamber as a matter apart from the general policy of the bill. I wish to call the attention of the members of the Finance Committee who sit on the other side and the Senators generally to a matter that was a great surprise to me, that the discriminating duty provided in sections 14 and 15 of the bill is no novelty. I was surprised to know that there was such a provision in the bill. But it is time honored. It has come down in our tariff statutes as an inheritance from the founders of the Government.

I presume it is the very language in which such a discriminating duty was put in the first statute of this country, and which contributed so much to the building up of our merchant marine. The language of section 14, in the first four lines, is as follows:

> That a discriminating duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed by law, shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, or merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States.

The remaining provisions of the section only supplement what is said there. It was under such a provision that our merchant marine was built up to its great extent before 1856 and 1857 and the disasters of the war. Great Britain finally accepted in 1849 the legislative offer which we had made them of a treaty to abandon those discriminating duties after they had in 1846 repealed the corn laws and gone to the principle of free trade. Then for the first time she abandoned her policy of holding for herself the trade of her own colonies, and also of maintaining discriminating duties in favor of her own ships. If she had done as we did, stopped there, the conditions in that respect between the two nations would have been equal, but when she and the United States together at the same time by treaty took off the discriminating duty against the ships of the other country respectively, Great Britain, if she did not then begin, at least kept up and maintained, and has maintained from that time to this her system of bounties. We have not done so. We have therefore been playing against loaded dice.

We on this side thoroughly understand that the Democratic party is committed in its policy against the principle of bounties, and that a vote in favor of such a policy could not be had.

My object in saying anything at all is to ask our friends on the other side of the Chamber whether they can not restore to the sections, 14 and 15, their original broad character and application by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Maine authorizing the Executive to terminate these treaties by notice, and thereby vivify these sections and restore these great means of support to our marine in the future.

If that is done, I think we will have taken by far the longest step toward the restoration of the American merchant marine. It can not be restored simply by the ability to build ships cheaper. That alone will not do it. It will scarcely contribute toward doing it. Neither can we hope to equalize the conditions between the merchant ships of the two countries by any expectation that the American sailor will accept as low wages and as poor living as the foreign sailor. As I have already said, we can not hope for a bounty to meet the subsidies of foreign nations; but here is this good old American remedy against which the Democratic party is not committed, and by which they can give a great boon to the people of the United States, in all parts and in all sections, and to our whole country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish to touch upon a single feature of this case, and to call attention to a single consideration. I hear an implied reproach to this country in that it has not its proper numerical proportion of shipping. I am not troubled about it at all. The American nation has used its capital and put forth its power where it could be done to the very best advantage.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] has referred to this. We are not upon the ocean in our numerical proportion, because in that we are following the free-trade doctrine—that is to say, we take where we can get a thing cheapest. The carrying can be done cheaper by Norwegians and Italians and other seamen, at a third of what Americans will work for, and the men who build those foreign ships are working for about one-half or two-thirds what the American shipbuilders will work for. So the ships are cheaper, the wages are cheaper, the food and clothing given sailors are cheaper, the officers are paid figures which make you ashamed when you ask them on shipboard what they get.

What have we done? Where are we using our power and our money in that general field of commerce? We have about 171,000 miles of railway. By Poore's Manual they are worth $11,000,000,000. The figures are beyond the capacity of the human intellect to properly grasp and appreciate. Say that our railways carry freight at twice the speed of a mercantile marine; I am told by Mulhall in his Dictionary of Statistics, by which I have just refreshed my memory, that British merchant steamships cost from £16 to £24 per ton. We will average it at $100 a ton. The ten thousand million dollars, then, divided by $100 gives us the money equivalent of 100,000,000 tons of shipping. Great Britain has 7,000,000 tons of shipping. Converting our railroads into shipping, we have fifteen times as much as the mercantile marine of Great Britain.

Mr. SQUIRE. In tonnage.

Mr. HAWLEY. In tonnage. Our railways represent in tonnage fifteen times as much and freight trains run twice as fast as the average merchant ships sail. Our railways represent practically thirty times the mercantile tonnage of Great Britain upon the seas. That is the reason we are not upon the sea with our ships; we are doing better. While we are worrying ourselves over the statistics of international commerce, much exploited and vastly magnified in importance, we are adding fifteen or eighteen millions of inhabitants to our population in this decade, and adding within ten years past from three to ten thousand miles of railway to our splendid system.

The United States is not fooling away its time in this country, sir. We are far and away the most powerful and magnificent nation.

Mr. SQUIRE. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I will ask him whether he does not think it is about time now for us to commence to agitate the question of going into foreign commerce?

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be very glad if we had more shipping; but you can not force the American when he is making 6 per cent in one pursuit to change to another and be satisfied with 3 per cent. Our time will come, probably, to take our share of international carrying. We could have a great deal more of it now if we followed the course of other nations, notably free-trade Great Britain, and protected our shipping by bounties and otherwise. Great Britain, as I have said many times, is the most violently protective country in the world when you come to properly understand her policy. In the matter of salt, I gave an example of it in previous remarks.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there always seems to be in the popular conception of this subject great confusion between the shipbuilder and the shipowner. We hear it constantly said upon the stump that we have been giving protection to our shipping for all these years and yet see the manner in which it has declined. The remedy proposed on the other side, by the free trader, is to give us free ships, to allow us to buy ships wherever we choose.

Now, the shipbuilder is one person, the shipowner is another. We have always given protection to our shipbuilders. From that follows no protection to the shipowner, and we have given no protection to the shipowner. If you were to have free ships to-morrow it would not affect the shipowner particularly, because he would still have to compete with the high protection which is given by all other countries, and particularly by England, to the shipowners of their countries. When England entered upon her policy of free ships, which was a crude and merely nominal move, most of our tonnage was in wood, and the result of her free-ship policy at that time was to transfer very largely the building of ships to this country. I think that act was passed about 1849, and by 1852 60 per cent of the new English wooden tonnage was built in this country.

The question that is involved here is a wholly different one. It has nothing to do with shipbuilding or with free ships. It is a question whether we shall give to our shipowners the same advantages that all other countries give to theirs. We do protect them in the coastwise trade, and that trade is enormous. But aside from that we give our shipowners absolutely no protection, neither subsidy, discriminating duties, nor discriminating rates of insurance as Lloyds does, nor premiums on iron ships. We give them nothing. With the higher wages which they are obliged to pay to their seamen, they are simply driven from the sea. Here in the bill is a clause giving distinctly discriminating duties in favor of the American ship and the American shipowner.

Every man in the Senate will vote for that clause, and yet I suppose the Democratic party will decline to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Maine which alone can make that clause efficient or effective in any way. In other words, all of us, Democrats and Republicans, recognize the traditional principle of the country in that clause, and we do not allow ourselves to make it effective. The question of free ship or protected shipbuilding is one thing; the question of protecting shipowning is another. This involves the question whether we shall encourage our merchant marine as it has been the traditional policy of the country always to do.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] pointed out how we began it in the beginning of our Government, and how the tonnage rose under it. After the war of 1812, which, of course, had the effect of breaking up our merchant marine very largely and breaking up our carrying trade, we returned to our old discriminating policy, and our proportion of the carrying trade rose by leaps and bounds again, just as it did after the Revolution. We had given it away by these treaties, and other countries, while they had given us the same thing by the treaties, had been very careful to provide similar discriminations for their own merchant marine by subsidies, by bounties, or by discriminations at Lloyd's, which have already been pointed out by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. President, it seems to me that when all of us are prepared to vote for the principle, we ought also to be prepared to vote for the amendment which shall make the principle effective.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I like the principle of this amendment. I believe there is no party committed against it. A similar proposition, precisely the same in effect, will be found in the acts of the first Congress of the United States. It worked well then, but we gave it away by treaties. These treaties have been substantially violated. We are under no obligation in consequence of those treaties, because all of the important nations which entered into them have subsidized their carrying trade, which is a violation of the principle, and we ought to take some notice of it at least.

I think the granting of a subsidy by foreign countries to their carrying trade is a violation of the treaties which were made to abrogate this differential duty, because it is the same in principle. They having taken another mode of reaching the same result, I think it is the duty of the United States to return to the original proposition. At all events, it ought to apply it at once, without regard to notice, to those nations which have subsidized their carrying trade and subsidized their shipping, because they have violated the treaty. It is another way of getting at it.

The carrying trade is a very important matter. It is very important to the country now. It amounts to about $200,000,000 a year, I suppose. I do not know the exact amount. We are paying now in this country a very large amount for carrying on our foreign commerce. If we are opposed to the principle of subsidies it seems to me that we ought to return to the principle established in the First Congress of the United States, which worked well, and which we have given away by treaties of which foreign countries have taken advantage by subsidizing their lines. Our passenger ships running across the ocean a half century ago were driven off the line by British subsidies. The British have obtained and maintained control of the carrying trade, which is exceedingly important. Two hundred million dollars a year is a great drain on our people, and if it can be recovered by legitimate legislation I think it ought to be done.

No one will pretend that the fathers of the Constitution, many of whom were in the First Congress, would violate the spirit of that instrument. I think to return to the teachings of the fathers is a very good thing in many cases. I think the departure from the principles which they laid down in the beginning in the legislation they started has produced most of the calamities from which we are now suffering in many respects. If the Senator from Maine will modify his amendment so that it shall apply to all countries subsidizing the vessels conducting their carrying trade it might go into effect at once. It is not in bad faith. It is bad faith in them, however, after we made treaties with them giving up the differential duty, to adopt another mode of obtaining an undue advantage. I hope the amendment will be adopted, but I it is not adopted as it is, I hope the Senator from Maine will modify it so that it shall apply to those countries which subsidize their carrying trade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. CULLOM. I should be very glad to have the amendment stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 14 add the following:

Until after January 1, 1896, and notice of this provision shall be given all nations before the 31st day of December next.

In section 15, line 2, after the word "treaty," insert:

Hereafter made and ratified.

At the end of section 16 add:

Until after January 1, 1896; and notice of this provision shall be given all nations before the 31st day of December, 1894.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the sections read as they will read if amended.

Mr. FRYE. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the amendment simply has one effect and nothing more. It provides that the discriminating duty provided for in section 14 shall extend to all goods imported in foreign vessels, one year's notice being given for the purpose of terminating existing treaties in that regard. That is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is an interesting and very wide-reaching proposition. It seems to me that to repeal all our commercial treaties because all our commercial treaties contain the general right to carry both imports and exports of the two countries, respectively, without studying these treaties a little further, would be rather a wide-reaching proposition. I should like to have the proposition of the Senator from Maine referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations to see precisely its effect.

The Senator from Maine is a member of the committee, and I should like to study the matter with him. At present I am not prepared, at wholesale and without further study, to repeal treaties which have many provisions in them that we deem important to our interests, because if we repeal a single clause in a treaty it abrogates the whole treaty at the will of the other party. That probably would be the effect of deranging our commercial relations with all nations. I certainly should not like to vote for a proposition as broad and sweeping as the one before us without further study than I have been able to give it now or anyone else has been able to give it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE.] [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the yeas and nays. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that there are very few treaties indeed to be affected; that the greater portion has been yielded by legislation. We enacted certain legislation which should become law when certain other nations accepted it. Great Britain accepted the final legislation in 1849, and the amendment provides a discriminating duty where no legislation or treaty prevents it.

The Senator from Ohio will not find many treaties to be affected. Then I think it only gives notice for repealing this particular clause. After the vote has been taken, if the amendment is not adopted, and I suppose it will not be, I shall have the amendment go before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that if he is going to send the matter to the Committee on Foreign Relations, for many reasons he had better withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be very glad to study out the matter with the Senator from Maine, and where treaties can be repealed without involving other interests of American citizens, I might be willing to adopt the principle. The original proposition was the correct one. It must be remembered that at that time the United States had a great many wooden ships and had the advantage of almost all other nations in the carrying trade. Our American vessels were carrying at a profit and safely and probably at as cheap rates as any other all the commerce, the exports and imports, of the United States. But it would be pretty difficult now to make provision to carry all the immense exports and imports, which to-day amount to over $1,000,000,000. Therefore we might be legislating blindly, in the dark. If the proposition is not adopted I think it will be well to refer the whole subject-matter to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] demands the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I withdraw the request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand is withdrawn. The amendment has already been declared not adopted. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States is prohibited: Provided, That the operation of this section shall be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any parts of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine, and give public notice thereof that such importation will not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered, and it shall be his duty, to make all necessary orders and regulations to carry this section into effect, or to suspend the same as herein provided, and to send copies thereof to the proper officers in the United States, and to such officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries as he shall judge necessary.

SEC. 18. That any person convicted of a willful violation of any of the provisions of the preceding section shall be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 19. That upon the reimportation of articles once exported of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, upon which no internal tax has been assessed or paid, or upon which such tax has been paid and refunded by allowance or drawback, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws upon such articles, except articles manufactured in bonded warehouses and exported pursuant to law, which shall be subject to the same rate of duty as if originally imported.

SEC. 20. That whenever any vessel laden with merchandise in whole or in part subject to duty has been sunk in any river, harbor, bay, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and within its limits, for the period of two years, and is abandoned by the owner thereof, any person who may raise such vessel shall be permitted to bring any merchandise recovered therefrom into the port nearest to the place where such vessel was so raised free from the payment of any duty thereupon, and without being obliged to enter the same at the custom-house, but under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 20, line 12, after the word "thereupon" to strike out the words "and without being obliged to enter the same at the custom-house."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 21. That the works of manufacturers engaged in smelting or refining metals, or both smelting and refining, in the United States may be designated as bonded warehouses under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That such manufacturers shall first give satisfactory bonds to the Secretary of the Treasury. Ores or metals in any crude form requiring smelting or refining to make them readily available in the arts, imported into the United States to be smelted or refined and intended to be exported in a refined but unmanufactured state, shall, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and under the direction of the proper officer, be removed in original packages or in bulk from the vessel or other vehicle on which they have been imported, or from the bonded warehouse in which the same may be, into the bonded warehouse in which such smelting or refining, or both, may be carried on, for the purpose of being smelted or refined, or both, without payment of duties thereon, and may there be smelted or refined, together with other metals of home or foreign production: Provided, That each day a quantity of refined metal equal to the amount of imported metal smelted or refined that day shall be set aside, and such metal so set aside shall not be taken from said works except for transportation to another bonded warehouse or for exportation, under the direction of the proper officer having charge thereof as aforesaid, whose certificate, describing the articles by their marks or otherwise, the quantity, the date of importation, and the name of vessel or other vehicle by which it was imported, with such additional particulars as may from time to time be required, shall be received by the collector of customs as sufficient evidence of the exportation of the metal, or it may be removed under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, upon entry and payment of duties, for domestic consumption. All labor performed and services rendered under these regulations shall be under the supervision of an officer of the customs, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the expense of the manufacturer.

SEC. 22. That where imported materials on which duties have been paid are used in the manufacture of articles manufactured or produced in the United States, there shall be allowed on the exportation of such articles a drawback equal in amount to the duties paid on the materials used, less 1 per cent of such duties: Provided, That when the articles exported are made in part from domestic materials the imported materials, or the parts of the articles made from such materials, shall so appear in the completed articles that the quantity or measure thereof may be ascertained: And provided further, That the drawback on any article allowed under existing law shall be continued at the rate herein provided. That the imported materials used in the manufacture or production of articles entitled to drawback of customs duties when exported shall, in all cases where drawback of duties paid on such materials is claimed, be identified, the quantity of such materials used and the amount of duties paid thereon shall be ascertained, the facts of the manufacture or production of such articles in the United States and their exportation therefrom shall be determined, and the drawback due thereon shall be paid to the manufacturer, producer, or exporter, to the agent of either, or to the person to whom such manufacturer, producer, exporter, or agent shall in writing order such drawback paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided further, That a drawback shall be allowed equal to the duty paid, less 1 per cent, upon any imported bagging made of jute butts, which shall have been used exclusively as outside covering for lint cotton when exported, the rate and amount of such drawback to be ascertained under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, at the end of section 22, to strike out the additional proviso, in the following words:

Provided further, That a drawback shall be allowed equal to the duty paid, less 1 per cent, upon any imported bagging made of jute butts, which shall have been used exclusively as outside covering for lint cotton when exported, the rate and amount of such drawback to be ascertained under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the sections from section 23 down to and including section 50 be stricken out without reading.

Mr. CHANDLER. Section 50 includes the provision for custom-house brokers.

Mr. ALLISON. That section ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. ALDRICH. Section 50 is not to be stricken out, I presume.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then down to and including section 49.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those are all the administrative sections?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; practically.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Arkansas having charge of the bill will state briefly the reasons why he proposes to strike out the sections he has indicated.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The principal reason with me is to save time. The administrative features of the bill can be easily enacted in a separate measure if it is the desire of Congress to do so. They have no necessary and essential connection with the tariff bill, and for the purpose of expediting the passage of the pending bill I shall make no opposition to striking out those sections.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senate is likely to be called upon at any time to go over all these provisions, scrutinize them and discuss the principles and measures involved in them, it would be better to do it now than to do it upon the report of a conference committee. If, however, it is probable that they are not to be found in the bill, then certainly there is no need of doing it now. I merely wish to state that it seems to me it should be understood that if the bill should happen to pass the Senate and a conference report should recommend the adoption of these provisions, it would be necessary to take the time of the Senate at great length in order to go over these items. Certainly if there is a probability even that the sections will have to be considered in detail and that the changes in existing law which they propose will have to be considered in detail, it would be better to do it now than at a later period.

Mr. HOAR. The suggestion which the Senator from New Hampshire has made might, I think, be extended a little. The Senate, if these provisions are to be presented again in the report of a conference committee, can not deal with the question presented at all, as I understand there is no motion in order to amend the report of a conference committee. We never can have any opportunity to deal with these matters unless the sections are to be abandoned.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the Senator's suggestion perfectly. I understand very well that if the conference report should recommend the adoption of all these provisions we could not vote upon them separately.

Mr. HOAR. Or amend them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nor could we move any amendment to them, but the Senate could discuss them all of course from the beginning to the end. There are provisions here which need discussion before they are adopted, but if it is not likely that there will be any occasion to discuss them, I certainly do not wish to force the discussion at the present time. I do wish to give notice, however, that in case all these sections should come in review before the Senate upon the report of a conference committee there will be very extended discussion thereupon.

Mr. ALLISON. These sections are the reproduction in the main of the administrative act, so called, and many of them, I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire, as he probably already knows from examination, are simply a repetition of the existing administrative law. There are, however, in these sections perhaps four or five amendments of great importance which would lead to considerable controversy. I understand, although I am not perhaps authorized to say it, because we ought not to quote anyone outside of the Chamber unless we have absolute authority to do so, that it is rather the wish of the Secretary of the Treasury that he may be enabled to administer the new tariff law if the bill shall pass, under the administrative law as it now exists, and if defects shall be disclosed which require amendment that later on the administrative law itself may be amended, leaving it as now, a separate statute as distinguished from the mere levying of duties upon imports.

So I think the Senator from New Hampshire may feel a reasonable degree of assurance at least, as well as the Senator from Massachusetts that the proposition to strike out the administrative provisions of the bill will be acquiesced in. It may be that there may be some controverted question respecting the matter, but I see no objection to adopting the course proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. It will undoubtedly facilitate the consideration of the pending bill, and I think it will eliminate a great deal of debate in this body and elsewhere, because speaking for myself alone I could not agree to the amendments suggested in the bill to the administrative law without an opportunity of very full debate.

I, for one, can say to the Senator from New Hampshire that if they shall reappear here in the condition of a controversial question between the two Houses as respects the propriety of our striking out the sections, I shall, so far as I can, object to some of the provisions which are here proposed by the other House. I do not think there is any probability that there will be much controversy in regard to the sections.

Mr. ALDRICH. The sections proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas are 27 in number, covering 32 printed pages of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Commencing with what section?

Mr. ALDRICH. Commencing with section 23 and running to section 49, although, by the way, I think section 49 should not be stricken out, as it is a new section. The sections to be stricken out should be from section 23 to section 48, inclusive.

While it is true that all these are long sections, the controverted points, that is the changes suggested in them, are not very numerous. There are some ten or twelve important questions involved, upon which the Senator from Iowa and myself have decided opinions and as to which we disagree entirely with the change proposed.

I agree with the Senator from Iowa that if these sections or these objectionable features should reappear they would form a subject of contest upon the report of the conference committee, and would be fully discussed in the Senate. But perhaps it would be well enough to cross that bridge when we get to it. I am perfectly content that the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas shall be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas modify his amendment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I accept the suggestion, and move to strike out the sections from section 23 down to and including section 48.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas that sections 23 to 48, inclusive, shall be stricken from the bill without being read. The amendment is agreed to, in the absence of objection. It is agreed to. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 49. That any baggage or personal effects arriving in the United States in transit to any foreign country may be delivered by the parties having it in charge to the collector of the proper district, to be by him retained without the payment or exaction of any import duty, or to be forwarded by such collector to the collector of the port of departure, and to be delivered to such parties on their departure for their foreign destination, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought this section was stricken out with the others.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; it is a new provision, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a reënactment of the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the law to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. By looking at the red pamphlet, page 120, it will be seen that the act of June 10, 1890, includes this section 49.

Mr. ALDRICH. I find that it is the same.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is a reënactment of the present tariff law.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a part of the administrative law, I will state to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is in the present tariff law, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a part of the administrative law—the act of June 10, 1890.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I was in error about it. I move that section 49 be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 49 will be stricken out, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 50. That the collector or chief officer of the customs at any port of entry or delivery may issue a license to any person desiring to transact business as a custom-house broker. Such license shall be granted for a period of one year, and may be revoked for cause at any time by the Secretary of the Treasury. From and after the 1st day of June, 1894, no person shall transact business as a custom-house broker without a license granted in accordance with this provision; but this act shall not be so construed as to prohibit any importer from transacting business at a custom-house pertaining to his own importations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to strike out section 50. I desire to say to the Senator from Arkansas that it does not seem to me to be wise to establish a corps of custom-house brokers who are subject to the discretion of the collector as to whether or not they shall exercise their vocation. I do not object to a license, but I do think that there should be some obligation imposed upon the collector of customs to give a license to any person applying, who is of good character and qualified to perform the duties of a custom-house broker. My objection to the paragraph is not so much to what it contains as to what it does not contain. If the Senator will modify it by an amendment that a license shall be issued to any reputable and competent person, then I shall make no objection to the paragraph. But as the clause stands the Senator will see that it gives a monopoly of the business of acting as custom-house brokers to those persons to whom the collector of customs may, in his discretion, give a license.

Now, ought that to be so? Should there not be a provision, if here is to be a corps of custom-house brokers who have the exclusive right to do business as custom-house brokers, that any reputable person submitting his testimonials to the collector of customs shall be licensed to do business as a custom-house broker? Shall we undertake to make the custom-house brokers the sole creation of the collector of customs without imposing upon him any obligation whatever to give a license to persons to whom he ought to give such a license?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand the difficulty intended to be remedied by this section is that there have been a good many utterly disreputable people who have been performing this sort of duty, and it is the belief of the custom-house officers that there should be some restraint upon those men. I can not conceive it possible that a public officer discharging the duties of his office would refuse the right to any man who is reputable and competent to have a license to transact this kind of business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I can conceive that a collector of customs might be very arbitrary. He may have a dislike to a particular man and exclude him. I will modify my amendment by withdrawing the motion to strike out the whole section and move at the end of line 1, page 168, after the words "Such license shall be granted for a period of one year," to add:

To any reputable and competent person, and may be revoked for cause at any time by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me there ought certainly to be a power of appeal from a refusal of license by the local collector. Very often resisting a collector's action in protecting a client involves pretty sharp controversy with the collector. It seems to me you are making a provision under which every collector in the country might become a petty tyrant. There certainly ought to be an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury by the person to whom a license is refused.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, and also to the Senator from Arkansas, that I think there will be thorough protection afforded by striking out the word "may," in line 24, page 167, and inserting the word "shall," so as to provide that any person who desires to transact business at the custom-house shall have a license, and then, if he does not conduct himself properly, the Secretary of the Treasury may revoke it. That protects everybody.

Mr. CHANDLER. The license may be revoked for cause.

Mr. ALLISON. Revoked for cause. Here is a merchant who desires, to-day or this month, to have one of his clerks act as a broker for the purpose of transacting his business at the custom-house. Next week or next year he may want to make a change. So I think it is better to leave no discretion except in the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that an importer may now transact his own business by the closing expression in the section, and of course if he may transact his own business he may do it by his clerk. I agree, from my personal knowledge on this subject, that this is a wise section, provided the amendment that I offer, or the one suggested by the Senator from Iowa, is adopted, which makes it obligatory upon the chief officers of customs to license a reputable and competent person.

Mr. VEST. Let me make a suggestion. Why not put in a provision at the end of the section to the effect that the number of these persons shall be prescribed at each custom-house by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed a certain number.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that this is an entirely new provision. Hitherto everybody has had an opportunity to go to the custom-house and transact the public business. There have been some abuses no doubt. The abuses have been chiefly in the custom-house brokers instituting suits or gathering up material for suits against the Government. I think it would be perfectly safe to say that the chief officer of customs shall issue a license to whoever desires to transact business in the custom-house, and if after receiving such authority the person does not conduct himself properly the Secretary of the Treasury can revoke his license, and that ends him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think well of the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, but I am willing to go further myself and simply command him to give a license to a reputable and competent person. But to allow the section to stand as it is now, I say to Senators, will create an odious monoply. To say that no importer shall employ a custom-house broker unless the collector licenses that broker, and to impose no obligation upon the collector to license a competent and reputable person, and to allow the collector to gratify either personal animosity or ill will by arbitrarily refusing a license, with no appeal to anyone, would be, I think, carrying the remedy much further than the disease.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have had a little experience with these persons. Anyone can be a custom-house broker under the present law. A person acting as a custom-house broker may prove to be a man of bad character. It seems to me it might be proper to authorize the chief officer or collector at any port of entry or delivery to issue a license to a person of good character and standing who desires to transact business as a custom-house broker, but I do not think the chief officer of customs ought to have any power of appointment or control over these people except to pass upon their character and standing subject to revision by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I think some such provision as that might cure the present evils that grow out of the practice of anyone being a custom-house broker; and sometimes to be a custom-house broker implies bad character rather than good character.

Mr. CHANDLER. Good character will be satisfactory.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say "good character and standing."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my amendment again, and move——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Iowa will give me his attention, I suggest another amendment in line 24, page 167. I propose to make the clause read:

Shall issue a license to any person of good character and standing desiring to transact business, etc.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator that the words he used before, "reputable and competent," would be better.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have changed from "reputable and competent" to accommodate the Senator from Ohio, whom I always desire to oblige in the matter of synonyms. Now I will change back again to accommodate the more potent Senator from Arkansas. Any way will suit me.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing to accept the amendment adding those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The SECRETARY. In section 50, line 24, strike out the word "may" and insert "shall;" and after the word "person," in line 25, insert "of good character and standing."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the Senator agreed to put in the words "reputable and competent?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from New Hampshire to modify his second amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw all objection to the words "reputable and competent," and request that they may be inserted instead of "of good character and standing."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "person" in line 25, section 50, insert "reputable and competent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be agreed to, in the absence of objection. It is agreed to. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 51. That all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this provision.

SEC. 52. That the value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be of that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated quarterly by the Director of the Mint, and be proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately after the passage of this act and thereafter quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend section 52 by adding thereto the following:

And the values so proclaimed shall be followed in estimating the value of all foreign merchandise exported to the United States during the quarter for which the value is proclaimed, and the date of the consular certification of any invoice shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered the date of exportation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may order the reliquidation of any entry at a different value whenever satisfactory evidence shall be produced to him showing that the value in United States currency of the foreign money specified in the invoice was, at the date of certification, at least 10 per cent more or less than the value proclaimed during the quarter in which the consular certification occurred.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 53. That section 2804 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 2804. No cigars shall be imported unless the same are packed in boxes of not more than 500 cigars in each box; and no entry of any imported cigars shall be allowed of less quantity than 3,000 in a single package; and all cigars on importation shall be placed in public store or bonded warehouse, and shall not be removed therefrom until the same shall have been inspected and a stamp affixed to each box indicating such inspection, and also a serial number to be recorded in the custom-house. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide the requisite stamps, and to make all necessary regulations for carrying the above provisions of law into effect."

From and after the 1st day of July, 1894, there shall be collected an internal-revenue tax on all cigarettes wrapped in paper weighing not more than 3 pounds a thousand, manufactured for sale or offered for sale in the United States, of $1 per thousand.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend section 53 by striking out the last paragraph, in the following words:

From and after the 1st day of July, 1894, there shall be collected an internal-revenue tax on all cigarettes wrapped in paper weighing not more than 3 pounds a thousand, manufactured for sale or offered for sale in the United States, of $1 per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that it is an unusually oppressive day. The heat in the Chamber is very uncomfortable. We have been in session nearly six hours. I suggest that he should either put off the consideration of the bill until to-morrow and take up the Calendar, or, if he prefers, take up some of the unobjected matters further on and skip the income-tax provisions until to-morrow unless some Senator desires to go on this evening.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should like to have that course adopted. It would oblige me very much if it should be done.

Mr. HOAR. I did not suppose any Senator would prefer to go on this evening.

Mr. HILL. Can we not go on with the rest of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. I have been given several severe headaches in trying to read the provisions which relate to the income tax, and understand them with the amendments that have been proposed. I suggest that there might be a print of the provisions relating to the income tax, showing how the sections would read if the amendments of the committee were adopted. I think we would then all understand what it is that we are expected to vote for; but it is very difficult to understand the provisions as they stand at present with the amendments proposed. I do not see why there should not be a print made of the sections, as they would be if the amendments were adopted. That would enable us to have it all before our eyes in a connected form. If there is no objection, I should like to have that done.

I do not wish to embarrass the committee in any way about it, but if the committee is willing, I should like to have such a print made of the provisions relating to the income tax.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut means the provisions as passed by the other House, with the corresponding sections as proposed to be amended in the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. I suggest that we have printed in a connected way the income-tax provisions as they would be if all the amendments proposed by the committee are adopted. Is that right?

Mr. ALLISON. That is right, if it is what the Senator wants. Of course, that will show the whole scheme as proposed by the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. PLATT. And show it in a way which would be intelligible. It is scarcely intelligible now, certainly not without a great deal of study.

Mr. HALE. How would that differ from the text of the bill as we see it before us now? What change, that would enlighten Senators, is comprehended in the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT. If there is any objection I do not insist on it.

Mr. HALE. I do not object. I merely make an inquiry.

Mr. PLATT. I do not insist upon it. Here are five or six sections that go out.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not understand the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I inquired whether it would not be well to print the provisions relating to the income tax as they would be if all the amendments proposed by the committee should be adopted, so that we could have the whole matter as the committee desires to have it adopted by the Senate before us in one connected print.

Mr. CULLOM. In that case, if the Senate should want to restore the House provisions proposed to be stricken out by the committee, they would not appear in the print.

Mr. PLATT. The House provisions would be the foundation of the print, and then the amendments of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the case now.

Mr. ALLISON. I think what confuses Senators (I will not say the Senator from Connecticut, because he usually comprehends things very readily) is the fact that the committee proposed certain amendments and then afterwards modified those amendments and put in new amendments in lieu of the amendments first proposed. My own impression is that the best way to print this provision, if we have it printed again, would be to print the original House text with the amendments now proposed by the committee, eliminating the intermediate amendments, interrogation points, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. And print the former part of the bill with the amendments already made?

Mr. VEST. There is no necessity for doing that.

Mr. PLATT. I will withdraw any suggestion if it is not practicable.

Mr. VEST. There are a few amendments outside of those now printed in the bill, which can be printed to-night and submitted to the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean additional amendments which are not found in the text before us?

Mr. VEST. They are not found in the text before us. I propose to offer them when the text is read.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not offer them now, if the Senator has the amendments prepared?

Mr. VEST. I am prepared to offer them, and intend to do so, if it is an agreeable suggestion. We can have them printed to-night and they can be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. That is the first intimation there are to be amendments of substance offered which have not been before us at all. It seems to me that instead of waiting until we reach a paragraph, when we have no time to examine the amendment, there should be a new print including all amendments that are proposed by the committee, so that to-morrow morning we may see the whole scope of what is intended.

Mr. VEST. It is not necessary to reprint the amendments already in the bill. They are not changed. These are simply additional amendments, and there are very few of them.

Mr. HALE. They may be very important provisions.

Mr. VEST. Some of them. They are limitations upon the provisions now in the bill.

Mr. HALE. We ought to have them beforehand, and not be obliged to take them up as read at the desk.

Mr. VEST. I propose to submit them now, if agreeable, and have them printed to-night and put on the desks of Senators to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE. And let the matter go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senators in charge of the bill propose to allow the income-tax provision to go over until to-morrow, I believe.

Mr. VEST. That is the understanding, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. If so, I think it might be well to have a little print of the income-tax part of the bill by itself without printing the whole bill. It will be very easy for the clerks at the desk to arrange it.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean to reprint the provisions that apply to the income tax?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, only those and the amendments now to be proposed.

Mr. VEST. If all the amendments which are to be offered shall be printed, the whole thing will be before the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I do not insist on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Senator from Missouri will be recognized for the purpose of submitting the amendments to which he refers.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to give notice that when we take up the income-tax provision I shall propose an amendment to be inserted after the word "tax," in line 19, on page 170——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the amendments proposed by the committee be first read, and then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Kansas, so that he may submit any further amendments.

Mr. PEFFER. I understood the committee were to prepare their amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. They are to be submitted now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Missouri ready to submit the amendments to which he has referred?

Mr. VEST. As soon as the Senate is ready to receive them I am ready to submit them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that unanimous consent has been given for their reception. They will be read for information and ordered printed.

Mr. VEST. Is it the understanding that the sections shall be reprinted as the Senator from Iowa suggested? It is a mere matter of printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No understanding has yet been reached.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Iowa make that request?

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that if the amendments of the Senator from Missouri and the amendment of the Senator from Kansas and any other amendments that Senators desire to propose now shall be offered and printed that is all the new print that is necessary.

Mr. VEST. I thought so, but the Senator from Iowa suggested that these sections of the bill be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make another suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the amendments now offered shall be read or printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. We want to have them read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will venture once more to suggest that during the night we have the original income provisions printed as they came from the other House, and that the amendments which the committee now propose shall be printed with them.

Mr. HALE. Printed in their order?

Mr. ALLISON. In their order. It may disturb someone, but it will certainly be a great convenience to Senators in pursuing the debate upon this question to have that concrete form of printing; and I think it will not cost much.

Mr. VEST. It will simply be to take the sections from 54 to 63 as now in the bill and then print an edition with the proposed amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. But there are various amendments now to be proposed which are to be printed. How will the Senator have them distinguished?

Mr. ALLISON. There are some of the former amendments printed and then struck out again. All those in brackets are struck out.

Mr. CHANDLER. How does the Senator want to have those disposed of in the new print?

Mr. ALLISON. I want to have them omitted. I want the scheme as the committee now propose it to appear, as compared with the House scheme, in concrete form.

Mr. VEST. I do not think there will be the slightest difficulty.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator objects I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition before the Senate now is the disposition of the amendments offered by the Senator from Missouri. Is it desired by the Senate that they shall be read?

Mr. PUGH. Let them be read.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to have them read. It will take only a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendments will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 11, section 59, add the following proviso:

Provided, That mutual life insurance companies shall not be required to pay an income tax upon the sums repaid to their policyholders as dividends or interest upon the surplus premiums held by such companies.

Strike out all of section 59, after the word "purposes," in line 22, and insert the following:

Nor to the loans made by building and loan associations to their shareholders for the purpose of enabling them to provide for themselves homes.

In line 10 of section 56, page 175, strike out the words "or person," and insert the words "estate or cestui que trust."

In the same line, after the word "persons," insert the words "or trustees."

In line 25, section 59, page 187, after the word "associations," insert "or in the case of any foreign corporation, company, or association, the resident manager or agent."

In line 23 of the same section insert "paid" instead of "laid."

On page 188, line 3 of section 59, after the word "affirmation," insert the words:

In such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

In lines 10 and 11, of section 59, page 188, strike out the words "pay penalties and," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "make return of."

At the end of line 20, section 59, page 188, add the following:

Including fraternal beneficiary societies, orders or associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, and associations, and dependents of such members.

Add after the first line, on page 189:

Nor to such savings banks, savings institutions, or societies as shall, first, have no stockholders or members except depositors, and no capital except deposits; secondly, shall not receive deposits to an aggregate amount in any one year of more than $1,000 from the same depositor; thirdly, shall not allow an accumulation or total of deposits by any one depositor exceeding $10,000; fourthly, shall actually divide and distribute to its depositors, ratably to deposits, all the earnings over the necessary and proper expenses of such bank, institution, or society, except such as shall be applied to surplus; and fifthly, shall not possess in any form a surplus fund exceeding 10 per cent of its aggregate deposits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to submit his proposed amendment now? If so, it will be read for information.

Mr. PEFFER. I send the proposed amendment to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Insert after word "tax" in line 19, page 170, section 54, the following:

On each and all such incomes exceeding $1,000, the tax shall be 1 per cent of the excess; and all incomes exceeding $10,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess; all incomes exceeding $25,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess; all incomes exceeding $50,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess; and all incomes exceeding $100,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess.

Mr. ALDRICH. The provisions of these various sections are at best very complicated, and with all the important changes suggested now at this late hour it will be utterly impossible to discuss the bill intelligently unless the amendments suggested by the committee are printed. It seems to me it is not possible to discuss them in any other way, and there is certainly ample time between now and the session to-morrow morning to have a print made of these sections as they will read when amended by the latest of the suggestions of the committee. I ask that that order may be made.

Mr. PLATT. That was my suggestion in the first place.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me that such a print is absolutely necessary in view of all the complications concerning this question.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice of an amendment in section 62, line 6, page 189, of the print I have in my hand. After the words "United States" I propose to insert the words "not including the judges of the courts of the United States, but;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries * * * not including the judges of the courts of the United States, but including Senators and Representatives, etc.

I ask consent that the letter of Chief Justice Taney on this subject may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. There is a letter of Chief Justice Taney on this subject, which is on the records of the Supreme Court of the United States. I ask consent that it be printed as a document. It is very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. May I make one further suggestion respecting the printing? The Senator from Missouri has offered amendments to section 59, and in the description of those amendments he has offered them to the substitute section 59, which is a substitution for three sections.

In suggesting the printing anew, I do not suggest that the clerks at the desk are to be obscured by the new print. Of course, in dealing with the bill at the desk of the Secretary, we must deal with it as it appears in the print now before us, and we can do it in no other way. Therefore, a print such as is now suggested should be a print for the convenience of Senators, and should not be in any way mingled with the print of the text of the bill and amendments heretofore proposed; otherwise there will be confusion.

Mr. HILL. Then, as I understand the Senator, he means that the text of the bill shall be printed, including all the amendments proposed by the Senator from Missouri, so that we shall have the complete bill so far as the income tax before us, without regard to any other amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; that is what I mean.

Mr. ALDRICH. My suggestion was not to include the original text of the bill, but to include the scheme as it is now presented to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be printed just as it would read if all the amendments which have been proposed by the committee were adopted.

Mr. HILL. That is what I want.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa suggests that the original text be also printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not ask that the original text as it came from the other House be printed, though I think it would be convenient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the proposition so that it may be distinctly understood and taken down by the Reporters, and then the Senate can act upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. My proposition is that there shall be a print of the income-tax provisions as they will read with the amendments proposed by the committee, eliminating the original amendments proposed and only including those amendments which they intend to offer to-morrow morning; that they be printed as though they had been adopted, and I should be glad to have the original text printed side by side.

Mr. HOAR. Would there be any objection to follow the text by a print of all amendments of which notice has been given?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. Amendments like the amendment of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not, as separate amendments, stating that the Senator from Kansas proposes to amend as follows, that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to amend as follows, etc. What I want to get at is just what all Senators desire, and that is the general plan of the committee as respects the alterations to be made from the House text in regard to the income tax.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would the Senator have no distinction in the print to show what is the House provision and what is the proposed amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I would have the House text in advance and the amendments now proposed, say in italics, or in small pica, or whatever the type used. It seems to me that it would be a great convenience to all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is to have the text, followed by the other amendments proposed. Is there objection to the proposition made by the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the reading of the bill shall be continued?

Mr. HARRIS. Is it the agreement that the income-tax feature of the bill with such amendments as the committee reported shall be printed in different type, so as to show what the text is and what the amendments are?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the text as it came from the House of Representatives will be printed as proposed to be changed by the amendments which the committee now offer, and that is to be followed by the amendments submitted this afternoon by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] and others.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it the order that the independent amendments proposed by other Senators, or of which notice is given, shall be printed in still different type?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are to follow the other printing. They are not to be incorporated in the bill in any way.

Mr. PLATT. There seems to be still some confusion about this matter. I do not want to press the matter if it is not desired. What I want to get is in one print the income-tax feature as it will be if all the amendments of the committee are adopted, so that I can see what sort of an income-tax law we would have if the amendments of the committee were adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I understood to be the order of the Senate

Mr. PLATT. Anything else may be printed, but I want to see that in print.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that is substantially the agreement the Senate has entered into.

Mr. HOAR. And all other amendments are to follow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will follow, printed on separate sheets under the general order to print, separately.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from Iowa to agree that after this text showing the present bill and the proposed amendments of the committee in the ordinary way there should follow as part of the same document the print of all amendments of which notice has been given as the one offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ALLISON. There is certainly no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is part of the agreement as the Chair understands it.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate having reached that agreement, I understand that until the print is before the Senate it is the wish of Senators that we shall not proceed with the consideration of these sections of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the proposition, but no agreement has yet been entered into.

Mr. HARRIS. Of that I am aware, but I understand that to be the wish of Senators while the order to print is being executed.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me a moment?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. If no other Senator desires to speak to-morrow morning, I will take the floor as soon as we take up the bill. It will be understood that I may have the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of that agreement, as we can not very well proceed with these sections of the bill this evening, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 21, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. THOMAS O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following communication was read:

JUNE 20, 1894.

SIR: I hereby name the Hon. JOSEPH W. BAILEY, a Representative from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair for this day.

CHARLES F. CRISP, Speaker.

To Hon. JAMES KERR,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally referred as indicated below:

A bill (S. 1597) to amend an act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 1228) for the relief of Charles W. Cronk—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 763) relieving the personal representatives of John Sherman, jr., late United States marshal for the Territory of New Mexico, from the requirements of section 833 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1365) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of the late Alexander W. Baldwin as United States district judge for the district of Nevada—to the Committee on Claims.

SURVEY OF HARBORS OF SUPERIOR AND DULUTH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that action be now taken upon that joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin for the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let the resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a commission, to consist of three engineers, to examine the harbors of Superior and Duluth and the entrances thereto, with a view of ascertaining the cost of deepening said harbors and entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet, and to report their conclusions to the Secretary of War without delay, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, my attention was called off while the joint resolution was being read, and I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. CATCHINGS. It is simply an order for the survey of the harbors of Duluth and Superior City.

Mr. HAUGEN. The work is provided for in the river and harbor bill, but this would hasten it somewhat.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT DAVENPORT, IOWA.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, a bill (H. R. 4764) to authorize additions to and improvements in public buildings at Davenport, Iowa.

Mr. SAYERS. I object to the consideration of that measure by unanimous consent.

ARREARS OF PAY DUE TO DECEASED COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas there is now in the Treasury of the United States money arising from arrears of pay and due the estates of deceased colored soldiers who served during the late war; and

Whereas it is deemed just and expedient that said funds be set apart and appropriated for the purpose of erecting national memorial homes for aged and infirm colored people and to aid in maintaining the inmates of the same:

Therefore be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be and is hereby requested at the earliest time practicable to report to this House as follows:

First, the amount of the unexpended balance of said fund that was turned over to the Adjutant-General's Department when the Freedmen's Bureau was discontinued in 1872;

Second, the additional money arising from said source, if any, that has been paid into the Treasury since 1872;

Third, the amount of said funds that was held for seven years and then repaid into the Treasury on the legal presumption of the death of the payees;

Fourth, a full statement of the claims paid to claimants since 1882 and the amounts thereof;

Fifth, the number and amount of claims now pending;

Sixth, the actual amount of said fund now in the Treasury claimed and the actual amount unclaimed;

Seventh, an estimate of the balance of said fund that will finally remain unclaimed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. COOMBS. I shall object to the resolution in its present state, Mr. Speaker. It declares the desirability of making a certain use of these funds, a question which I think will necessitate a longer discussion than can be had in this morning hour. I shall not object to the resolution if that part of it be stricken out, and also the part requiring a detailed statement of each claim, because that would take too much time and labor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let the resolution go to the committee.

Mr. HULICK. Let it be referred, then.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman to withhold that demand for a moment while I present one or two reports from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HATCH. Very well.

PRODUCTION OF THE PRECIOUS METALS IN THE UNITED STATES IN 1893.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 13, 1894.

Mr. CATCHINGS submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1893 be printed, and that 10,000 extra copies be printed, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint."

The committee have considered the House concurrent resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the product of precious metals in the United States for 1893, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The estimated cost of the same is $2,725.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

TYPHOID FEVER AND OTHER PREVENTABLE DISEASES.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit also another report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 14, 1894.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, That in addition to the "usual number," there be printed 4,000 extra copies of the special report made by the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia at its meeting of June 6, 1894, on typhoid and malarial fevers and other preventable diseases, of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the said Society."

The committee have considered the House resolution to print the "usual number," and 4,000 extra copies of the special report made by the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, at its meeting June 6, 1894, on typhoid, malarial fever, and other preventable diseases in the District of Columbia, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass. The estimated cost of the same is $52.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5806) to authorize the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct and maintain a wagon bridge over the Mississippi.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1538) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yankton tribe of Sioux or Dacotah Indians in South Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect;

A bill (S. 2065) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory;

A bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier; and

A bill (S. 1320) to provide for the punishment of certain frauds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster mother;

A bill (S. 1995) granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations in the State of Nebraska; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts within the city of Baltimore to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years.

ANTIOPTION.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of revenue bills; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending bill and amendments thereto, if any, shall be considered closed at the adjournment to-morrow evening, the bill and any pending amendments to be reported to the House; the previous question to be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments thereto to final passage, and the vote to be taken immediately after the morning hour on Friday morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue; and pending that, asks unanimous consent that all debate on the bill now pending in Committee of the Whole shall be considered as closed at the adjournment to-morrow (Thursday) evening; and that the vote on the bill and pending amendments shall be taken Friday after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HATCH. No; immediately after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the vote shall be taken immediately after the morning hour on Friday. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining options and futures, and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Committee, before entering upon the discussion of the question at issue, I desire to make one statement which is called forth by what several gentlemen on the other side of this question have said in regard to the position of myself and my colleagues as being representatives of the board of trade. I wish to state, in the first instance, that I do not, I never have, and I suppose I never shall represent the board of trade either upon the floor of this House or anywhere else. I have never in my life had a solitary deal upon the board of trade; I do not expect I ever shall.

I wish further to say to the members of this committee, and more especially to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY], that the Board of Trade of Chicago or the Board of Trade of New York is no more in favor with the majority of the people of my district than it is with the farmers; and I am fully alive to the fact that if in doing what I do and in saying what I may say I should incidentally champion the cause of the board of trade I am doing what is very unpopular in my district. But, gentlemen, these considerations ought not, and I may say in my case that they do not bear weight.

We are elected, not as representatives of a certain city, not as representing a certain portion of the country, not even as representing our State, but we are elected to this body as representing, one and all, the whole people of the United States, and I sincerely hope that in what I may say and in what I may do, I may live up to this trust.

Mr. Chairman, legislation of the kind which is before the House now has been attempted in governments, democratic, monarchical, and aristocratic from time immemorial. From time immemorial there have been a set of mountebank politicians who believed or made the people believe that it was within their power to do something extraordinary for them, by restraining one law of nature or by accelerating the action of another law of nature. And from time immemorial—from the time of the Greeks down to this century, in England and all over the world, all such attempts have proven futile.

If I were to characterize legislation of this kind in one word, I should say it was upon the style of the "blue glass" craze—a cureall; or that it was in legislation what the so-called "faith cure" is in medicine—something which is supposed to and is held out by its authors to bring about a reform, an entire revolution of existing conditions. The key note of this sort of legislative legerdemain is given by a question which was interjected the other day, I believe, by my friend from Missouri. He takes the rostrum and asks in sonorous words, "Is it not about time that we do something for the farmer?" In answering that question I stand upon the broad basis of the Constitution of the United States, which has never authorized you or your predecessors to pick out any single class of the community for the purpose of doing something for them, good, bad, or indifferent.

It is our duty to say to the farmer, as we must say to all other classes of the population: The Constitution and the laws of this Government do not empower us to single you out and to make laws in your favor, thus discriminating against the rest of the people.

The Government of these United States was instituted to protect all its citizens alike, and to grant special privileges to no class.

Farmers, like laborers or merchants, are to be equally protected in the pursuit of their calling, but the Government can not interfere either to favor or to discriminate against any one portion of the community.

Instances of laws such as are proposed in this bill have been of frequent occurrence, and it may be instructive to cite a few of them.

In England the government attempted to do something for the wheat-growers and the producers of farm products generally. The British corn laws, which were in existence from about 1814 to 1846, were enacted. They went in the same direction in which my friend from Missouri desires to go; that is, in the direction of raising the price of cereals for the benefit of the producer; and I may be permitted to say, with all due respect to the gentleman from Missouri, in a more methodical manner, for they actually succeeded in doing what the gentleman with the present legislation will never accomplish.

According to the corn law of 1828 the normal price of 66 shillings per quarter for wheat was adopted, and, starting with this price, an import duty of 1 shilling was levied. Then for every shilling of decline in the price of wheat, that is, when the wheat threatened to become too cheap to the laboring population of England, the benevolent, paternal, and maternal government of the British Isles added an additional shilling to the import duty, so that it should not sink below the price of 66 shillings. But whenever the price inland rose, the government deducted a much larger proportion of the duty; so that the system of British laws from 1814 to 1846 was a system such as the gentlemen who favor this bill must unquestionably desire—which encouraged the highest possible price for that which is most necessary to all the people of any community, to wit, food.

This is not all, Mr. Chairman, of the follies of legislation of this kind of which history tells us. In the reign of Charles II a bill was passed which enacted:

> Whereas it is necessary to encourage the woolen industry in the United Kingdom: Therefore,
> Be it enacted, From this time forward that every corpse buried in the United Kingdom shall be covered with a woolen shroud.

And this law was actually enforced in Great Britain. It failed of the desired effect, because, while the inhabitant of England was bound by the law to either bury his dead in wool or go to jail himself, the effect was that the dead wore the wool and the living did without it.

The woolgrowers and wool manufacturers found that their product was no more in use when the dead wore it than when the living wore it; and, as a consequence, in the reign of George I, another act of this character, another "antioption act," was passed in England in which, by a fine of £5, every person was prohibited from wearing garments made of calico, in order to encourage the silk and woolen industry; and a fine of £25 was imposed on anybody who had the hardihood to sell a cotton garment.

None of these laws had the effect which was intended, because the natural law of which the gentleman speaks in his report, the law of supply and demand, is one against which no body of legislators can effectually legislate. It is as immutable as the sun itself; it is as unchangeable as the motion of the earth; and you may legislate from now until the crack of doom, you can no more change the law of supply and demand than you can change the laws of gravity or of hydrostatics. If this bill has any foundation on the reasons advanced by the committee, I expect within a short time to see the gentleman from Missouri, or some other gentleman, propose a bill entitled "A bill to remove friction," in order that the law of gravity may have full and fair play.

Let me read to the gentlemen on this subject what a man with whose personal acquaintance I was honored, a man who, alas! within the last few months has passed to his grave, respected and honored by everyone who knew him, said upon this subject. I read from Trumbull's work, The Free Trade Struggle in England:

The English laws are full of vain and mischievous attempts to make rivers run up hill, to divert moral science from its principles, and make the beneficent streams of trade and manufactures flow the wrong way. They failed, as such attempts must ever fail. They gave to certain special classes an artificial prosperity, but this prosperity was abstracted from the community at large. The belief in witchcraft was accompanied by the kindred superstition that "government" always kept on hand a large surplus of prosperity created by itself, which it could ladle out at pleasure to help destitute people, professions, and trades. It was not then known in England, as it is not yet known in America, that "government" can create nothing; and that if it pours a cupful of prosperity upon this trade or that one, it must dip it up from the common fund of prosperity created by the labor of all the rest of the people. There is positively no bounty, help, or endowment having a money value, that government can give to one without taking it from others.

But, Mr. Chairman, look upon this subject from the broad ground of law, right, and the Constitution—and in speaking of the Constitution I disavow being one of those whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania characterized yesterday as "strict constructionists." I desire the Constitution of this country to be construed in the manner in which it shall be most beneficial to all of the people, but with a due regard to every factor in the well-balanced machinery of our Government, giving to Federal authority all necessary powers, and reserving to the States and the people all others.

Where does Congress then obtain its right to legislate for one portion of the community? Where does Congress obtain its right to single out the farmer and say to him, "We take thee under our protecting arms," leaving by the wayside all the others. I ask you gentlemen, if you concede, as is argued in the report accompanying this bill, that it is within the province of government to relieve the producer of farm products from destructive competition, why is it not equally within the province of Congress, and why is it not your bounden duty to relieve from such competition—destructive competition—other tradesmen, professional men, workingmen? And have you done it, or have you attempted to do it; or is there a question in the mind of anyone that such destructive competition exists?

Look upon the small tradesman. In the large cities of this country he has become almost an unknown factor. Why? Because the centralization of capital affords the larger merchant such facilities that the small merchant is driven out of every mart. It is because larger capital affords such enhanced power that the smaller merchant can not survive. Is this, or is it not, destructive competition; and if it is, ought you, or ought you not, to legislate in favor of the small merchant, as you attempt to do in favor of the farmer?

Take the instance of the laboring man. You speak of destructive competition. What more destructive competition can there be than has arisen within the last century in the development of labor-saving machinery, which has driven out of a thousand places the laboring man who theretofore did by the work of his hands what is now done by machinery? Take one instance, which will illustrate a thousand others. In the printing trade within a few years the introduction of typesetting machinery has displaced a countless number of printers. I need but say to you that one machine does the work of from five to twelve typesetters to show you that this machine is the most destructive competitor to labor. If you establish the principle that you may protect from competition, legislate against the use of this machine; or is labor less entitled to protection at the hands of this body than is the farmer?

If it is within your power to protect against competition, I call upon you in the interest of the laboring population in America to shield them from the ever-growing competition which makes the struggle for life severer from day to day for the workingman.

And lest I should be accused of too great an amount of disinterestedness let me plead to you for my fellow-members of the legal profession. Competition, ever growing competition, oppresses us lawyers as well as any other class of the community. The laws, however, leave us to our own merits and exertions, and in this profession, as in every other one, the law of the survival of the fittest prevails, and those who can not swim must sink.

There is but one true principle, there is but one guiding star for legislation, and it is this, that the scope of legislation must ever be confined to those matters which, by the people and by the Constitution, have been transferred to the legislators and are within their power. You must see that this Government can not enter into the business of relieving anyone from competition, because each class of the population is entitled to the same right under our laws as any other.

When the tariff question was under discussion gentlemen had arisen and again and again promised to the farmer that they would do something for him. They have shown the farmer what they would do in the future, and the promise has never been kept. The promise never can be kept under our laws and never will be kept, and I wish but to warn Democrats upon this floor from following in the footsteps of the Republican party, which has forever made empty promises to the farmer, to the laboring man, to every class of the community, and has kept those promises but to one class, to those upon whom by legislation they conferred a monopoly, to the detriment of the people at large.

But another view of the bill at issue. It is conceded by every one who has spoken in favor of this measure, and is advanced as one of the reasons for it, that the fall in prices of commodities is to be provided against, that by legislation you are to stop another natural law, which is the gradual and inevitable fall of the price of commodities.

Suppose that this were within the province of Congress, I will point out to you the way to impede the fall of prices of commodities. Destroy your agricultural machinery, lay waste one-half of the land now under cultivation. Destroy your shipping, destroy your means of transportation, and then possibly you can arrest that which by legislation in the present age you will never arrest, and which you ought not to arrest, namely, the continuous gradual decline in prices.

Can gentlemen be so blind as to fail to see that every improvement which is wrought in labor-saving machinery; that every ship which sails the waterways; that every new avenue of transportation; that everything which human genius has developed has but one single, solitary aim and object, and that is the lowering of the prices of commodities, so as to bring them within the reach of a larger number of the people. You can not stop that. You will not stop that. Legislation has not and never will stop it. It is as inevitable as the rising of the sun in the morning. It is as inevitable as the flow of the water.

And, gentlemen, upon this point let me ask you who that has paid any attention to the study of political economy will find in the gradual decline of prices aught that is not to be hailed with joy? I do not mean a fall caused by irregularities like panics, but the gradual decline which comes from improved methods of production. If I say to you to-day that the food supply of the world, as I will show in a minute, is almost triple what it was forty years ago, what does that mean? It means that your poor man is better fed, it means that your laborer has at his disposal more food than he had before. It means, in one word, that he has more of enjoyment and happiness, more of pleasure, more of life than he has with high-priced food, which means less food.

The price of food determines a number of matters of which we little dream. You speak of lack of education as influencing crime. I say to you that the price of wheat has to-day and at all times had more influence upon crime than the lack or existence of education has or ever had or ever will have.

Let me give you one proof among numbers culled from the statistics of the world. I read from Kolb's Condition of Nations, on the influence of scarcity upon the amount of crime.

THE INFLUENCE OF SCARCITY UPON THE AMOUNT OF CRIME.

In 1846 the number of persons in France arreseted for theft was	31,768
In 1847 (the year of famine) the number rose to	41,626
In 1848 the number fell to	30,000
In 1834 the number of imprisonments for crime in England was	22,451
In 1835 and 1836 a marked decrease was experienced. The price of corn fell and work and wages became at the same period more plentiful.
In 1837 price of corn rose, and the number of prisoners amounted to	25,051
In 1837 to 1841 high prices continued and trade depressed, when the number rose to	31,309
In 1842–1846, Peel's reform in taxation. Wheat at 54 a quarter, imprisonments oscillated between	24,000 and 25,000
In 1847, a commercial crisis was accompanied by a rise to	28,838
In 1848 the commercial crisis continued and was accompanied by a further rise to	30,249

By the abolition of the corn laws and cheapness of provision the number was stationary, notwithstanding the increase of population, but in 1853 wheat, at 53*s.* per quarter, the number of prisoners fell to 27,057; 1854 wheat, at 72*s.* per quarter, the number of prisoners rose to 29,359.

Dr. Mayer found that in Bavaria during twenty-five years, that for about every rise by 2*d.* of the price of a bushel of rye there was one more theft per 100,000 inhabitants; and on the other hand, that for every fall by 2*d.* there was one theft less, in the same number of people.

In Cis-Leithania (Austria) the criminal statistics show that in 1871 the number of persons convicted were 21,620, of whom the number utterly without means were 18,820; of those in possession of small means, 2,637; of those well to do, only 163.

Although the possession of means alone may not make men better morally, yet, without doubt, want leads to the commission of acts which society ranks as criminal and must punish.

In like manner the quantity of food—in other words, its cheapness—exerts its influence on the people's health, as shown by the mortality statistics. Its influence can be traced in the morals of every people, and every symptom of the well-being or otherwise of the people of any nation will be found in the statistics to be indissolubly linked with the question of how plentiful or otherwise is its food supply.

Mr. MARSH. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GOLDZIER. With the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. MARSH. Does he think that this bill will have the effect of raising the price of food?

Mr. GOLDZIER. I do not think it will. I think it will have no effect at all. I am not speaking of raising the price of food; I am speaking of the effect which the promoters of this bill claim it will have.

Mr. MARSH. And that effect, you think, will be a bad one?

Mr. GOLDZIER. Yes, sir; and in thinking it will be a bad one, let me state to my colleague I am not alone, and that this is no new idea of mine. Throughout English legislation, upon which our laws are based, you find what? You will find that the law prevents, not combinations to lower the price of food, but at all times it prevents, or has prevented, combinations to raise the price of food.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. Except from '14 to '46?

Mr. GOLDZIER. Except from '14 to '46, when the Government raised the price of food.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. That was by legislation, of course.

Mr. MARSH. May I ask my colleague does he think this bill would reduce the price of food?

Mr. GOLDZIER. No, sir.

Mr. MARSH. Then the question of the price of food hereafter is eliminated from this discussion.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Yes, sir; except that I am meeting the arguments, the sham arguments, advanced in favor of this bill. I say it is absolutely untrue that this bill will affect the price of food, the price of grain, or the price of the articles of merchandise mentioned in it one way or the other.

I say that it is not true, and I want to prevent these arguments from going out uncontradicted to the farmer, who seems to be considered by the gentlemen who advance such arguments as the most unenlightened being extant. I wish to prevent him from being humbugged by such reasoning.

Throughout common-law legislation we have had provisions against forestalling, regrating, and engrossing—terms which are defined as follows:

> Forestalling: Buying or contracting for merchandise or victual on its way to market; dissuading persons from bringing their goods or provisions there, or persuading them to enchance the price when there; any of which practices makes the market dear to the fair dealer.

Forestalling has been prohibited and is prohibited by the law in every State in this Union, the laws of which are based on the common law system. Regrating and engrossing are similar offenses at common law aimed at the same attempts to raise price of cereals.

So the gentlemen will see that throughout the legislation, from the time when the Peruvian Government under the Incas, bought all the corn of the country and made the raising of corn a monopoly of the Government, to the present time the policy of the Government has been steadily not to raise the price for the benefit of the farmer, not to raise the price in order that the farmer might reap a larger harvest, but to keep the price at such a point where it will be most accessible to the majority of the people of all classes.

Pleas have been made to you with tearful eyes. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] has plead to you for the poor farmer. Conceding the farmer to be suffering, conceding that the price of corn and the prices of farm products have fallen so as to make farming unprofitable, let me plead to you for the poor laborer, let me plead to you for him who is not a producer of food, but who must necessarily and at all times be the chief consumer of these farm products.

Mr. MARSH. If this bill does not affect the price of food, wherein is it necessary to plead for the laborer?

Mr. GOLDZIER. Let me say to my colleague once more that I am taking up the arguments, if they can be called arguments, which have been advanced here for this bill. I say that this bill does not and will not affect the prices of food. What I am arguing against is the intention. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] yesterday, in answer to a question which I put to him directly, "Do you consider the falling of the prices of victuals as a blessing or otherwise?" said: "No; if I had my way, I would raise the prices of victuals as high as I could."

Mr. MARSH. Then, if I understand my colleague correctly, he is not talking against what is in this bill, but is simply criticising what somebody has said on this floor.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Yes, sir. If I were to attack what is in this bill I would have to take up the old fight of Don Quixote against the windmills, for there is nothing tangible in this bill: there is nothing here to fight against except the utterances of the advocates of this bill.

Mr. MARSH. Then, if the bill is so perfectly harmless that the gentleman can find nothing in it to attack, why not let it go?

Mr. GOLDZIER. The bill is perfectly harmless, but I will tell the gentleman why I will not let it go. I will not let this bill go because, when I took my seat in this House, I raised up my hand and swore to support the Constitution of the United States as I understood it. Therefore I attack this bill, although it is harmless, because to my mind, and I think to the mind of anyone who can read as he runs, this proposed legislation is unconstitutional and is an interference with the sacred rights of the States. For that reason, and for none other, I attack this bill.

Mr. MARSH. May I ask my colleague if harmless legislation is unconstitutional?

Mr. GOLDZIER. Most unquestionably it may be. This legislation is harmless from a number of points of view. It is harmless because if you get it on the statute book you will never enforce it. It is harmless because it will be a dead letter; but it is not harmless from the one point of view from which I am now regarding it, because it proposes an enlargement of the powers of the Federal Government which is not warranted by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MARSH. I do not want to interrupt my colleague. I am interested in his remarks and am listening to him for the purpose of gaining information. He says that this bill is perfectly harmless, because it can not be enforced.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARSH. Now, if the law can be enforced, will it then be harmless?

Mr. GOLDZIER. It would be harmless if it could be enforced. It would hurt a few gamblers, about whom I do not care. It might close the boards of trade and drive out a few merchants, who would have to go into some other business; but, as far as the welfare of the people at large is concerned, this legislation would be perfectly harmless. I can not agree with my friend from New York or with my colleague from Chicago that the grain trade would come to an end if you should pass this bill. I think the boards of trade would be hampered in their business, and I think the farmers would find themselves worse off than they are now, because, as there would be fewer buyers, there would be a less demand for their products, and the prices of those products would be unduly lowered.

Mr. MARSH. Then my colleague thinks this legislation would do harm to the farmer?

Mr. GOLDZIER. I rather fear so; but that does not concern me. The injury done to the farmer would not be serious, if compared with the greater harm involved in the violation of the principles upon which our Government is based. But, be it harmless or otherwise, we are here for the purpose of passing such laws as the Constitution of the United States authorizes us to pass. Now, I believe that the Constitution of this Government will have to undergo changes from time to time. I think the time is coming when certain questions relating to the distribution of wealth and other matters will have to be provided for or against by the Constitution of the United States.

Those changes will come. Whether they will be inscribed on the pages of history in letters of blood and iron, as was the fourteenth amendment, or whether they will come peaceably, I can not tell. But against one method of changing the Constitution, however, I do most solemnly protest. I protest against a change of the Constitution by Congress. This House has no power to enlarge the scope of the Federal Government. To this House was never given the authority to change or enlarge the powers of the Federal Government so as to bring within those powers matters which heretofore have been foreign to them. Upon the question as to whether this proposed legislation is constitutional or otherwise, let me ask the gentleman this—and I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to this point, because he may be interested in it later—suppose I were to offer this amendment to the bill:

> Whereas it is necessary to raise revenue and whereas the Congress of the United States has resolved to relieve the producer of agricultural products of the destructive competition to which he is now subject by reason of the offering of fiat products and further for the purpose of restoring to the law of supply and demand its free action, which has been destroyed by the practice of short selling, and in order that market quotations may be determined by the offerings of real products by the owners of the same, and further to prevent the overloading of the domestic markets and the breaking down of prices of farm products and to relieve the farming population and restore their prosperity and to restore an honest market for farm products: Therefore be it enacted, etc.

And then let the law follow. Do you believe that any court which might consider the constitutionality of this measure would pass upon a law framed like that, and say that the objects which you have mentioned in the report, but which you are too cowardly to mention in the bill itself, are legitimate objects of legislation. If this law is constitutional, here is the test of it. If this law is constitutional, then have the courage of your convictions, be they good or bad, and say in the law what you are saying upon this floor, what the true objects of this bill are.

But, Mr. Chairman, assume now for the sake of the argument that it is a proper object of legislation to prevent the fall of prices: let me point out to you, as far as agricultural products and food products are concerned, what brings about this fall of prices. I quote now from Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics. In the first place, I refer to the increase of population within a given period. In 1845 the population of the world was 1,009,000,000; in 1886 the population of the world was 1,483,000,000. Thus, the population within the years mentioned—a period about forty years—and more especially the period to which these gentlemen refer when they speak of the rise of the option business, increased 474,000,000.

Now, let us see to what extent the agricultural products of the world have increased. The aggregate amount of agricultural products in 1840 was 4,119,000,000 bushels; in 1887 the aggregate amount was 9,122,000,000. Thus we see that with 474,000,000 increase of population since 1840, we have more than double the amount of agricultural products for consumption that was formerly consumed by a population of the world of 1,009,000,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. Have you any statements as to the wheat product?

Mr. GOLDZIER. I will come to that.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Whenever the gentleman reaches a point where it will not interrupt him, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. GOLDZIER. I will answer the gentleman's inquiry with great pleasure.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I understood the gentleman to say awhile ago that Congress had no power to control sales in this way.

Mr. GOLDZIER. What I said was that Congress has no power to relieve the producer of agricultural products from destructive competition; and I ask the gentleman as a lawyer whether Congress has such power?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Does it not come under the same head as the bank tax?

Mr. GOLDZIER. No, sir.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Or the oleomargarine bill?

Mr. GOLDZIER. I have never considered the oleomargarine bill constitutional; and I may say that I am in good company in this position.

Mr. STOCKDALE. How as to the bank tax?

Mr. GOLDZIER. I consider the bank tax as constitutional because the Government has power to regulate the volume of the currency; and according to the construction of the Supreme Court of the United States the power exercised in imposing a bank tax is incidental to that of regulating the currency.

But I return to the question of food products. Mulhall says on page 6:

> In forty-eight years the area of tillage and planting has risen 65 per cent, but the crops have risen 120 per cent. Improved implements and machinery have made tillage more productive and grain cheaper. In 1840 each peasant produced about 73 bushels of grain; in 1860, 87 bushels, and in 1887, 114 bushels.

Need you go further in order to find the reason for the fall of prices when you find that within thirty-seven years two men can produce as much as was produced by three before? And coming to our own country, we find existing in the United States the highest development that has existed anywhere in the world so far as raising the greatest amount of products out of the soil is concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. That is a mistake.

Mr. GOLDZIER. To what extent this factor has been of importance can be best shown by the fact that 9,000,000 of agriculturists in America produce in grain an amount equal to the production of 66,000,000 people in Europe and Asia.

Mr. MARSH. Does not my colleage forget that the two men he speaks of cost more money now than the three men did at the period he has referred to?

Mr. GOLDZIER. I am not speaking of that, because it cuts no figure. I am speaking of the amount produced, irrespective of price; for the amount of production compared with the possible demand influences the price almost without regard to the cost of production.

Mr. MARSH. It has something to do with the cost of production.

Mr. GOLDZIER. I am not speaking of the cost of production. I am speaking of the production itself, not the cost of it. What does it show? It shows that production has tremendously increased; that it has increased entirely out of proportion to the increase in population; and then, even if you admit, as it must be admitted, that the man of to-day, owing to the cheapness of the product, consumes a much larger proportion of it than the man of former years, even then we have manifestly a tremendous surplus as compared with that of former years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is legitimate to stop the fall of prices I say to you, and I challenge contradiction of the assertion, as long as you do not stop increased production so long the fall in prices will progress. Unless you can stop the creation of a surplus the fall in prices will continue; and as long as you can not and do not legislate against better means of production, so long must the increased production continually go on and produce its legitimate result, the fall in prices. If that time shall ever arrive in the history of legislation when you can legislate an impossibility—that is, when you can legislate against the inevitable law of supply and demand, then you can raise or lower prices at will irrespective of the amount of production. But no one—no Congress—can ever do that.

It is clear that the law of supply and demand, against which you can not legislate, is a law with which you can not interfere, and which takes its course irrespective of what this or any other Congress may do. So long as that law continues you must admit that legislation of this kind has no place even if it could accomplish the object sought.

But to recur again to what I started to say. Is anyone here so bold, is anyone so blind to the facts of history and of political economy, as to announce as a doctrine that the cheapening of products of all kinds is not and always has been and always will be of benefit to mankind?

Suppose your prices of paper to-day were what they were two hundred years ago, where would be your education and civilization? Suppose your prices of other necessaries of life, suppose your prices of wool, for instance, of to-day, and of clothing, were what they were one hundred or two hundred years ago, what would be the condition of our people? What would be the condition of our workingmen were it not for the cheapening, and the continued cheapening, of prices? While I am on this point let me read to you what a distinguished statesman has said upon the question of the price of the food supply. Mr. Richard Cobden says:

> Sir, I shall leave office, I fear, with a name severely censured by many honorable gentlemen who, on pubic principle, deeply regret the severance of party ties; I shall surrender power severely censured, I fear again, by many honorable gentlemen who, from no interested motive, have adhered to the principle of protection as important to the welfare and interests of the country; I shall leave a name execrated by every monopolist who, from less honorable motives, maintains protection for his own individual benefit; but it may be that I shall leave a name sometimes remembered with expressions of good will in those places which are the abode of men whose lot it is to labor and to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow—a name remembered with expressions of good will when they shall recreate their exhausted strength with abundant and untaxed food, the sweeter because it is no longer leavened by a sense of injustice.

And so I say to you that if the object of this bill could be attained, if food and food products could be raised in prices to the farmer, they would be made by just so much dearer to the consumer. Every dollar you give the farmer as an enhanced price means tears, deprivation, and starvation to the man who is required to purchase those food products, and for whom a greater price means less food.

In the very outstart and beginning of his section on food, Mr. Mulhall, who is fully abreast of this question, says:

> The food supply of the civilized nations (that is, Europe, the United States, the British Colonies, etc.) has increased during the nineteenth century faster than population; which shows that the material welfare of mankind has advanced in its most important particular.

Who will deny that the man who is able to buy 4 pounds of bread is better off materially and is a happier man in every respect than the man whose means permit him to buy but 2 pounds? It may be prosaic; it may lack all of the ideal; but you can not deny the fact that the happiness of mankind is, after all, primarily dependent upon the stomach; that with an empty stomach you can educate your laborer as much as you please; you can raise your pauper mentally as much as you please, yet with an empty stomach he will be still unhappy. I believe it is Herbert Spencer who says that the man who makes two blades of grain grow where one grew before is the greatest benefactor of mankind.

From whichever standpoint you may look upon this proposed legislation it seems vicious; but whether it accomplishes its object or not, it is a violation of the Constitution and an unwarranted interference in private rights and into the sovereignty of the States.

So plain, so palpable is this violation of the Constitution, that among all the apologists for this law I have yet to find the first one with hardihood sufficient so assert its constitutionality without reserve or proviso.

In conclusion let me say that I listened devoutly and devotedly yesterday to my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY], and I gloried when the gentleman announced as his religion his adherence to the United States. I join you, my friend. I can worship in the same church; I can bend my knee at the same altar. But let me call your attention to one thing. The Christian church has its Bible; the Mohammedan church has its Koran; the Jewish church has its Pentateuch. The church of the United States, to which we jointly belong, has its sacred writ, and that sacred writ is the Constitution. If I worship with you within that church, I want to do so according to the dictates of that Constitution. I can not enter that church with you as some do, having first used the Constitution as a mat to wipe my feet upon. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, there is but one excellent feature in this bill. That is to say, the intention of this bill, in that it proposes to prevent wrongdoing, is not to be criticised; but on every other ground this bill is open to criticism.

In the first place, our fathers in their genius and in their wisdom established a nation composed of various States, and they protected with the greatest care the rights of the States. Mr. Chairman, in the development of civilization there arise many conditions which they could not in the nature of the case anticipate, and whenever any new condition demands new legislation, and it can not by any possibility be accomplished by the States, I am in favor of stepping to the very verge of the powers conferred upon the National Government by the Constitution to accomplish a beneficent purpose.

But wherever the States can accomplish an end, as fully and as thoroughly as the United States Government, any interference by the General Government is a trenching upon one of the wisest provisions of the Constitution, that is to say, that "all powers not clearly granted to the General Government are retained by the States." And if there was no other reason, and this law was in every respect proper and desirable, but its objects could be accomplished by the States as well, I certainly would vote against it.

Again, and in objection to this bill, it is not enough that there are evils, to our imagination or to our judgment, to justify a law. It must be shown that the evils it is proposed to remedy overbalance the good. It must be shown that in plucking the tares from the field we do not injure the wheat an hundredfold more than the wheat would be injured if the tares and the wheat grew together until the harvest. This bill, in its very nature, will do incalculable damage to the business interests of this country. Why, I suppose that, if it were possible for us, we would eradicate all damage that rains may do by restricting rain, and with our limited vision we would abolish electricity from the atmosphere because of its objectionable features.

We would abolish all children's diseases by a unanimous vote here and now in the House; but who knows that it would be safe? It seems as though the moment a child was brought into the world all nature struggled to kill it, and that only the strongest and healthiest survive. Is that humane to our narrow vision?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Would not the gentleman's idea be to abolish quarantines, then?

Mr. WALKER. Well, I am talking seriously, and the gentleman must excuse me from trifling. The evils proposed to be reached and eradicated by this law are infinitesimal in proportion to the advantages that are accomplished to every man, woman, and child in the community by the excellent things which this law would suppress in attempting to destroy the bad.

I do not propose to go into and describe all the conditions of this speculative business. There is no occasion for anything further being said upon them than was said so admirably by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER], who, in my judgment, made one of the clearest, most concise, and able speeches that has been made on this floor in this Congress, if, indeed, a more able one has been heard in any Congress upon subjects kindred to this.

WEALTH ACCUMULATES, BUT MEN DO NOT, THEREFORE, DECAY.

I have noticed that every gentleman who is slow and sluggish to accomplish anything in this world is familiar with and will recite to you Æsop's fable of the frog and the snail. I have noticed also that all Socialists, Communists, Nihilists, Bellamists, and Henry Georgists treasure and are ever repeating to you the lines of Goldsmith:

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

They always have that at their tongue's end. Who ever knew men to decay because wealth accumulated? Who ever knew a country to prosper except by the accumulation of wealth? How are men to have more wealth unless it first exists that it may be divided among them?

These lines are all very acceptable in their jingle, but never were statements uttered that were in their import more utterly false and baneful. The gentleman of the Northwest [Mr. BRYAN], the "Robespierre of the Northwest," more than any man I ever before knew in public life, tells us that "speculation is gambling," and that the farmer is injured by the buying and selling of futures, and by all speculating in grain. Mr. Chairman, the average price of September, October, and November wheat in Chicago, for the five years from 1889 to 1893, inclusive, averaged 88⅜ cents per bushel.

In the same years the average for May wheat was only 81⅛ cents, so that the loss in buying wheat in the fall when the farmers sold their wheat, or would naturally sell it if they were good business men, if it had been carried by them until the next May, there would have been a loss to them of 7 cents a bushel. And this will average to be the case in any series of twenty years.

HOW THE CROPS ARE SOLD.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the farmers throughout this country sell their crops when they mature. I care not in what business it is, as it is a truth as to all business, that if you buy when you need a thing to consume rather than attempt to anticipate in speculation, you will thus average to make a considerable percentage more money. Any business man who has watched business operations for twenty years knows that to be true.

And it is also a fact that the farmers of the country have received in the last five years, for all the wheat that has been carried beyond the 1st of May, 7 cents more than its normal price.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to maintain a price level from year to year on agricultural products except by having a large amount of capital devoted to speculation in them. Excepting from the immense bodies of capital that are devoted wholly and exclusively to carrying those products year in and year out, prices would ruinously fluctuate. And yet it is a matter of history that in the average, taking all the men engaged in it and averaging what they make and lose, as was said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER], they average to lose in a series of years a very considerable percentage of their capital.

Not only are these crops carried for the farmers without interest charges, practically, but they are carried on a loss of capital to those who carry them. Now, if this is a fact, and it is incontestably true—if this is a fact, I say, why should there be any law hindering buying and selling in any form that men may elect to do it in.

Gentlemen, if what I have said to you thus far is true, you must give the opponents of this bill the case here and now; and if it is not true, dispute it now and prove it untrue. Ask me any question, or you may make any statement you choose here and now, if you contest the points I make. Ah, but my friend from the Northwest [Mr. BRYAN] says that "no one has any moral right to affect the prices, either up or down." Moral right to affect prices! No purchase or sale, made before the product is actually needed for consumption, can be made without "affecting the prices, either up or down." His restriction is absolutely uneconomic.

THE SPECULATORS DISTRIBUTE ACCUMULATED WEALTH.

Furthermore, as I have said, these speculators practically distribute accumulated wealth. The laws of the universe hold in the action of man, seemingly erratic though such action may be, seemingly dependent upon the man alone, without other influence, they hold as firmly as they do in geology and chemistry and electricity or anything else. All nature struggles to distribute wealth. "Verily riches take to themselves wings and fly away." In economics the office of the speculator is to distribute accumulated wealth.

I remember a man of my acquaintance who went into Wall street to speculate with $7,000,000 that he had accumulated in business. Five years afterwards he came into my office having on an old pair of rubber shoes and exceedingly poor clothes, with a cloth traveling bag in his hand to sell me machine needles, and he gratefully thanked me for a little purchase I made that he might be able to buy a dinner. I hold that not one man in a hundred who goes into Wall street comes out without there leaving his fortune, and the economic result, whatever may be the moral result, is that that property is finally distributed pro rata among the masses of the people.

In all my business life I have bought before the thing existed even as "raw material" that the man from whom I purchased could buy, and during all my business life in New England, although still in business in Chicago, all my manufacturing in New England, my sales were only once a year, and when that product of a million and a half was sold I did not own $200,000 of it at the time. Of course, I had to insure myself in "futures." You are restricting legitimate business at its very foundation in this bill.

The very foundation and fundamental principle of lowest possible economic production is struck at, because this bill strikes at all the "insurance of business," and keeps the legitimate business man of the community and all the capitalists from engaging in legitimate business. If the principle of this bill were carried out you would shut up the production of consumable wealth to those men only who are actually and personally engaged in production and to only the capital that they themselves own. Why, my friend from the Northwest [Mr. BRYAN] talks about "leaving farmers alone." "Leave my farmers alone!" he exclaims. I would like to ask him who are "my farmers?" All the famine and pestilence in India is when "farmers are left alone."

No advances on the crops to be gathered anywhere in from two to twelve months can be had, hence comes famine and pestilence in India. Whence famine and pestilence in Ireland, where the population was reduced from 8,000,000 to some over 4,000,000? Because the farmer in Ireland had no speculator to sell "futures" on his crop not yet made, when he was short of funds. Men frequently borrow money on a crop a year ahead of its being gathered. I know, from practical experience before the civil war, that the crop gathered paid debts a year old all through the South.

We sold to Southern merchants before the war on "twelve months" with scarcely an exception, and the merchants took longer "futures" of the planters. My friend of the Northwest [Mr. BRYAN], for he represents no narrow State field, says that "the raising or the lowering of the price of farm products is burglary." This is communism, socialism, almost anarchism, when you reduce it to its last analysis. He does not "want the prices of his farmers' products increased by speculation;" he "wants nothing added to their prices and nothing taken from them by speculation." Then he wants to banish his farmers back to as miserable a condition as the farmers of the world were in two hundred years ago.

HIGHER WAGES, CHEAPER PRODUCTS.

Again, it has been said by one of the sharpest farmers on this floor, judging from what I know of him, that "it costs as much to produce a bushel of wheat, a bushel of corn, or a bushel of oats to-day as it ever cost." Then why your horse-power mowers, rakes, hoes, gang-plows, harvesters, and reapers? Why do you have them, if "it costs just as much as it ever did" to raise your crops? He says it is because they can do more with these machines. Of course they can "do more," and what does that mean? That means higher wages.

I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to this committee, that higher wages means immensely improved appliances and they mean cheaper products. Higher wages also mean cheaper land. Higher wages cheapen everything. I know a farm which sold for $3,000 thirty years ago, the one hired man that was needed to work on it receiving $12 a month and board; but that farm is to-day not worth more than $1,200, because the one hired man who is needed upon it gets $20 a month and board, and the difference of $8 between paying $12 a month and $20 a month makes the difference between the former price of that farm and its present price. Will you stop advancing civilization for that reason? Is there any other way given among men that all men can even "tend" to faring alike?

NATURE STRUGGLES TO ENFORCE THE GOLDEN RULE.

I want to say to you again that all nature in economics struggles to make all men obey the golden rule. Whatever may be the motives that actuate the man, whether with wicked hands or with beneficent purpose he touches production, the economic result is practical obedience to the golden rule in helping his fellow to wages. It is beyond all controversy that, except cotton, all other products of the farm and field can be produced for just about half the work in hours that it took to produce them fifty years ago. No man can successfully and truthfully contradict that proposition.

Now, if men receive double or treble in higher wages and cheaper products than they received forty or fifty years ago, then it comes to this, that that great economic law which commands and controls us all has given to the man at the bottom all the advantage of these improvements. And will you Democrats change that if you can, you "superexcellent professors" of love for the dear people? We Republicans on this side of the House will not change it; will you? Again, when you raise wheat, or corn, or oats, or hay, for half the former cost you raise horses and beef and pork and sheep for half the former cost, because they are but the secondary products of those other things that can now be produced for half in hours of labor.

Whether you get out of your ground brick from its clay, coal or ore from its mines, or grain, all represent wages and wages only. It may be that it is the generation before that has furnished a fractional part of the wages, it may be the second generation back, but in its last analysis it is all wages without deduction, without subtraction.

VARY THE CROPS.

There is only one chance for higher prices of wheat and cotton than you are now getting, that is that they shall be relatively to all the crops less in amount. There is a bright future for cotton districts, because wheat and corn and oats and hogs and beeves you can raise as well as cotton, but the Northwest must be confined to some new product, sugar, wool, etc., for it can not enter upon your cotton fields.

You gentlemen of the South have been advised by your leaders and statesmen, as I have observed ever since I have read the papers or read the writings of your able leading men before my time, to vary your crops to mixed farming. Do you know that the statistics show that only 2 per cent of the farm mortgages that are foreclosed are foreclosed on those that have a variety of crops, and that 98 per cent of the mortgages foreclosed are foreclosed upon farms devoted to one crop only? In passing let me say that the statistics further show that only 20 per cent of the farm mortgages maturing have been foreclosed in the last year that were foreclosed on an average ten years preceding.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to devote the balance of my time to statistical arguments.

ARGENTINE WHEAT IS TAKING THE PLACE OF OURS.

	Cents.
May 10, its price in Liverpool, June delivery	59.4
In Chicago, June delivery	57
Freight to Liverpool	9.1
	66.1
Chicago price above Liverpool	6.7

Showing that wheat in Chicago was 6.7 cents above its normal Liverpool price. It was put above the normal price only by the speculators investing in it capital which was not the capital of those who handled it as merchants or manufacturers. This simple statement of fact, if I had begun and closed with it, would demand the vote against this bill of every man in this House.

Ah, but I am told by gentlemen here that their constituents want this bill; that the conventions that nominated them and sent them to this House passed resolutions demanding it. I say you nay, gentlemen. I tell you one and all that the man does not sit on this floor whose constituents "want this bill," or whose convention has passed resolutions commanding him to "vote for this bill" in any other than a technical sense. What your constituents demand, gentlemen, are results, and I say for myself—I do not say it for you—that I should be unworthy of a place upon this floor if, when I found that any legislation would injure my constituents, I did not vote against that legislation, whatever their technical instructions might have been, and explain my action afterwards and reconquer their good opinion in proving to them that the particular measure they demanded would defeat the end they sought.

As I have done once before, I again call attention to glorious Joe McKenna, of California, as we called him here, now Judge McKenna. The convention nominating him passed resolutions for the free coinage of silver, and his constituents were unanimous for it, but he told them he did not believe in it and that he should vote against it. I am not saying whether he was right or wrong on that question; I am merely directing attention to his conscience and honest independence, and I say to you, gentlemen, that our constituents respect us more when we are courageously wrong than when we are timidly, meanly right, and are proud of us when courageously right. Down deep in their souls they can not but have a contempt for us if we would put our hands to anything our conscience disapproves as we are given light to see it.

I prefer to have the respect of one man than of all the world besides. Convince my judgment, and you shall have my vote; failing in that you will not, if everyone of my constituents desires the action you propose. All constituencies demand results; methods they rightly leave to their representatives.

Now, let us look at this matter a little. I tell you, farmers of the United States, it behooves you to consider your position now as you have never done before since our fathers landed on these shores.

EXPORTS OF STAPLES.

By appendix A, which I will print with this speech, you will see the average shipment of 1893 of cattle, corn, cotton, fish, and fruit, as compared with the average five years before, was $55,000,000 less; and in 1893 it was less than in 1892 by $43,500,000; and including mineral oils, crude and manufactured, and dairy products, the shipments were $64,000,000 less than the average of the five previous years, and $46,000,000 less than in 1892.

EXPORTS OF WHEAT.

Now, look at wheat in Appendix B. Why, sir, in the three months of January, February, and March last we shipped 7,500,000 bushels less than we did in the same months in 1893, and the Argentine Republic, Chile, British India, Russia, and minor countries shipped 7,000,000 more.

INCREASE IN FARM PRODUCTS.

Again, look at our increase in all farm productions in Appendix C. We are producing of cotton 144 per cent more than we did in 1873, not in totals—immensely more in totals—but per capita. And we are shipping only 55 per cent more. What will you do with the other 90 per cent? These figures I am giving you are per capita. We raised of wheat 301 per cent more in 1892 than in 1873, and we shipped only 145 per cent more. What will you do with the other 150 per cent?

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to say that, according to the theory of his party, that would be consumed in the home market?

Mr. WALKER. Not if the Democratic party destroys the home market, my friend. [Laughter and applause.] You let our home market alone and we will take care of the wheat and cotton.

Mr. TERRY. You had your own way in fixing a Republican tariff; and now, according to your own statement, you have not furnished any home market, and you have not shown——

Mr. WALKER. I decline to yield for anything but a question. The gentleman has made that statement; and let me say that it is about as rational as it would be if when a man had been sentenced to death you should denounce him and his family for their sorrow and undertake to console his family by asking them: "What are you sorrowing about? He has not been hanged yet." That is exactly the position of the gentleman.

Mr. TERRY. Of course it is very proper for the gentleman to answer me, while he does not permit me to argue the question with him.

Mr. WALKER. Never mind; I can not yield for an argument; you do not dispute my facts. Let me say that all the facts which I give in my address to-day are facts of public record obtained from the proper Departments of this Government. I am simply responsible for the conclusions I draw from them and the figuring I have done upon them. The basic facts are incontestable.

THE MARKET FOR GRAINS.

We raised 96 per cent more of corn and shipped only 41 per cent more, leaving 55 per cent increase on our hands. Now the highest export of wheat to Great Britain was 83,000,000 bushels; and in 1892 we shipped only 30,000,000 bushels—53,000,000 bushels less.

Our foreign market for grains is surely being captured by other countries.

Lest I should forget it, I want now to ask the privilege of publishing with my remarks the tables to which I am referring.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to publish certain statements with his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

WHEAT, CORN, OATS AND COTTON.

Mr. WALKER. The total crop of wheat, corn, and oats per capita produced in 1873 was 35.6 bushels; and we exported a larger percentage of the crop then than we have done this year. Yet in 1892 it was 51.3 bushels—44 per cent or 15.7 bushels per capita more in 1892 than in 1873. Of cotton we produced 44 pounds per capita in 1873, and 69 pounds in 1892—56.7 per cent, or 25.3 pounds more cotton. Is it not perfectly clear that you must change your cotton crop and produce less proportionately to other crops.

In Appendix D you will see that in 1892 you produced three and a half times more cotton than in 1870 (and I have told you about your exports). We actually imported cotton to the tune of forty-three and a half times as much in 1892 as we did in 1870, the imports being 108,000 bales of 400 pounds each. If this thing keeps on increasing as it has done for the last ten or twelve years a very considerable proportion of the cotton used in the cotton mills of this country will be imported from the cheaper labor countries of India and Egypt. The freight from Liverpool to Boston is not over one-quarter of that from our cotton fields. Most of it comes in for next to nothing as "ballast."

THE PRICE OF WHEAT.

Now let us turn to the wheat fields of the world. It is said that silver is the true measure of prices. It is claimed that the silver question is so inextricably mixed up with prices which are so closely affected by the selling of "futures" that it can not be separated in this discussion. I am, therefore, compelled to deal with silver. Free-coinage advocates claim that it has been proved that silver has not depreciated or changed in price because wheat for all these years has remained at a uniform price, measuring its price in grains of silver. That is to say, if the money price of silver is given it also gives, unerringly, the price of wheat. If the price of wheat is given one will surely know from that the price of silver, as they have kept together for decades. This theory I propose to thoroughly test by the facts. The prices of wheat in London one hundred years ago, as you will see in Appendix H, were 84.4 per cent more than they are to-day in London. Are the prices to-day to be measured in silver? What were they then? For the fifteen years, from 1846 to 1860, the prices in grains of gold of wheat in London were 51.2 per cent more than they are now; and for the next ten years, from 1861 to 1870, 22.5 per cent more than now.

The price of wheat in London fell 38 per cent in that time in grains of gold, and in grains of silver wheat fell in price only 22 per cent. If, then, silver is the true measure of value, why did not the price fall in silver as much as it did in gold? And if silver has fallen in value 22 per cent as measured by wheat, will some of the free-coinage advocates on this floor tell me why it is not equally proven that gold has fallen 38 per cent? If you can prove by the price of wheat in silver that silver has fallen, why do you exclude gold from being tested by the same standard?

ECONOMIC MAN THE TRUE MEASURE OF PRICE.

The fact is that you are all wrong in using the one or the other as a test. There is only the one available test, Mr. Chairman, and that is the price of "economic man" as shown in his wages. That is the only true test of the real value of any product. What is its aggregate cost in wages is the question. Show me the average wages in the world and I will show you an invariable economic test to apply to every product from one end of the world to the other.

MR. BOISSEVAIN ON PROSPERITY.

In the Brussels convention of November, 1892, Mr. Boissevain, delegate from the Netherlands, spoke as follows:

I do not see that we have cause for rejoicing in any increase of general prosperity which has been exhibited in recent years. On the contrary I think that almost everywhere and almost continuously, in spite of certain periods of reaction, we have had a period of depression of trade and industry.

I have to say to this House that the student of economic science—the careful observer of economic movements and questions for the last fifty years who can make that statement—who does not know that it is untrue, who does not know this world has progressed in that time, tested by any test whatever, more than in the hundred years preceding, his word is not worth regarding anywhere upon such questions.

PRESIDENT ANDREWS ON THE FALL OF PRICES.

Dr. Andrews, president of Brown University, Rhode Island, and delegate of the United States in the same convention, says:

Gentlemen, the thoughtful people of the United States wish to stay that baneful, blighting, deadly fall of prices which for nearly thirty years has infected with miasma the economic life-blood of the whole world. They do not desire to debase the standard of value. They would have every debt paid in gold or its equivalent, but they do not wish gold to be arbitrarily and unjustly appreciated.

What a jaundiced vision is here revealed! "Classical economics," is it? I would like to ask any member on this floor how are the plain people to improve their relative condition? How are the poor to become relatively richer and the rich relatively poorer in this world as they have been doing in the last forty years? Is there any man here who is able to give the answer? I would most respectfully suggest to any person who gives thought to the question that it is first by higher wages, second by lower prices of products, and third by shorter hours. Is there any man in the sound of my voice who can conceive of any other method? And when they all verge to one point and double the real wages of the worker, measured in grains of gold, is not that a depreciation of gold, if gold is used to pay wages? Is it not a proof conclusive of the depreciation of gold if products are bought in gold, or at the gold measure of value, produced by and the equivalent of double wages in gold? What answer is to be given other than that?

"CLASSICAL POLITICAL ECONOMISTS."

Oh, but these men whose writings and opinions smell of the lamp, and the lamp only—and a mighty offensive lamp at that—who abhor facts, tell us otherwise, do they? Yes; but political economists since the days of and contra to Adam Smith, "classical political economists," have treated with contempt the whole body of the economic history of the world since his day. Adam Smith, because wages had not changed in a hundred years, took the "prices of products" instead of the "prices of man in his wages" for the groundwork of his discussion, and thereby produced incalculable injury to the whole world, because subsequent writers, with one exception, have adhered to his method. Only one man, Prof. George Gunton, had the patience and the wisdom to apply to economics the proper methods, taking wages for a basis and using only absolute facts, following wherever they led and drawing his conclusions by inductive reasoning and on the shortest lines.

Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, the delegate from British India, spoke as follows:

Silver is the standard of value of more than one-half the world; yet silver prices have remained stable, while gold prices have fallen forty or fifty per cent.

I want to say to the House that it is just as easy of mathematical demonstration that gold has depreciated as that silver has depreciated or that the sun shines or water runs or that two and two make four, and I propose to take up that question for a little while, further on in my remarks.

I propose to show you that silver as measured by products has varied more than gold and that it is not a measure of value of any other product, before I get through.

Mr. Allard, delegate from Belgium, spoke again as follows:

The statistics of Mr. Sauerbeck have clearly proved that the allegation of overproduction as a cause of falling prices is absolutely false.

The truth, gentlemen, was told by Mr. Goshen, in England, 1883: "The fall of prices comes from the rise of gold."

OVERPRODUCTION.

What do you think of it in the light of the figures I have given of overproduction in this country? And the same is true of overproduction all over the world, and in this way only can the plain people come into their own. Why, Mr. Chairman, when a drummer starts out with his samples to sell products, what does he offer for sale? The whole body of them offer from one-third more to twice as much of products as will be produced by the world in the next twelve months.

Every drummer offers for sale, not what is produced, but what the utmost limit of the productive capacity of the factory, the farm, and the mill is, and this world to-day, diligently employed, as the United States was employed in 1891 and 1892, can produce in any year as much as can be consumed in any year and a half. Talk to me about no overproduction! The prices are made by the cost of production of economic man. That is the basial line below which, under normal conditions, prices never go, and supply and demand make the price above that basial minimum line. If that is not true, then nothing is true in economics.

Mr. Sauerbeck says:

The truth, gentleman, was told by Mr. Goschen in 1883. The fall of prices comes from a rise of gold.

Does he? This is the "parrot talk" of affected wisdom to secure ends not warranted by the facts.

GOLD HAS DEPRECIATED.

Let us look at that for a moment. I want to say to this House that in Appendix I it is shown that gold has surely depreciated since 1840, 1860, and 1873, measured by the wages of the world. All silver countries sell their products at gold values as international money. All the prices of their product are surely measured in silver first, then in gold, before they reach the foreign market.

THE PRICE OF THE AVERAGE MAN IN DAY'S WORK.

	In grains of gold.	In grains of silver.
1840	19.14	335
1860	23.20	370
1873	34.16	535
1894	39.12	1,285

This shows that gold has depreciated since 1840 51.1 per cent; since 1860, 40.7 per cent; since 1873, 12.6 per cent. Silver has depreciated since 1840 73.9 per cent; since 1860, 71.2 per cent; since 1873, 57.6 per cent; and if you tell me that silver has not depreciated by any standard you can set up, then I say to you, try gold by precisely the same standard and you must hold that gold has not appreciated.

If you tell me that silver has not depreciated, then gold has not depreciated. You must try them by the same standard. I will try them presently by products.

Furthermore, a day's work in 1840 would buy 335 grains of silver; in 1860 it would buy 370 grains of silver at its commercial price; in 1873 it would buy 535 grains of silver, and in 1894 it would buy 1,285 grains of silver. Of gold, in those same years, it would buy in 1840 19.14 grains; in 1860, 23.2 grains; in 1873, 34.16 grains; in 1894, 39½ grains of gold.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, for a question; not for an argument.

Mr. MARSH. Are you referring to labor in this country or throughout the world?

WAGES HAVE INCREASED ALL OVER THE WORLD.

Mr. WALKER. I am using the labor in this country as a basis of my figures, but I want to tell you that while it has increased very much faster in dollars and "grains of gold" in this country, it has increased in England and all over the world just as much "in percentages" as it has here. So that while I use the wages of this country to prove it——

Mr. MARSH. If the gentleman will allow me, I had supposed that the legislation of the last thirty years was designed to increase the price of wages in this country, and that legislation, together with labor unions, had increased wages in this country.

Mr. WALKER. Of course wages have been increased in this country. The gentleman and I believe that a certain thing has assisted in doing this. The gentleman wishes to take that subject into this discussion. I never yet on this floor discussed two economic questions at once. I propose to address the members of this House, upon the floor of this House, and not the 200,000 men, 500 miles away, who have sent me here. I am here to legislate for this whole country.

Now, the increase since 1840 in the gold actually or potentially received by the men working in the field, the farm, the mine, and everywhere throughout this country, in gold is 103.9 per cent; since 1860, 68.6 per cent; since 1873, 14.5 per cent. It decreased from 1873 to 1877, 7 per cent. It has increased since 1877, 22.6 per cent. Who is the man who will arise in his place and propose to crowd the wageworker back into former conditions?

PRICE OF WHEAT IN PAST SIXTEEN MONTHS.

Now, let us look at the price of wheat for the last sixteen months, shown in Appendix J. In January, 1893, it took 65.4 per cent more grains of silver to buy a bushel of wheat than it did in April, 1894. In April, 1893, it took 57.5 per cent more grains of silver to buy a bushel of wheat than it did in April, 1894. In October, 1893, it took 23.6 per cent more grains of silver to buy a bushel of wheat than in April, 1894.

Now, if that is true, I should like to know what kind of a measure of value you have in wheat for silver or in silver for wheat. You have, all of you, claimed that silver is an unvarying measure of the value of wheat and of all other products, and it has been said all over this country, and especially in the "elsewhere" that we sometimes refer to here—in a parliamentary way—it has been so declared, but no one has taken the pains to prove it.

You men who introduce antioption bills and who talk recklessly about the free coinage of silver, I never knew of any of you taking the pains to prove anything you ever said. I have never heard you undertake to prove the correctness of any proposition you have advanced in the five years that I have been in Congress, and I have never heard arguments made in opposition to your propositions which were not, without exception, buttressed by volumes of economic records.

COTTON.

Take cotton as shown in Appendix K. Cotton sold from 1840 to 1844 for 7.9 cents a pound in New York; in the next five years for 7.8 cents a pound; for the next five years for 10.3; and the next five years for 11.6. In the last two years you have got 10.6 cents per pound in New York; and for five years before that 10.2, all in gold. What could you possibly gain by taking your pay for it in silver. This was in New York. And it does not cost you one-third as much to send your cotton from your farms to New York as it cost you in the thirty years when the country was in a normal condition, before the war of disunion and the suspension of specie payments.

Is silver the true measure of value? What is the proof of it?

WHEAT.

Then again take wheat, as shown in Appendix L. From 1840 to 1844 wheat sold in Chicago at 52.8 cents a bushel; for the next five years at 67 cents a bushel. In the last five years, ending 1891, at 89.2 cents a bushel in Chicago. It cost you 20 cents a bushel to get your wheat from Chicago to Boston in 1862, and in the last year it did not cost you over 5 cents to get it to Boston. It cost you 9 cents to get your wheat from Chicago to Liverpool in 1894; and it cost you three times that amount to get it to Liverpool in the years that I have referred to. See Apendix LL.

CORN.

The course of corn is the same, as shown by Appendix M. The price of corn in Chicago in the five years ending 1844 was 33 cents a bushel, gold. In the five years ending 1849, 33.6 cents. In the ten years ending 1859, 39.8 cents. In the five years ending 1891, gold price, 44.2 cents. It cost the farmer half the price of his corn, from 1840 to 1849, to get it to the city of Chicago. In the last five years it has not cost him over 5 cents a bushel.

There is not a word of truth in what has been talked on the stump and in this House with reference to the relationship of silver to prices of farm products.

NINE AGRICULTURAL STAPLES.

Take the nine most important staples in this country shown in Appendix N, and since 1860 they have only gone down 1.6 per cent in gold prices. I have not the figures for the last two years. It is just as plain as anything can be that they are the culmination of a period of overproduction in the few staples that are cheaper. I will show you a great many of the staples in which the prices are not cheaper, but very much higher in gold prices. In fact, it is very remarkable how very little gold prices have depreciated considering the lessened hours work it now takes to produce "products."

HOGS.

Take the matter of hogs, as shown in Appendix O. They sold in Cincinnati for the ten years from 1840 to 1850, live weight, at $2.90 a hundred pounds; from 1851 to 1860, the next ten years, at $4.87 a hundred. They have sold for the last ten years, ending 1891, at $5.42 a hundred, in gold measure.

"Is silver the true measure of value?" Where is the proof?

BEEF.

Take the matter of beef, live weight, as shown in Appendix P. In Chicago it sold at $3.11 a hundred from 1840 to 1849; from 1849 to 1859 at $3.56 a hundred, and in the ten years from 1882 to 1891 it sold for $4.12 a hundred, and that in gold prices. I will give you silver prices presently.

TOBACCO.

Tobacco, as shown in Appendix Q, sold in the five years (I have not the figures before 1865) from 1865 to 1869, good leaf, in Cincinnati at $11.83 a hundred pounds. In the five years ending 1891 it sold for $17.10, and it is higher to-day than ever known before; and that, too, in gold prices.

How is it possible that "silver is the true measure of value?"

COFFEE.

I will pass over coffee in Appendix R, because there is an export duty on coffee; but coffee sold at 7.3 cents in the ten years from 1840 to 1849, and for the ten years commencing in 1850 at 9.1 cents; and in the last five years it sold for 15.5 cents.

SUGAR.

Well, sugar! I will save the feelings of my Democratic friends by refraining from alluding any further to sugar in Appendix S. We have heard so much of "sugar," or shall have heard before we get through with it, and are so distressed by it. Poor sugar!

I want to say to this House another story that is told by silver advocates is absolutely untrue, viz: That England buys the product of silver countries at prices represented by 15½ to 1 and pays for them in silver at 33 to 1 of gold, saving the difference. It takes just as many grains of silver to buy a bushel of wheat or corn or oats, or a pound of tobacco or tea or coffee or rice in the silver measure of valuing countries as it takes here or in Liverpool or in any other country subject only to additions or subtractions because of tariffs and export duties, freights, and commissions. The price is the same in grains of silver the world over.

IMPORTS FROM SILVER COUNTRIES.

We import from the silver-measure-of-value countries, as shown by Appendix T, $65,000,000 worth of goods, mostly consumed by farmers. If you should remonetize silver to-day at 16 to 1 of gold, these goods would cost you $130,000,000, because if you should remonetize silver it would make the silver prices just the same as they are to-day, or else all the products of silver countries have got to come down one-half to meet their present gold price here. You can take either horn of the dilemma you like.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Would it not make our products rise in price?

Mr. WALKER. You can make our products "rise in price" just as you can make dough rise by adding to it a batch of yeast.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Would it not make it so that if we bought from them $130,000,000 we could sell to them thousands and millions worth of our products at double price?

Mr. WALKER. Ah! We can issue enough fiat money to-morrow to make all our debts go down to 5 cents on the dollar and our wages go down to 20 cents a day. There is no difficulty about that. It is as easy as it is to lie or steal.

SENATOR TELLER'S TESTIMONY.

Senator TELLER, who came before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in 1890 (see Appendix G), and thereby brought himself within the jurisdiction of this court for cross-examination, told us that what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] wants to accomplish could just as well be accomplished by reducing the weight of the gold dollar by one-third. It would now be by one-half. If you want to scale down your debts, do it in that way; issue your fiat money. Make your products more valuable nominally—of course you can. You can sell your product now for just as many more grains of bullion silver, as my table shows, if you want to; or you can send your silver to the mints of the silver countries and have it coined without passing any law on the subject.

The farmers of this country repudiate the claims made for them on this floor.

They ask for no laws under which they can repudiate half their debts. They have comparatively few debts. Farm mortgages only aggregate $1,000,000,000, maturing one-fifth each year. The annual wage roll is $6,000,000,000.

The farmers do not ask to cause a loss of $2,000,000,000 annually to wage workers that they may repudiate $200,000,000 of debts they honestly owe. They will not consent to rob wage workers of $10 that they may dishonestly gain $1.

Again we export forty millions to those countries, for which they have to pay eighty millions in silver. Of course, this would be sold to the silver-country consumer at half its present price. But of what avail is that to him with the price of his product halved? "Cheapness" has not benefited this country much in the last eighteen months.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended.

Mr. HATCH. Without limit? I shall object to that. Let the gentleman state how much time he wants.

Mr. WALKER. I will not bore the committee.

Mr. HATCH. There is a long list of gentlemen who desire to speak on this subject, and the House has ordered that debate shall close at the adjournment to-morrow. If the gentleman will indicate just what time he wants——

Mr. REED. Let it be an hour.

Mr. HATCH. I object. That is not fair to other gentlemen on the list.

Mr. REED. The unfairness seems to have been in the arrangement limiting the debate. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] spoke three hours yesterday.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Maine is mistaken. Nothing that is done in this House by unanimous consent can be said to be unfair.

Mr. REED. Well, if there is any unfairness in this case it is in limiting the time for general debate. I do not know how we can get this additional time, but I remind the committee that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was allowed to speak three hours yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLARK of Missouri). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] objects.

Mr. HATCH. Let the gentleman from Massachusetts indicate what time he wants.

Mr. REED. He has indicated an hour and I do not see why he should not have it.

Mr. HATCH. I will not object to that, provided it is charged to that side—to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. REED. Of course, it will all be charged to "that side."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] be allowed to proceed for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. With the understanding that the time is to be charged to the side opposing this bill, I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

SEVEN STAPLE PRODUCTS.

The seven items, the difference in price of which I will now give, prove as conclusively as any facts can possibly prove that silver is not the true measure of value. There is only one item where the appreciation or depreciation of price in weight of gold and weight of silver is the same in the whole range of prices for any previous decade, and that only once for the period of ten years from 1840 to 1849, as compared with the five years ending in 1891, namely, each 48.9 per cent. The exhibit is as follows.

WHEAT IN FIFTEEN MONTHS TO MAY 1, 1894.

	Per ct.
From January, 1893, to April, 1894, the gold price fell	24.9
Same period the silver price fell	39.4

COTTON.

In ten years, 1840 to 1850, to 1890 and 1891, the gold price of cotton increased	30
Same period, id silver it increased	73

WHEAT.

In ten years, 1840 to 1849, to the five years of 1887 to 1891, the gold price increased	48.9
Same period, in silver it increased	48.9

CORN.

In twenty years, 1840 to 1859, to the five years of 1887 to 1891, the gold price of corn increased	24.2
Same period, in silver it increased	65

HOGS, LIVE WEIGHT.

In twenty years, from 1841 to 1860, to the ten years of 1882 to 1891, the gold price of hogs, live weight, increased	39
Same period, in silver it increased	75

BEEVES, LIVE WEIGHT.

In the twenty years, 1840 to 1859, to the ten years of 1882 to 1891, the gold price of beeves, live weight, increased	23
Same period, in silver it increased	53

LEAF TOBACCO.

In the five years, 1865 to 1869, the gold price of leaf tobacco increased	47
Same period, in silver it increased	97

The price of economic man has not gone down. It has certainly gone up as I have shown. To readjust the proportions of products to each other is the only salvation for those two or three products that are abnormally cheap. With the exception of wheat and cotton, products are higher in gold to-day than their normal price.

Furthermore, if wages have gone up 68.7 per cent in the most important parts of the world, it is a thing inconceivable, in fact a thing impossible, that the price of products should have been reduced, excepting by three things: first, improved machinery; second, improved methods of production; third, increased number of units produced under one management. It is not possible to pay higher wages and still sell goods at a less price, unless the reduction in price is made wholly and exclusively from increased efficiency in production. If there is not an increased efficiency in production the price of the unit of product must go up by exactly the same percentage that wages go up. The only possible means of further progress for each nation is to raise money wages and to raise the price of a day's work on the farm by increased efficiency of the worker, and thus enable its own people to consume all the things that they produce.

WAGES MAKE MARKETS.

I want to impress it upon this House that it is not individuals that make markets. It is wages. If the wages in France could be raised 5 per cent, she would not need to export one dollar's worth of anything unless she chose to do so. In the making of a tariff bill this session we started out to make a tariff with reference to the whole world, but it was found after a while that we could not make a tariff with reference to any country but our own. There is no country but England that makes a tariff with reference to the world at large, and England is in as abnormal a condition in economics as New York would be were she and Kings County set off and made a nation by themselves.

New York would then be in the exact economic condition that England is in, because England produces only a small fraction of the raw products she utilizes. No man ever expresses in this House any regret that the prices of every kind of manufactured products had depreciated; all the complaint is about the depreciation of the prices of agricultural products and of silver bullion.

WORLD'S PRODUCT OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The world's product:
Value of gold in 1892	$137,000,000
Value of silver in 1892	133,000,000
Silver in 1892 coinage would make	196,000,000

THE PRODUCT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Gold in 1892	$33,000,000
Silver in 1892 was 58,000,000 ounces; at 1893 average price, 84.37, was worth	49,000,000

This 58,000,000 ounces silver, lowest price in 1894, 59, was worth	$34,500,000
Silver 1892 at coinage value	75,000,000
In 1892 wheat 516,000,000 bushels, at export value, 63.	325,000,000
In 1892 corn 1,681,000,000 bushels, at export value, 45..	756,000,000

In 1892 oats 595,000,000 bushels and hundreds of millions of dollars in other products.

Why sacrifice hundreds of millions of agricultural products to $31,500,000 silver? Increased efficiency of coin in the last eighty years is the equivalent of increased quantity—from $1,000 to $13,000,000 in the China trade, and from $1,000 to $10,000,000 from New York to St. Louis.

Now, a word about coined money. The coin and paper money needed is all that the people will carry in their pockets and then visible coin to the amount of all that foreign commerce needs. The visible gold per capita in Great Britain is 3.71; in Germany it is 3.72; in this country the visible gold of commerce, to say nothing of silver, is 6.29 per capita. In Great Britain there is $25 in foreign commerce to every dollar of visible gold; in Germany there is $9 of foreign commerce to every dollar of visible gold; in this country there is only $2.9 of foreign commerce to every dollar of visible gold. Either England needs instruction in economic methods of commerce or we do; we can not both be right. Three dollars to 1 seems wasteful when $25 to 1 is all that England needs. This question of coinage is not a question of the greater or less number of silver dollars. If we had free coinage of silver their number would be at once reduced, instead of increased, by shipments abroad.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I understand the gentleman to take the position that legislation against silver has not reduced the value of products?

Mr. WALKER. Legislation against silver has stimulated the production of every article of commerce in every silver country of the world, and those products, coming in competition with ours, have, as a secondary effect, reduced the price of products here. The demonetization of silver of itself has not reduced the price of products by one farthing, excepting in the way indicated. The stimulated production and exportation of competing products in silver-measure-of-value countries, coming in competition with our own products, has affected the price of our products. I think that answers the question completely.

Look at Mexico; look at her abundant coinage! And yet she has only $5 per capita. This is purely a question of what shall be our measure of value; not as to the quantity of money. Give us free coinage to-morrow, and our gold will be a matter of commerce, and the value of our silver dollar in products would be less than half. We would keep here every dollar that our people require for the doing of their business; and that number for which there was no economic demand here would go abroad, just as gold goes from every country where there is no economic demand for it.

OPENING THE MINTS TO FREE SILVER.

If our mints were opened to-morrow for the free coinage of silver, and if the full cost of the coinage was charged to the silver miners, it is a question difficult to answer whether a single silver dollar would be coined in twenty years. Mexico charges 4 per cent for coinage; we charge nothing. Charge 4 per cent for coinage and give us free coinage of silver, and there is not an economist in this country or any other who will say that we would coin silver dollars in any quantity, simply because we now have all the silver dollars that we can possibly use, and we have substituted paper for four-fifths of that; paper is so much cheaper and better.

An international agreement also would have precisely the same effect. Every ounce of silver or gold is potentially present here and now in this country and in every other country and at every point of commerce, as is every other product subject to the demands of commerce. When you take a sample of wheat or flour or silver or gold in your hand and show it for sale as the representative of one barrel or a million barrels of flour, the flour of the world, like all other things, is potentially present in your hands.

Mr. OGDEN. What would be the use, then, of further coinage of gold?

Mr. WALKER. Not a bit of use in it; and I would oppose as determinedly the coinage of gold if it was proposed to coin it as you do silver. I am opposed to this whole business of forcing the coinage of either gold or silver. Let the people attend to their own coinage business; let us not undertake to force it on them. Our enormous coinage for party politics, not an economic demand, is costing this country to-day 67 cents a head in indirect taxation to carry it, when such taxation need not be one farthing. What I say is just as susceptible of mathematical demonstration as that two and two make four.

GOLD COINAGE.

The gold coinage in this country from 1862 to 1879 was $555,000,000, not a dollar of which went into circulation. Every cent of it was simply merchandise. The coinage of a metal does not make it money. The store of gold in this country in 1860 was $314,000,000; in 1880 it was $300,000,000. Every dollar of it was kept here because commerce demanded it. We only lost $14,000,000 during that whole period of twenty years, when not a dollar of gold was used for money. Why? Such was the imperious demand of the trade of this country. Demonetize gold in this country and the case would be the same.

Statistics show that in seventeen years—from 1862 to 1879—there had been accumulated, even in India, $324,000,000 of gold; how much since 1879 I do not know. It is just so in every silver measure-of-value country. Merchants and commerce and manufacturing know no coinage laws or legal-tender laws. These do not have the least real effect. These matters are regulated by the inexorable laws of nature, applied to the movements of man, as thoroughly, as completely, and as everlastingly as to his physical organization.

THE PARTING OF SILVER AND GOLD.

What, then, are the remedies? Now, let me say in reference to this question of demonetizing silver that the calamities which have come to the world because of the parting of silver and gold can not be calculated by any living man. What has it done? It has embarrassed trade between the gold countries of higher civilization and lower silver-measure countries beyond all calculation, hindering trade between this country and Mexico, India, China, and all others. To-day every article of commerce costs in every silver country just double, nominally, what it would have cost had gold and silver been kept together.

It was not our actions that separated them; that was done by the Democratic party in 1834, when, under the lead of Benton, the weight of the gold dollar was reduced 6.19 per cent. The condition of things named has stimulated the products not only of agriculture but of manufacturing in every silver country. In this way they have been helped somewhat; but its influence in hindering trade is incalculable. It is the simple duty of this country to put forth every particle of its power and influence in all practical and legitimate ways to devise some scheme of again establishing a par of exchange between the silver-measure-of-value countries and the gold-measure-of-value countries, and the making of a parity between the two metals in trade between these different countries.

Universal coinage at 15½ or 16½ to 1 in all the world would have what effect in China and India, Japan and Mexico? It would have precisely the same effect as it would in this country if we should double the gold in our gold dollar. It would have an effect more disastrous than any of us can estimate.

Do we remember the long agony from 1873 to 1879 when we tried and succeeded in bringing our money from 12½ per cent discount up to par? If I had then had the responsibility I would have depreciated the value of our gold-dollar coinage to the value of the French five-franc piece, cutting it down 5 per cent, and have saved the traveling of that long distance and a part of the seven years.

We appreciate our measure of value 12½ per cent. Had we then depreciated it by cutting our gold dollar 5 per cent of its weight, making it equal to the value of the French 5-franc piece, we would have had to travel but 7½ per cent, and probably instead of those weary six or seven years we might have spanned the gulf in from two to four years and done justice more nearly. Every price in these silver countries must be cut in two—of realities as well as of products—or else we must have our prices doubled. They, not we, would suffer most. Their prices will be cut; ours can by no possibilities be so much increased.

Do you know what that means? We raise—I mean, now, the gold countries of the world—80 per cent of all the wheat in the world, and don't you know that the economic law is that the country or persons making the most expensive third of a product "fix the price" for all of it? By Appendix G it will be seen the gold countries raise 80 per cent of the wheat of the world, and it is as true as anything that can not be mathematically demonstrated in this world that they make the price of wheat. I have just proved to you that it is 6.7 higher in Chicago now than the world's price in Liverpool.

THE PRACTICAL REMEDY FOR THE SILVER SITUATION

But, Mr. Chairman, what is the remedy? I will give you the remedy, and the only one that suggests itself to my mind at this time.

The only practical remedy for the silver situation is to embody in the law of all countries the present commercial customs in the use of silver money, in both silver and gold measure countries (except England), as follows, i. e.:

1. All countries that now use silver as the "measure of value metal" to adopt gold as the international and final domestic measure of value at 30 of silver to 1 of gold.
2. Make silver the domestic legal-tender metal.
3. Make silver money redeemable in gold.
4. Withdraw and cancel all silver certificates.
5. Make paper money redeemable in silver.
6. Not to reduce the existing amount of silver coin, and not to increase the ratio of silver to gold for ten years, and as much silver to be bought and coined as can be kept in circulation among the people.
7. England to agree to increase her silver coin by £20,000,000, nominal value.

This arrangement will make the utmost use of silver that is practicable and establish an unvarying "par of exchange" between countries, which is all that has ever yet been accomplished in coinage as between countries.

It does not touch any country now using gold and silver; it only embodies in law the present universal practice of the world, making gold the measure, the ultimate not immediate measure of value in all silver countries making silver the domestic legal tender, the domestic metal, in all countries.

It would not be recognized by our people as making any change whatever. Gold would be immediately paid for all necessary uses without any intervention of silver dollars.

That is the only possible way of securing a par of exchange and not disastrously disturbing the economic conditions of the silver measure of value countries.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If I understand the last proposition of the gentleman it looks towards an agreement in all countries, except Great Britain, that the ratio should be fixed at 30 of silver to 1 of gold. Now if that agreement can be made, either by way of international agreement, on the one hand, or by each country making that ratio for itself on the other, I do not see why you had not just as well make it 16 or 20 of silver to 1 of gold. It seems to me it would accomplish the same end.

Mr. WALKER. What I have proposed is not to disturb present values by the smallest fraction the world over. Remonetizing at 16½ or 17, or at 15½ or 16, will halve the prices and double the debts of every person in every silver country. That is why I make these suggestions and the only reason why. What I propose is that every country shall keep its own ratio. I would not reduce the ratio by the one-millionth part of a fraction of a cent in the United States.

Why? Why, Mr. Chairman, who knows but that to-morrow we may discover gold mines which will produce gold in such abundance that we will be in the same condition as to gold that we are now in as to silver? I would not vote, I would burn my hand off first, that we should reduce the number of our silver dollars below the number of our gold dollars. My proposition leaves all countries to make their own ratio as between silver and gold, except as to international trade. The only thing necessary is to induce silver measure of value countries to make gold the international measure of value by the law of their respective countries, leaving silver in all those countries at its present commercial ratio, or three points less, in order not to disturb prices anywhere the world over, and not to have the blighting curse on the countries that now use the silver measure of value that visited us between the years 1873 and 1879, only a hundredfold more intense. That is the reason.

Silver to-day is about 33 or 34 to 1. If it is made 30 to 1 in silver countries you overvalue it three points. Then the silver of each country will remain at home. Then if silver appreciates toward gold it makes the silver countries richer and atones to them somewhat for, and restores somewhat also, the losses that we have been allowing to fall on them for the last twenty years in this growing difference between the two metals.

Do I make this clear? I do not want to put a hardship on these poorer nations. I want to take present conditions, embody them into law, and work out of and up from them. And let me say here, Mr. Chairman, that no agreement of governments, no agreement of international conferences, will affect the situation. Ratify your treaties to-morrow. Nothing will affect it but the convincing the judgment of the mercantile and manufacturing world, and this proposition would commend itself to the judgment of every business man.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. WALKER. Yes; if the gentleman will be short.

Mr. PICKLER. Do you say, then, that products would remain the same as now?

Mr. WALKER. I say it would not affect prices in the smallest fraction immediately, or suddenly, but my judgment is that it would largely increase the use of silver. One-third of the world is using copper, brass, and inferior metals. I believe if we should get at a rational solution of this silver question, silver would go up; and I will touch that point a little later. Silver would go up in value, gradually, to somewhere near the old ratios of the world—would be likely to. That is to say, with the increased mining of gold, and the decreased mining of silver, silver and gold would come nearer together. But you can never bring them together at the old ratio by any violent or sudden movement, without distressing either the gold countries beyond endurance, or the silver countries beyond endurance.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY AT FAULT.

We tried this undervaluing of gold in 1792 and lost every dollar of our gold. In 1834 we depreciated the gold dollar 6½ per cent, taking that weight of gold out of it, and then we undervalued silver, and silver all went out of the country. Now, who is most at fault for the present perplexity? Clearly the Democratic party, and the Democratic party almost wholly are to blame. What is the record? I believe that if this country had never passed any laws to force the use of silver, we would have had a rational international agreement on silver long before silver had gone down below the point of 20 to 1.

I believe that the Democrats are almost wholly responsible in this matter. It was the Democratic majority that "fooled" with silver in 1878. On March 24, 1892, this House, by a vote, 130 Democrats voting for, and 81 against, voted for the Bland free coinage bill, and the Republicans voted 11 for it and 67 against it, or a Republican majority of 56 against it. We saved the country from it by 7 majority.

Mr. PENCE. What vote was that?

Mr. WALKER. That was the vote of the Democratic party in this House on a Bland bill for the free coinage of silver. On July 13, 1892, on the Stewart free coinage amendment, there were 23 Democratic majority for it, and 51 Republican majority against it—28 majority against.

Mr. PENCE. As I understand you, on the vote on the Stewart free coinage amendment, you are crediting the Republicans with having defeated it?

Mr. WALKER. By 51 majority, the Democrats having voted for it by 23 majority.

Mr. PENCE. Well, that is right.

Mr. WALKER. On July 1, 1892, in Senate, on Stewart free coinage amendment—

Mr. PENCE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WALKER. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty minutes left?

Mr. WALKER. I can only yield for a moment.

Mr. PENCE. I understand now that your claim is that if it had not been for the votes of the Republicans free coinage might have been accomplished.

Mr. COGSWELL. No; you do not claim that.

Mr. WALKER. I want to say that, in my judgment, if it had not been for the action of the Democratic party in this country we would have had the free coinage of silver here and the world over, if it had been within the limit of possibility. Certainly silver never would have been depreciated to its present condition. [Applause.]

That is my point exactly. It is wholly, in my judgment, because this country has not determinedly and absolutely said to England, Germany, and France, "We are not interested in silver one cent where you are interested a thousand, and that you, not us, must take care of it." If we had taken that position from the first, in 1878, when it was down only to 92 cents, we would have had free coinage of silver if it was possible, and saved this whole silver imbroglio. That is the point I have been making from the beginning up to the present time when silver has touched 59.4.

As I have shown, the Democratic party, by its majority, answered President Cleveland's demand that the purchasing clause of the law of July 14, 1890, should be repealed by reenacting, as far as their action could do so, the Bland system, and coining every year $20,163,480 more 47-cent silver dollars than we were issuing silver certificates for, under the Sherman bill, with 100 cents worth of silver behind every one of them on the day they were issued.

THE REPUBLICAN POSITION.

The Republicans yield not one whit of preeminence to the Democrats in their determination to secure again the double standard or in their determination to secure the free coinage of silver, if it can possibly be safely done [applause], and not otherwise.

Mr. PENCE. Except by voting for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER. Except by voting for it! Ah! They refused to vote to defeat it. As the Populists and the Democrats have been voting by immense majorities in this House to defeat it ever since 1878, and they only are responsible.

Mr. PENCE. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. WALKER. No; I can not yield any further. This was my position all through the Fifty-first Congress, and I want to say that the clearest-headed free-coinage-of-silver men of that House believed that I was right then, as I believed I was, and in the light of subsequent events I am sure of it. The course of silver has been exactly what I told them it would be if we engaged in their proposed legislation and put this country in the position of taking hold of a battle which was Europe's battle. The man is always "dumped" when he "goes before he is sent," as is any country that goes before it is sent. It was not our fight; but the Democratic party has made it our fight and against the determined protest of the Republican party, and they are responsible for the position of silver; wholly so in this country, as compared with the Republicans.

But the Republicans are determined that this country shall not throw away the advantages of its position to secure party advantage. I ask the Democrats to forget party for once and to unite with us to induce European nations to come up to their highest interests as well as our own on this silver question. Had that been done since 1878, instead of passing the Bland bill, all hope of enacting a bill for the free coinage of silver would not have vanished forever, as I fear it has at the old ratio.

The country owes to the Democratic party the fact that silver has depreciated so disastrously by putting this country in the position of attempting to do alone that which all might do, but that which no one could do alone. We will go to the people on a platform that will permit the utmost liberty for a broad settlement of this question and all others; and I ask the clerk to read what my suggestion of a platform is for the Republican party. No other Republican is responsible for it or ever had a hint of it.

Mr. TRACEY. Has the gentleman from Maine retired?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman from Maine has retired, and I hold the floor now. [Laughter.]

The clerk read as follows:

PROPOSED REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

We propose for the platform for 1896 these few sentences:

We hereby declare that each coined or paper dollar, paid to the farmer for his products, to the wage-worker for his labor, and to all others, shall be kept at a parity with every other dollar.

That, as enforced idleness is the most odious and cruel of all taxation, and the right of defense against it, in an opportunity to earn one's daily bread by self-respecting, honest toil, is an inalienable right and fundamental to all other rights and to all progress in civilization, the power and duty of securing a right to work, and of an honest dollar to each citizen, is a duty devolving on the legislative power of the United States in its fiscal legislation.

We hereby call upon every citizen, North, South, East, and West, to rally under the flag of our common country to preserve an honest dollar, and to secure a fair day's pay, for a fair day's work to every citizen, in the American system of protection, as indispensable to the welfare of the farmers and wage-workers of the country, and all other questions being subsidiary to these two.

We hereby relegate the decision of all other questions to the respective Congressional districts in the States.

Mr. PENCE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WALKER. No, I can not.

Mr. Chairman, in the fight for State rights and in the intense opposition to the election laws the Democratic party has needlessly wiped them from the statute books. I believe they were mistaken in doing it; but whether mistaken or not, "that issue is laid." It stands now where the issue of the removal of the troops from the South in 1877 by President Hayes stands. Those issues as national issues are dead past resurrection. We will fight the battle, in my judgment, in 1896 on the issues which I have presented here, and by that token we will conquer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PENCE. Now the gentleman has time to answer a question.

Mr. WALKER. I have finished my speech.

Mr. PENCE. May I ask the Chairman how much time the gentleman from Massachusetts has left?

Mr. WALKER. I have not any. I have yielded the floor.

APPENDIX E.

Statement of Hon. H. M. Teller, Senator from the State of Colorado, Monday, January 27, 1890.

I believe the present fall in prices in this country which have been continuous, as we all know, since 1873, is to be largely attributed to our treatment of the silver question. I am free to say it is not caused by increased production.

Mr. WALKER. Would it not have the same effect you are seeking, that is, the depreciation of the gold dollar, by putting less gold in a dollar? That would raise the prices; that is, nominally.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; I have not any doubt about that. And if you put more money in circulation it would raise prices probably. I say that silver has not depreciated, because I say that compared with commodities it will buy more commodities to-day than it would fifteen years ago, when it stood at 15½.

Mr. WALKER. Do you believe there ever was a time when the country has grown more rapidly in wealth than in the last five years?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know about that. For five years we have been very prosperous, I admit.

Mr. WALKER. And that during that time the most important advances have been made?

Mr. TELLER. It is true we have had prosperity. I do not deny it.

Mr. WALKER. You spoke of gold not being money enough to do the business of the world. Is not the exchange of money for products of any kind more apparent than real? Is not it a fact that in the exchanges for products it is therefore immaterial what is the standard of value so that it is uniform and continues so? That is to say, if a product is exchanged for a product, and not money or product, is not the use of coin more apparent than real?

Mr. TELLER. Undoubtedly. The great business of the country is not done by payment of money from hand to hand.

Mr. WALKER. It is product for product?

Mr. TELLER. It is virtually product for product, but it is done by the exchange of the monetary system.

1886 to 1890	.95	.978	466.45
1891 and 1892	.93	.929	480.81

The price of wheat in gold fell 38 per cent from the years 1871 to 1875 to the years 1891 and 1892, and only 20.3 per cent in the price of silver.

The claim is that its price does not fall "in silver."

If this proves that silver has fallen 20.3 per cent, it also proves that gold has fallen 38 per cent.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to make a speech upon this subject, but, being a farmer, on the request of a member of the committee I have been yielded the courtesy of the floor to say something from the farmer's standpoint upon the question before the committee. I want to say first that I have been very much entertained by the learned and lucid address of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. WALKER], as well as by that of the gentleman who preceded him, but I must say also that I fail to see where they really touch the point at issue. The speech of Mr. WARNER of New York also was a good one, but he failed to show that this bill would interfere in the least with the regular business of brokers or boards of trade in placing orders for produce of any kind actually in existence or in process of existence.

In rising to make a speech upon this subject it may be that I ought to begin by offering an apology for even attempting to speak before this august body, being only a plain, unsophisticated farmer, as there seems to be a consensus of opinion among at least a portion of the gentlemen upon this floor that the farmers should not be heard upon any of these questions; that they have a peculiar duty to perform, namely, to raise the revenue and pay the taxes of the Government, and make that which feeds and clothes the world, but that they should confine themselves to that, and not undertake to express their views upon these great questions, but always be ready to furnish fried chicken and votes for the aristocracy every election year.

I have heard a great deal about the "ignorance" of the farmer. I have heard many epithets hurled at them, and at the demands which they have made from time to time from this body. The name of farmer here seems to be regarded as a synonym of ignorance. I have heard the farmer's "ignorance" illustrated by poetry, by prose, and by anecdote. One notable anecdote which was recently told for that purpose by a distinguished gentleman upon this floor was to this effect: A man dreamt that he had died and had gone down into purgatory. He dreamt that he knocked at the door, and that Old Nick opened it and took him in and treated him very kindly, and showed him all the departments of his domain. He took him down into the bottomless pit, where the murderers and the worst sinners were to be seen; then he took him up on another floor where those who were guilty of less heinous crimes were confined, and then he took him through a long hallway, on either side of which were a lot of men hanging by the heels. The man asked: "Mr. Devil, who are those that you have there?" and the devil said: "Well, those are a lot of Alliance fellows and farmers that died and came down here, and they were so green that I had to hang them up by the heels to dry them before I could burn them." [Laughter.] That is the kind of anecdote that is told here to illustrate the greenness of the farmer; and many other ways are resorted to, pretendedly in fun, but in reality in earnest.

Now, that does not amount to anything, nor anything else they may do or say about us, for we are here to stay until relief is granted, or to know the reason why. We are a hard, rough-skinned set of fellows, and we can stand almost anything; but let me ask you, gentlemen, who has more interest in questions affecting the welfare of this country than the farmers, the men who are the bone and sinew of the land, the men who raise that which feeds and clothes the world, the men who pay 80 or 90 per cent of every dollar which your billion-dollar Congresses appropriate and spend? Say what you please about him, Mr. Chairman, the man who is honestly tilling the soil is filling the noblest vocation allotted to man. He is doing that which God Almighty created him to do; he is carrying out the Biblical injunction, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread."

Can the same be said about the other classes of people that we have heard so much about? Is it not true that those other classes, among whom are included these gracious boards of trade, and the merchants and the brokers that we have heard about here, live upon the sweat of other people's brows, speculating upon the necessaries of life, raising and lowering the prices of them at will, thus burdening both producer and consumer, and carrying out, probably, the injunction of the very devil himself in the pursuit of their nefarious practices and infamous schemes, of which dealing in futures is one of the greatest and vilest? In this way they establish fictitious prices, utterly ignoring honest supply and demand, and the natural prices which this supply and demand would and ought to establish if let alone.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard a good deal during this discussion from the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] about what I believe they call "contango" and "acquittance," and "backwardation, and "ringing-out," and all such terms. I have been trying to study these things in this bill, but being nothing but a farmer, I do not know that I comprehend them. I want, however, to say that the whittling processes of speculation, the questionable, sharp, and wicked practices of trade and exchange, the grinding, aggressive, and impoverishing operation of trusts and combines and unholy coalitions, the chameleon deals of the law coquetting with the facile ease of the acrobat with law and justice and the liberties of the people, these and all such terms, I am glad to say, find no place in the vocabulary of the farmer's life, except as he knows, and you know, as God knows, they are used to make him the "mudsill" upon which to build up all the other great industries of the day, and in the end cheating him out of all the profits of his produce and his labor and opening up a road for himself and family to the poorhouse, whither he is going as fast as time can carry him without a change in present conditions.

While he is in fact the corner stone of all the greatness and grandeur and happiness and prosperity of the country, the effort is to deprive him of any fruits of his labor and to make him simply the implement for assisting in the accumulations of others. Yea, to make him a beast of burden for the elect.

Here let me say that these various other avocations and branches of trade have been organized far in advance of the farmer. They have organized their guilds, and their associations of various kinds for self-protection; while the farmer, isolated and secluded, leading an entirely different life, has been made the easy prey of the Shylocks of every other profession.

That perhaps is natural. But, let me tell you, the farmer has been studying; he has been educating himself; he has been watching the wicked progress of these chambers of commerce, these boards of trade, and these national bankers. He has seen them enriching themselves by organization, by banding themselves together, and he has decided to imitate their example. So that to-day the farmers, as well all other industrial people throughout the country are organized, and I tell you their power will be felt one day in the councils of the nation in no uncertain tones. If you are not willing to heed and to hear their demands to-day, there will come a time when they will have Representatives enough here to force you to listen to what they have to say. They are on the trail of these vampires who are sucking their life's blood from their bodies, and sooner or later will overtake and crush them.

I do not know that I could better illustrate my meaning than by telling you right here a homely anecdote that I once heard—not to make you laugh, but to drive home my point—to show you what I mean when I say that the farmers have found out the power there is in organization, and are fast taking the medicine which made others rich and prosperous. As the story goes, a good old farmer had loaded his one-horse wagon with his beans and potatoes and cabbages to start for market, and in the morning he hitched up his old mule Jack that had carried him to market many a time and brought him back safely, and he mounted the seat of the wagon with whip in hand. And mark you, that whip was protected, that wagon was protected, and the harness was protected. Everything was protected except the farmer himself, as is always the case. He drove on, and all went merrily until they came to a long, steep, slippery hill.

The good old faithful mule saw what was before him and stopped; he shook his head; he would not pull. The farmer was a kind-hearted fellow, as farmers generally are, so he tried to persuade the mule to go along. He coaxed him, then he plucked him, then, as he would not move, he first tickled him with the lines, and then with the whip. Still he would not go. Then he hit him harder with the whip. Finally he got down upon the ground and tried to run the wagon up on the mule. Still the mule would not pull. In his irritation he was getting out of patience, as farmers sometimes do. They have a good deal of patience in some things though not so much in others.

At last he raised a pole that lay on the road side, and was in the act of knocking poor old Jack on the head, and killing him. Just then a professional man came along—a doctor. And professional men are very good in their places; I do not make war upon any profession or class. It is necessary that we should have in this country all classes and professions. As my distinguished friend from Chicago [Mr. GOLDZIER] says, the country does not belong to one class. I am glad to reiterate that sentiment. This is not my country nor yours; it is our country. And it should be ruled for the mutual benefit of us all, for it belongs as a common heritage to all classes and professions and no one should monopolize the blessing of it.

But the blessings of government ought to be about equally divided, and not be usurped by one class, and that a very small one. I want to say that I was the more interested in the speech of the gentleman from Illinois because he introduced here a few days ago a resolution for cutting down the wages of the poor laborer in the District instead of taking the ground, as I should have done, that if such a reduction was to be made, then the salary of everybody else, including his own salary, ought to be cut down. He wanted to cut down the minnows but let the whales, go free. Let us tackle the whales and big fish as well as the little ones.

A MEMBER. What has become of the mule. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I was coming to that. The doctor rode up, and said, "Hold on, I can start that mule." "Well, doctor, I wish you would; I have been here two or three hours, and I am afraid I shall never get to market." The doctor got down and took from his saddle pocket some kind of a liquid in a vial; then he took an instrument—a hypodermic syringe, I believe they call it—filled it full of the liquid and injected it right behind the mule's ears into his neck. He then wiped the syringe, and put it back into the saddle pocket, and began talking to the farmer. The farmer became interested; he dropped his lines and engaged in the conversation, paying no attention to the mule. Just as is often the case the farmer's attention is diverted from the true inwardness of the surroundings.

In the meantime the medicine had begun to act on old Jack; first he stamped one foot and then the other. Finally the medicine permeated his whole system, and worked him up so that, all at once, he shot off and went up that hill like a flash of lightning, leaving the poor farmer behind. The old mule ascended the hill with such agility that the farmer at first did not know what to do. Then he turned to the doctor and said: "Doctor, is that stuff costly?" "No; it does not cost much." "Well, shoot about two loads into my neck; I've got that d—d mule to catch." [Laughter.]

The farmers have been balked for some time at the foot of the hill, and for a long time have been unable to pull the load of debt, and the debt is still heavy, but the time is coming when perhaps they may become stimulated to such an extent that they can climb the hill. So I tell you the farmers are watching you people who have had that stimulus shot into your necks. They have had a little of it shot into their own necks, too, and they are after you closely, and they will stop you, too, from this gambling in futures to their injury and detriment. [Laughter and applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, another fact which can not be contradicted or gainsaid is this: The Government has extended its strong arm of protection around every other industry in the whole land, from one end of the nation to the other; while agriculture, that art which existed before the flood, the art of all arts and the science of all sciences, about which Moses wrote before the flood, is ignored and neglected. While protection has been given to everything else, every other industry, agriculture has been left in the lurch to take care of itself, to protect itself, and to endeavor in the face of every other obstacle to make itself prosperous and self-sustaining under many discouragements.

The farmer must contend with climate, with an unfruitful soil, sometimes with rain, with snow, with drouth, and sun and water and weather, with every species of discouragement and under adverse circumstances; and yet the farmers are to-day willing and ready to meet and discuss all of these great questions that pertain to the welfare of the nation. And, Mr. Chairman, they have now come here and asked only the passage of this little bill that they believe will have some tendency to lighten their burden—to give them some little additional facilities for carrying on their business—a measure that will put a stop to these outrageous speculations in their products, which not only are of no benefit to them, but which are injurious; and they ask you to let the great natural law of supply and demand control the prices of what they raise, so that they and their families may have some chance to live in this world. Take from off his produce the heavy hand of the spoliator alias speculator.

Will you deny it? I say to you that you had just as well rob him, when he goes to the market with his cabbage and sells it, of the money he gets for it as to allow this speculation in their products. The man, I say, who is robbing the farmer in this manner, does not deserve any more consideration at the hands of the people than the midnight burglar who forces his way into his house and pillages and robs it of the money which he has received as a result of his hard labor. One is just as much of a robber as the other. It may be strong language to use, Mr. Chairman, but I believe it. I do not see how one can be justified if we do not justify the other. I call a spade a spade and do not even call it an agricultural implement.

Again, it is a known fact that from prejudice, or a disposition among the other factions and classes to keep the farmer in the background, he has, as a general rule, for thirty years past been absolutely ruled out of influential positions. Hence the statesmanship of the country has been conducted mostly by other classes, mainly by the lawyers; so much so that they have come to almost claim it as a right of inheritance to the utter exclusion of the farmer class.

Now, I have no word of comment or of disparagement to say against the lawyers. Some of the best men who ever lived were lawyers; some of the best men living to-day are lawyers; but that is no reason why they should utterly control this country in legislation. I am glad to say that a number of lawyers advocate the cause of the farmer, but that should not give them a monopoly of things. I respect them generally. If I got into a pretty bad scrape, I would get the very best of them that I could. It may be that I would call on Brother REED to help me. I do not know. But at all events for the last thirty years the laws have been enacted mainly by lawyers, the farmers having been excluded until that class of men who have so long made the laws for this nation seem to claim it as their birthright.

But I want to say right here in passing that they are welcome to all the glory, and all the honor, and all the praise that can be attributed to them for the present deplorable condition of affairs in this land. I want no credit for it. I want no part in that glory which has resulted in throwing thousands and thousands of people out of employment, that has stopped the spindles in the factories throughout the land, that has caused the fires of the furnaces to die out, and has stopped the plows on the plantations. Right up in the State of the gentleman from Massachusetts who spoke so eloquently to-day we find the condition of affairs where thousands of farms are being abandoned. It is so all over the South; it is so in the West, and it is so in New England.

These farms are deserted because they can not make a living raising agricultural products, although they had diversity as far as anything could be diversified in farm labor. I repeat, you are welcome to all the praise and all the glory that emanates from such a condition as that. I make no claim to any of it, nor do I make any war on the lawyers, but will say that other classes should have more representation in Congress. Just here I will give a list of lawyers and farmers in several Congresses.

In Fiftieth Congress, out of 333 members there were 233 lawyers and 18 farmers. Here lawyers outvoted farmers thirteen times.

In Fifty-first Congress there were 335 members, of which 235 were lawyers and 12 farmers. Here lawyers outvoted farmers nineteen times.

In Fifty-second Congress, 335 members, 223 were lawyers and 14 farmers. Lawyers outvoted farmers sixteen times.

And in Fifty-third Congress, 356 members, 228 were lawyers and about 17 farmers. Lawyers outvoted farmers fourteen times; and in Senate in proportion, so you see that the farmers are not represented in proportion to population, for they constitute nearly three-fourths of the population.

But the farmers will eventually send their own representatives to Congress, and there will be a very different condition of affairs.

There is a little anecdote in point here that has a bearing upon this question and I will take your time for a few moments to relate it. It shows pretty well how the farmers fare in connection with the lawyer. A painter was asked to paint a law suit and this was his idea of it: two farmers had bought a large Jersey cow, which was represented in the foreground of the picture showing a full supply of milk. There was a farmer on each side of the cow, each one trying to get possession of it.

Each one had employed, as they sometimes do, a lawyer to take his side of the case. One farmer was represented on each side of the cow, one pulling at its horns, the other at its tail, while the two lawyers were represented, one on each side, milking the cow [laughter]. But that was not the whole of it. There was a sequel to the story. After they had gotten all the milk out of the cow, one of them irritated the animal in some way, either by sticking his finger into some tender spot, or hurting it in such a way that it started the cow and she hooked one of the farmers over the fence and kicked the other one backwards into the ditch, and then the lawyers drove the cow around back of the courthouse and sold her to pay the costs. [Laughter.] So they will soon want to sell the whole country to pay the costs, and make slaves of the agricultural people.

Now then, as I said before, Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country are getting tired of that sort of arrangement. They have submitted long enough to being mulcted for the benefit of other classes. They are determined to take a hand in legislation themselves. But when the farmer inveighs against the established order of things and wants to take a hand in the business himself, he is called a demagogue. "Why, that fellow wants office now," they will say. "You will have to watch him." The subsidized press of the country will take hold of him. The great big bull-dog dailies of the country will bark at him and call him a demoralizer, and say he wants to break up something, and then you will hear it reëchoed all through the country.

The smaller papers will chime in like so many little fice, "That's a fact; that's a fact." And they will drive him off if he is not a man of nerve. But, sir, some of the farmers of this country have come here, and come to stay, and we are going to devil you until you do something for the farmer. The county must not be carried to the court-house steps and sold to pay the cost. This has been the case all along. I want to say that we have come here to ask for the passage of this bill, which we think is favorable to the farmers of this country, and which will hurt nobody except a few gamblers, who, if they had their rights, would be in penitentiaries to-day, or thereabout, as the fellow said.

A great many things have been said about the farmer organizations. Why, these organizations have been opposed to such an extent that anybody would suppose the farmers had no right to organize. They have been accused of incendiary purposes even in forming these organizations, and divers other evils have been attributed to them. They say the farmers can not agree, never have agreed, and never will agree. They will tell you, "They meet together; they hold conventions; they splutter, use bad English—oh, yes! can not use good English—send a great deal of smoke up the spout, pass resolutions, and adjourn, and that is the last of it." The farmer is a very good fellow if he will only stay in the field and patch and let politics alone; but, as before said, be ready every two years with the votes and fried chicken.

That is what has been said. That and similar remarks have been the shibboleth of the attacks upon the farmers through all these times of uncertainty, and doubt, and change, while they have been trying to work to keep life, and property, and home, and family, trying to adjust themselves to the changed condition of things. These remarks have been made about them, and it is a fact that they are living in a changed day. A revolution of warring sections, as you know, has been followed by a revolution of labor industries and individual responsibilities, which has left the farmer, as it were, almost in a new civilization; or, if in the old civilization, with such altered surroundings that he hardly knows whether he is in the old or new. Wandering along through the mazes of this uncertain state, he has but here and there a fingerboard of the past, pointing him in the way in which his fathers once trod, and he has sometimes almost concluded to give up; but, thank God, he is still alive, and you are going to hear from him again. He is traveling on. He has taken medicine in the neck like old Jack and will yet climb the hill of life to prosperity.

I want to say that it may be possible that we have laid ourselves liable to some of these adverse criticisms. In our vain efforts for relief, possibly we have, like drowning men, sometimes caught at straws. Possibly we have set up men of straw and knocked them down. Possibly we have looked for anchorage where the hope was delusive. But when we are being oppressed and robbed and plundered is it not natural that we should make these efforts to try to relieve ourselves? Is it strange that in their distress they may have offered some impracticable schemes or measures? Then whose duty was it to make them practical? Our Representatives in Congress, of course. But they have only derided and laughed at our schemes instead of trying to perfect them.

But I want to say that the farmers of this country have at last opened their eyes. They see you, they are watching you, they are after you, and if you do not mind, they are going to get you. I want to congratulate the farmers of this great country that they are not like a lot of pups that I heard of, that a man gave to his neighbor, an Irishman named Pat, on one occassion. Pat concluded he wanted to hunt some, and his neighbor gave him half a dozen very fine hound pups. Pat was very proud of them and took them along home. But the next morning he went out to feed them and their eyes were shut. They were very young.

Pat did not understand, so he thought his neighbor had given him a lot of blind dogs. He went out the second morning and their eyes were still closed. He was still more irritated, and it went on until the fourth morning, when he was so mad that he took the poor little pups out and slammed their brains out on a rock. The next day he went along there. He knew they were dead, but he thought he would go and see how they looked. When he got there, lo and behold, there they were, the whole half dozen of them, their legs sticking up like overturned work-benches, their eyes wide open, gazing at the noonday sun.

Pat did not know what to make of it. He looked at them a long time, and finally he soliloquized thus. He said: "You domned little fellows, just to think you had to have your brains knocked out before you would open your eyes!" [Laughter.] So the farmers of this country have been beaten over the head tremendously; but I want to say that they have opened their eyes without having their brains knocked out, but are reasoning about their rights. "He that hath eyes let him see; he that hath ears to hear let him hear, and he that hath a brain let him use it."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Yes; certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do you not think the statute of limitations ought to run at some time in the history of the human race against these stories of yours? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I did not tell him the story to make him laugh. I do not belong to the legal profession, and we do not plead the statute of limitations among farmers; but it is this plea that you make that has gotten this country into such a terrible condition; and one of your pleas is the statute of limitations. You give to the lawyer or manufacturer anything he wants, but when the farmer wants that which is his constitutional right you plead the statute of limitations; and that is the reason why you have got this country into such a fix. You can stretch both your conscience and the Constitution for other classes, but as soon as the farmer asks for something you say it is unconstitutional. [Laughter and applause.] Away with such stuff, my friend; let the farmer have something under the Constitution as well as other classes.

Now, then, I want to say that the education which has been given to the farmer in the Farmers' Alliance and other industrial organizations has opened his eyes. He has been taught to study and investigate for himself; and while, as the saying is, "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," we propose to come to Congress and discuss these questions, big fools as we are, and the gentleman from Ohio can try to make fun of us if he chooses, but we will not down. We are like Banquo's ghost, "we will not down," but we will continue to fight you. I want to say that this kind of education that the farmers have been getting in the last few years is of a practical kind. They have been meeting in their country schoolhouses once or twice a month to discuss crops, etc., and a little politics. Yes; we have at last gone out of the fields into politics, and are there to stay.

That is a kind of education that is doing more good than all the education given in all the colleges that can be started up in the land. Do not understand me as being opposed to schools and colleges. God grant that we had more of them. But what I mean to say is we have no kind of use for a man who is educated at a college who has no practical sense and does not know how to make a living. That reminds me of the case of a young man who had gone to college and spent a good deal of his father's money and had graduated, but had not learned anything at all of any practical use. He had learned to smoke cigarettes, and had learned to part his hair in the middle, like the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG]. [Laughter.] And to wear a leather belt around his body as a vest, and all that. [Laughter.]

All of these he had learned, but he had not learned any common sense. So one hot July day his father said to him—now, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio to stop his ears if he does not want to hear this or plead the statute of limitations. About the last of July his father said to him, "Now, Johnnie, come here; your father wants to hear you talk some Latin. Father has spent a heap of money on you, and now I want you to come up here and talk Latin for me." The young fellow came up, and his father had a horse and plow brought out. "Now," says he, "son, I want to hear what that horse is in Latin." The young fellow said, "Horsibus." "Why, your father never would have known what that was! What's that plow?" "Plowibus." "That's very nice. Well, now, son, if you don't take that horsibus and plowibus and go and plow, I will give you hellibus." [Laughter.] So he put him to workibus. [Laughter.]

We do not want that kind of education. We want a practical education, and we want our young men to have just as much college education as they can have in addition. We want to have an education that will open the broad highway from the humblest man's door, to the summit of American citizenship and society, and have agriculture placed on a higher plane; a kind of education that will be the means of redeeming in part a lost civilization and restoring trade into more wholesome and legitimate channels, and by such education as that we want to take out of the hands of these gamblers, and chambers of commerce, and boards of trade the manipulation of the products of the farm by which they are robbing and plundering the farmer of all he has got. That very kind of teaching has caused this bill to be evolved and be introduced here in this House. And just here let me say that we do not want the young men of our country to be raised up to the belief that laurels can be won only at the bar and on the bench, styled by Alison "the charnel house of genius," while along the pathway of distinction is crowded other professions, and high up upon the pillars of the temple of fame are written the names of others, botanists, sociologists, philosophers, agriculturists, and many others too numerous to mention.

This is a bill brought about and recommended by the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, of which I am glad to be able to say I am a member. In my district, when I was on the stump, I was an Alliance man. I am an Alliance man on the floor of this House, and no blush of shame comes to me by reason of that fact; and I stand here and advocate the demands of that association. They are pure Democratic doctrines, and in them I believe; and the only thing I think that will make this country prosperous is to legislate in accordance with the demands made by the Farmers' Alliance. And let me say in passing that there is no necessity for going out of the Democratic party to obtain these demands if that party will only be wise enough to grant them to the now distressed and poverty stricken people.

Now, then, that is brought in in this bill. Let us examine the bill a little and see what it does. I am for this bill, first, because I am opposed to gambling on general principles, and especially because I believe it will be of benefit to the farmer. And here let me say that I would have preferred a bill utterly prohibiting the gambling in futures but support this one, because it is a move in the right direction and will eventually lead up to that condition. Now, then, it is said that it does not affect the price of goods and products either one way or the other. That is a singular opinion and idea for a man to take here, when millions upon the top of millions have been made both by raising and lowering the price of produce working heavily both upon the producer and consumer. The banks are hand in glove with these fellows, and when the harvest is ready they withhold the money and say to the speculator, "Go out and buy the farmer's produce," and the price goes down at once, and when it is bought up the banks turn over the money, and then the price goes up and then the consumer pays higher prices after it leaves the hands of the producer. The bulls and bears are the same. For instance, they work together. When they want the market to go down the bulls turn to bears and bear down together, and when they want the market to go up the bears turn to bulls and bull up the market, and vice versa.

Now, say there are seven or eight million bales of cotton made every year in the United States, there are seven or eight million bales to be put upon the market to fix the price of cotton, but you go to the exchange in New York and you see that there have been 50,000,000 bales sold. Now, is it not evident that that selling of fictitious cotton must establish a fictitious price for the real cotton? And it is the same with wheat. I do not know exactly how much wheat we raise in this country.

Mr. BOEN. In 1891 we raised 560,000,000 bushels, but the average for some years has been about 450,000,000.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, you go to the exchanges and you find that ten times as much wheat is sold as has any actual existence, and certainly that must affect the price of wheat. As a matter of course it must affect the price.

Now you have had enough of statistics to show a steady decline in prices of produce, but I will give an illustration here: Farmer A in 1866, borrowed $1,000 of banker B, agreeing to pay 10 per cent interest. This is $100 a year. To get this $100 at that time, farmer A had either to sell 50 bushels wheat, 165 bushels oats, 125 bushels corn, 230 pounds butter, 650 pounds pork, or 170 pounds wool. In 1890 the loan is renewed at 7 per cent interest, only $70 annually. To get this, farmer A sells either 120 bushels wheat, 400 bushels oats, 350 bushels corn, 520 pounds butter, 1,400 pounds pork, or 280 pounds wool.

Now, let every farmer make a careful study of this example. A perfect solution of it will disclose the difficulty with which the people are struggling. It is a fair statement of the power of money to oppress. Farming feeds the entire population, doing the work while the other fellow gets the pay.

To control labor in order to absorb its earnings is the problem constantly before the mind of these gambling strategists. The same problem was the one from which the centralized power of Asia grew, and later on the feudal system of other nations. Let us guard against that evil now by passing this bill.

Now, let us examine the bill which does not in the least hinder the free operation of legitimate speculation but only lays an embargo upon dealing in options and futures.

The first section of this bill defines options. The bill defines "options" and "futures." There are only five or six provisions in this bill that need to be examined, and it has never been proven here by anybody who is opposed to it that the bill interferes in a single instance with the legitimate operations of these boards of trade or chambers of commerce. It only affects persons who want to gamble, and one reason why I will vote for it is that it will prohibit and prevent that practice and bring trade back to legitimate channels.

The fifth section provides that all contracts shall be in writing.

Section 6 provides that $12 shall be paid as a license for such contract.

And section 7 provides that a stamp shall be put on each contract.

These are simple and plain provisions, and must be done in a businesslike manner, and no one can object to this.

During the discussion in the Fifty-second Congress it was frequently argued that if this antioption bill was passed cotton and wheat and all other agricultural products would go down immeasurably. Well, the bill was defeated, and cotton and wheat and everything went down, thus indicating that if the bill had passed the opposite result would probably have taken place.

Now, I do not say that the passage of this antioption bill is a panacea for the evils of the farmer. It is not. But it is a move in the right direction and it will help the farmers, and it is the only measure that the farmer has asked for since this Congress met, except such legislation as has been asked for by the whole people. Now, let us examine the report of the committee a little. The committee say the objects sought by the proposed legislation are:

First. To obtain revenue.

Well, is there anything wrong in that? Do we not need revenue? Every bill that has been introduced here for the purpose of reducing expenses or raising revenue has been killed off. The bill to coin the seigniorage was passed by Congress and was vetoed by the President. The tariff bill with the income-tax provision is hanging up in the Senate and no one can say when it may pass. What harm is there, then, in having a bill here which will bring us in a little revenue? The committee say further that other objects of the bill are:

Second. To relieve the producer of the destructive competition to which he is now subjected by the offering, upon exchanges, of illimitable quantities of fiat or fictitious products by those who do not intend to and can not terminate the contract by actual delivery of the articles which they pretend to offer and sell.

Third. To restore to the law of supply and demand that free action which has been destroyed by the practice of "short selling," which practice has, of recent years, become the one mode of determining the price of such agricultural staples as can be graded, while the ordinary methods of commerce are found to suffice for those which can not.

Fourth. That market quotations, now made by the limitless offers of fiat products by the "short seller," regardless of the volume of actual products in existence, may again be determined by the offerings of real products by the owners thereof, or by those who have acquired from such owner the right to the future possession of the articles offered, or can terminate their contracts by actual delivery, and thereby limit to the amount actually existent, the offerings of the staple products of the farm.

Fifth. To prevent the overloading of domestic markets and the breaking down of prices of farm products by "short sales" made by foreign merchants, for the purpose of insuring them against possible loss on purchases of Indian, Egyptian, South American, Australian, and Russian produce, whereby the American farmer and planter are made underwriters of commercial risks of the European, by whom no bonus or premium is paid for assuming insurance risks that destroy the value of our products.

Sixth. That by restoring the functions of the law of supply and demand, now inoperative by reason of the limitless offers of the "short seller," a measure of relief will be given and prosperity partially restored to the great class constituting more than 40 per cent of our population who inhabit the farms, and whose declining prosperity, your committee believe, is due in no inconsiderable degree to the practice of "short selling, whereby the prices of the products of the farm have been determined and fixed, during recent years, at an unremunerative level.

Seventh. To restore to the producer an honest market and such prices as will follow the unfettered operation of the law of supply and demand, which the committee believe will be sufficiently remunerative to restore in part the power of the farmer and planter to purchase the product of forge, factory, and mill, and thus bring prosperity to the artisan, manufacturer, distributer, and transporter.

Well, ought not that to be done? Do we not need to return to the condition where supply and demand control the price? Every man is willing that the legitimate demand for his goods shall fix the price, and the consumer is always willing to pay the price that is fixed in that way. So, as the report goes on to show, this is a just and equitable measure, which will hurt nobody except a few gambling sharks who ought to have been hung or put in the penitentiary long ago.

Now, I want to ask a few questions of gentlemen who are opposed to this bill. Are the transactions in "futures" on the boards of trade legal or illegal? I trust that some of these gentlemen who do not like anecdotes will answer me, but I know that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will say that it is legal, because he will say that anything is legal that suits his side of the case, and the lawyers always follow the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the first place, I answer the gentleman that the sort of contract he refers to is illegal now at common law; and, in the second place, I inform him that I am in favor of the passage of this bill and shall vote for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, I am glad to hear that. When were you converted? The Scriptures says: "While the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return;" even one so vile as the gentleman from Ohio. I accept him as a convert and will baptize him to-morrow. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the next question is, can the losses inflicted by this gambling be recovered in any court of justice? If not, why not stop them by law? Let us be honest and fair, and try to enforce honesty in all business transactions. Now, what governs the selling price of farm products, the actual value of the article or the price fixed by future sales? Everybody knows that when he goes to sell his cotton the price is not governed by spot cash, but that the parties want to wait and find out what "futures" are selling for; so that the price is really controlled by the price of futures. Should this be the case, it is a plain question of common horse sense that the price of futures does control.

Now, is not that wrong; is not that robbery? I think it is.

Is it not a fact that the stronger always destroys the weaker? Have you ever heard of a farmer who was profited by any of these transactions either way? I never did except in one instance where a neighbor of mine bought a few futures and made $500 on them, and the result so turned his head that he went in and bought another lot and lost heavily, and was injured at last. But as he turned to gambling himself, I do not know that he deserved much pity in the case.

Who manipulates the cotton and the grain markets of the world? Answer that question. It is not the men who grow the products. It is the men who have never raised a bushel of grain; who have never "struck a lick" of work in their lives. These men control the prices, gambling upon the sweat and life-blood of the people who produce that which feeds and clothes the world. I say this is not right. In some instances these are men who can not even speak a word of our language. These prices are established by foreigners who can not speak our language, much less join our party and come in and vote for an honest measure, as my distinguished friend has honestly acknowledged he is going to do in voting for this bill. The man who neither produces or owns a bushel of wheat or a pound of cotton says what the farmer and owner shall get for his produce.

No one will deny that millions on millions of dollars are made in this way, upon the turn of a single trade. These parties who control brokers' offices and bucket shops and grain pits are many of them millionaires. How did they get their money? Whom did they get it out of if not out of the men who made the produce? That is a simple common-sense question. I stand here to say fearlessly that I do not believe any man in the United States is to-day in possession of his hundreds of millions of property honestly. I do not believe that such a man has an honest title. His wealth was not gotten honestly. I do not believe millions are made by honest transactions; you need not tell me the contrary.

Then let us break up this business; let us stop this system by which under our Government and laws we are making millionaires and tramps—making the gulf between Dives and Lazarus wider and wider, instead of giving every man, black, white, or red, an equal show in life. Let us stop this thing of putting the whole burden upon the farmer; let us give him a little protection. Let us protect everybody or protect nobody. Let our rule be, equal rights to all and special privileges to none. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have no prepared speech; I do not believe in reading compositions here as if this were a Sunday school. I might say a good deal more on this question, but I have a friend to whom I have agreed to yield a part of my time. Let me say only a word in conclusion. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I do not want to consume any more time. There is no partisanship in this measure. It is about the only measure coming before this body that my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], lately converted, can not jump up and make a partisan speech upon to send to his district to get votes with. Let us come together as one man, looking only to the condition of this great, grand, glorious, rich country of ours.

As my friend from Chicago has truly said, it is a rich country, but who has the wealth? It is in the hands of a few, and the history of all nations teaches that when the wealth of a nation is concentrated in the hands of a few that nation is doomed. We have a great and rich country, and I am proud of it; but beneath all this grandeur and greatness is the canker of a disturbed and oppressed people. Let us now come together and give to those men who are the "mudsills" of all our prosperity one little measure of assistance. This is the one little thing they have asked here.

Let us join hands from the North and the South and the East and the West; let us turn our backs upon the past, and let us hope that when Father Time grows weary of his work of demolition and sits down and looks out upon the wrecks and ruins of nations and governments, he may see rising out of the débris the great temple of American liberty, built by the farmers of this country, having inscribed on its portals, "Justice and equality to every man, red, white, and black." [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield the residue of my time to my friend from Michigan [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has seventeen minutes remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I supposed that I should be entitled to the floor in my own right just after the gentleman from South Carolina had concluded; but perhaps I may be able to compress my remarks into these seventeen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that if he proceeds now, he must confine himself to the seventeen minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (to Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan). Why not reserve your time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. It is strange to me that I am limited in this way, when I thought I had a clear understanding that I was to have time in my own right.

Several MEMBERS. Reserve your time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I think I will address the committee at this time. I have had so much trouble heretofore in getting time that I think it best to take it when I can have it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in support of the pending bill, and I hope they will prove as applicable to this as any other. I shall not argue the constitutional question involved; that may be disposed of by the courts, inasmuch as the lawyers disagree. Where there is any doubt, I would give the benefit of the doubt to the people, who have for years demanded legislation of this character.

I believe the bill has a very good purpose, and I think the effect will be beneficial to our agricultural, commercial, business, financial, and moral interests. As I understand it, the bill proposes a tax for the purpose of regulating certain transactions which are considered damaging to legitimate business; that make unstable our markets, being wholly of a speculative character and in the nature of gambling.

Such transactions make prices fluctuate too much for either the interest of the farmer or the miller, who is in fact the farmer's real customer. The miller buys the bulk of the wheat and is interested in an even market, for he has always on hand flour which must represent the price of the wheat purchased of the farmer, plus the cost of labor, with other expenses, and the miller's margin of profit for handling. All consumers and dealers are interested in an even market.

All dealers in flour are interested in and anxious to have steady prices. Farmers are also interested in steady prices; but few are ready to take advantage of a sudden rise in the market, which as suddenly falls again.

The dealers in puts, calls, spreads, and straddles, and the brokers on the boards of trade who secure a commission out of every transaction, are directly interested in a market that is afflicted with chills and fevers produced by bulls and bears, with all sorts of rumors of droughts and floods, short crops and good crops, railroad strikes, elevator rows, etc. They care nothing for the value of wheat or the success of those who produce it, for their profits depend entirely upon the margins and movements in the market temperature. The more frequent the fluctuations the more numerous the commissions; the more extreme the fluctuations the greater the margin of profits.

As I look at it, such speculation is a disadvantage to all legitimate business dealers in everything dealt in on exchange simply on margins. What is true of wheat is true of corn, oats, cotton, pork, and lard.

I will have the Clerk read a clipping from the Chicago Herald to show what conditions exist, and upon what pretexts and rumors these dealers in options and futures rely for a basis and cause of fluctuations in the market price of the daily necessities of the whole people.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIELD OF COMMERCE—WHEAT TRADE SEE BEAR REASONS—THE BREAKING OF THE DROUGHT, THE ELEVATOR ROW, THE NEW HARVEST AND ABSENCE OF CASH BUSINESS DEPRESSING WHEAT—CORN SHIPPERS BULLISH.

Wheat has lost half its recent advance and shows no strength at the decline. The relief from the drought has had the usual effect—caused the dry weather to be almost forgotten. The uncertainty as to the elevator situation has driven out longs and kept away buyers. There is actually nothing in the row to depress prices if outsiders and local traders would but consider the matter from a logical standpoint. The status of the wheat would not be affected for speculative purposes until January 1, even if all the brave threats now indulged in were carried out.

The only possible effect would be, by shutting out new arrivals, to lessen and not increase the amount of grain deliverable on contract. There is nothing in that to add to the depression of the price. As to a fear that the elevator people will deliver out a great lot of winter wheat, it is only necessary to remember that the whole present row grows out of a claim on the part of the elevator people that they can not under any restrictions keep their warehouses full. With their anxiety on that score it is not at all likely they will deliver out any wheat which they are not sure of getting back. The talk of deliveries of "skinned" grades on July 1 is also unnecessary.

The irritation is enough now to make the warehousemen particularly anxious not to give any real reasons for bad blood toward them. But the speculator always takes the sentimental view of things, and so, although there is nothing which could grow out of the elevator row, unless rascality is assumed, that would unfavorably affect prices, outside bulls are keeping away because of it and local bulls are waiting for the full effect of this timidity to be felt.

The local speculative situation, fully as much as the break in the drought or as the fear of the result of the elevator war, is bearish. The July liquidation is beginning and there is in existence to meet and offset it less than the usual short interest. The market is especially missing the usual Pardridge line. This would be the time, if he were interested, for him to be taking in July shorts and to be reselling for September. But Pardridge was driven out a fortnight ago and some say has even turned bull. Certain of his party surely have. There are the short sales of the elevator people to be covered, and the short sales of the cash holders generally over the country, the exporters, the shippers, and the millers. Most of these evidently want a very wide difference. Even the 2¾ cents "spread" of Saturday, which is almost extortionate, did not start but a few of them to "changing."

The failure to market any of the Chicago stock of wheat on this advance has had its effect. The trade now is making much of the fact that there is just as large a supply here as there was a month ago, with the new crop already arriving at St. Louis and Baltimore. It yet remains to be seen whether the premium here over the other winter wheat markets will attract more than the usual proportion of new grain. It will not take more than small new receipts and small local increases to cause everybody to forget about the damaged crop and the possible scarcity ahead. The one bullish feature about the wheat situation at the moment is the improvement abroad. The Argentine liquidations of bankrupt wheat is apparently over. Liverpool has not reacted much with the break here. The continental markets have been strong independently of America on wet weather at home. It looks as if this present weakness on this side and strength abroad might reëstablish after awhile a parity.

CORN SHIPPERS BULLISH.

Corn shippers are pretty nearly all of them bulls now, expecting that the remnant of the last crop will get scarcer until the new crop is made. Prospects of the growing corn are almost perfect, but the cash demand for the old has improved and the supply has kept decreasing for a month and a half until it is now small. The cheaper grades have been used up especially close, there being left at Chicago practically nothing but the contract grade. Supplies are made uncertain by the lack of the usual cribbed stock, leaving it all with the farmers whether enough corn comes along to supply demands at present prices. The shippers' theory is that the farmers will be influenced by the high price of oats and be led to hold corn for higher prices toward the end of the crop year.

The settlement of the coal strike has had the expected result—advanced provisions. June hog receipts are always relatively heavy, just as December's always are. The pit theory is that the important manufacturers have turned bulls.

The following shows the range for the week of the principal articles on the Board of Trade.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I believe to regulate or prohibit such transactions, while it might interfere with the personal liberty of the individual, can be justified because of benefits to business and society.

I am of the opinion that such trade should be taxed and regulated, if not prohibited altogether. The written agreement required to be made of each sale to be stamped under the provisions of this bill will be the means of ascertaining the extent of the transactions of this character, and will doubtless lead to good results.

Let us analyze a couple of transactions, one actual and one option. Mr. Chairman, suppose you have $30,000 in the bank. It is to your interest and a matter of considerable concern to know how you can best employ it. You study the world's product and supply of wheat and the present market, which is at about 50 cents, and convince yourself that you can do well to buy wheat for a rise. You purchase 60,000 bushels of wheat and store it in the elevator. The farmers who brought in your wheat now have the money and you have the wheat. The transaction has been actual and you have made a market for 60,000 bushels. The wheat and the cash have changed hands.

In thirty days wheat advances 5 cents. You close out the wheat at an advance of $3,000, out of which you pay for warehouse and other expenses perhaps $1,500. You then have a net profit of $1,500, or 5 per cent for the use of your capital thirty days.

Now, Mr. Chairman, suppose you have studied the operations of the produce exchange in Chicago, St. Louis, or some other great city. Brokers have kept their daily price list before you, and have advised you to buy an option on wheat instead of buying the actual wheat. You are quoted a thirty-day call contract at 3 cents a bushel, which you take. Your $30,000 buys an option on 1,000,000 bushels. The price goes up 5 cents a bushel, and you close the contract at a profit of 2 cents a bushel, which nets you $20,000, or 66⅔ per cent on the investment, less the commission paid to your broker.

You have not created a market for one bushel of wheat. You have not transferred one dollar from the bank to the farmer's pocket. No warehouse has received a cent for storage, and no person has received a cent for honest labor. You have made as much net cash as you ought to get for ten years' use of your capital. Your capital has now increased to $50,000, and you keep it in the bank awaiting another opportunity. You will not use it to buy the farmer's wheat and hold it for a rise, although the price is low, and the farmer needs the money. You will not loan the money on a first-class mortgage to save a present foreclosure. The bank is liable to pay your deposit on call, and will not use more than 75 per cent of it, and that on strictly commercial paper. So the speculation on the farmer's product has made a large profit for you without your touching it, or even making a market or creating a demand for a single bushel of his wheat.

Now, Mr. Chairman, large sums of money are diverted from legitimate business and kept in banks for such speculation in wheat, corn, oates, cotton, pork, lard, etc. The wheat, oats, and cotton, figuratively speaking, are bought and sold while growing in the field. Mess pork, lard, and bacon are in the same way bought and sold while the lean hogs are squealing in the pastures waiting for the corn to mature upon which they are to fatten.

Can anyone doubt that such a speculative practice is injurious to legitimate business? Can anyone doubt that the uncertainty of the markets are increased by such methods? Is it not probable if capital is denied opportunities for such employment that it would practically be forced into other and legitimate employment? Surely to tax its employment would increase the revenue and furnish data from which could be determined the amount of capital thus employed, and the extent of the transactions so carried on.

If the tax operates to prohibit such business, then the capital employed in other and legitimate pursuits would be reënforced.

Far too much of the capital of the country is engaged in speculating in produce and stock margins in our markets. It has a fascination that lures many a man to his ruin, and there is scarcely a community in the country that has not felt its blighting curse. Judges, lawyers, bankers, professors of science, and church leaders have become criminals and been driven from home, society, and their country by the not unusual results of speculating in options and futures.

I believe legislation that will regulate or prohibit such business is prudent and will be well received by the great mass of our people. [Applause.]

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. I ask that the gentleman from Michigan may have such additional time as he may desire.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I shall only want about five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the time of the gentleman will be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I do not desire that much time. I will conclude in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan then resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, a very little while ago I noticed that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture was out of his place in the House, and it was my expectation to speak from his seat and take charge of the bill for him during his absence [laughter], which will account for my delay in selecting a place to address the House from.

This measure is one which ought to give a Democrat that "tired feeling" which you read about in those books that provide remedies free of charge for bald heads and all the other ailments of life. [Laughter.] If this new exhibition of Democracy is accepted by the Democratic party on the floor of this House, the bridge which separates us from our friends on the other side, who believe in special and class legislation, will have been constructed.

This is a measure which must turn the Populists green with envy when they read it. Where in the writings of Mrs. Lease, for instance, or in the orations of Senator PEFFER, can anything comparable with this as a Populist measure be produced? I am really glad that our good friend Watson is out of the House; for if he were here, and discovered that another man was capable of so far outreaching him in his peculiar lines of legislation as this bill indicates, the result would doubtless be fatal, not to the author of this bill, but I think to Mr. Watson himself, although perhaps such an ending for Mr. Watson would be quite satisfactory to some of our brethren from Georgia this fall. [Laughter.]

But, gentlemen, to the people outside of this House, to the patient and suffering people of the United States, the discussion seriously of legislation like this and this proposal by some members of the Democratic party for increasing the price of food, for enlarging the cost of clothing—I say when the people outside of this House observe this, and also reflect that the gentlemen on the Republican side are constantly engaged in schemes for increasing the price of everything else, it will not be strange if the plain people throughout the length and breadth of the country cry out, "A plague upon both your houses!"

Now, what does this bill propose to do, sir? You might fairly divide its intent under three heads. One proposes to raise revenue; under the next head it proposes to increase the price of all agricultural products, and under the third it is proposed to reform men and wash their lives white, not with soap and water, but by an act of Congress! This is the threefold scope of the bill, and for genuine madness and utter recklessness of the proprieties of legislation it has no parallel in any scheme which has ever been presented here, unless it be in the vagaries of a young, excellent, and eloquent friend of mine, who spoke so earnestly in this House last night (Mr. BRYAN of Nebraska), proposing, as a Democratic measure to the people of the United States, that this Government shall go into the business of issuing from seventy to one hundred millions of legal-tender shinplasters in order that the United States may enter into a partnership with a lot of speculators who are thinking of digging a big ditch across the Isthmus of Nicaragua! I say that I do not know of any legislation at all comparable with this, excepting perhaps the so-called Democratic Senate tariff bill.

This may be called a Missouri bill. Missouri has the richest soil, it produces in many respects the very best of men, large in stature, great in ability, and all such things—it is indeed an incomparable State. Observe the peculiar kind of legislation which seems to be natural to the soil of Missouri. [Laughter.] For instance, let us take the three kinds of legislation that have become popular in this House—in this Populist House, I suppose it would be called, for our Populist friends say it will be Populist next time.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; they are all coming over to us.

Mr. HARTER. My friend says they are all coming over. Yes; I begin to fear that, when I see my good friend, GROSVENOR, making his way in that direction so rapidly. But I must say that I feel the reception he has been given by the Populists is a very ungracious and undeserving one, if I understand my distinguished friend from South Carolina——

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HARTER. I can not yield to my friend now.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I want to correct my friend. He quotes me as a Populist. I want to tell him that I am an Alliance Democrat.

Mr. HARTER. I accept the gentleman's correction. I want to say that I judged him to be a Populist by the sentiments he has just been expressing here. I must have misunderstood the tenor of his remarks. But I want to say, when he welcomes Gen. GROSVENOR as the vilest man, it is a mistake. There have been other men in Ohio who are still worse than Gen. GROSVENOR. [Laughter.] Gen. GROSVENOR had the bad grace to say that I was one of them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If my colleague will allow me to interrupt him, I am very much obliged to him for the statement, and

I am satisfied that he testifies from the very fullest knowledge on the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTER. Since the gentleman has shown a proper appreciation for my services to him, which some gentlemen for whom I have secured offices have not, I wish to say that I think the gentleman is one of the best men in Ohio. [Laughter.] But I was speaking of Missouri and her climate and soil. There is something singular about what comes of Democratic seed, if planted in the clay of Missouri. For instance, we, as Democrats, used to believe in honest money, and we were opposed to legal-tender shinplasters of every description, and opposed to dishonest financial methods of every kind; but we discover that even a legal-tender shinplaster worth 99 or 99¾ cents on the dollar is not considered the proper caper in Missouri, for what Missouri desires above all things is that her people may raise the best kind of wheat, and grow the very best kind of pork, and then take the worst kind of money in payment for it. That is one of the idiosyncrasies of Missouri. They call it Democracy by courtesy.

Some of the Democrats of Missouri have views, yes, convictions, on the labor question. A distinguished Democrat from Missouri came very near laying me out at the last election. The Republican people in our State took ordinary precautions to do that in advance, but, not satisfied with this, my friend from Missouri brought in a bill, as you will remember, which prevented any laboring man in the United States from working more than eight hours on public works, even if he had eighteen children. The injustice of such a measure was, as a Democrat, very clear to me, and I voted against it, but I regret to say was lonesome, for only three other Democrats in the Northern States voted against this rubbish. The result was that when I went out into my Congressional district in Ohio I found that nearly every labor agitator had it in for Harter, so to speak. This is another of the idiosyncrasies and pleasing Democratic (?) freaks of Missouri. And, by the way, we will soon have this labor question settled, for I have arranged with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that before the session closes there shall be brought in a bill which everybody will feel constrained to vote for, and which will finally put to rest the entire labor question.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] is not present, but he has consented to bring in the bill by request. It provides that hereafter in the United States it shall be illegal for anybody whomsoever, millionaire or otherwise, to work at all between meals. [Laughter.]

Now, I say these are only a brace of the cheerful and pleasing political ideas that come from Missouri. But to-day we have another. Here is a proposition to raise revenue, to start with. We have an able Committee on Agriculture, but I discover that this committee were so pressed for time as to be utterly unable to find out how much revenue this bill would produce. You know it is a great merit to produe revenue when we are out of revenue. It is a great service to the country to pour money, by this antioption bill, into the Treasury at a time when we need it so badly. So I thought I would see how effective the bill was going to be.

I have discovered that in the event of this bill becoming a law, and putting a stop to all gambling operations, about which our undemocratic brethren are so much worried, it would probably produce, judging by the report of the committee, an annual revenue of $9,733.34. I take this report to be gospel, because the chaplain from Pennsylvania, who was addressing the camp meeting here yesterday afternoon, certified to it. [Laughter.] It must therefore be gospel, at any rate with the Populists; and inasmuch as it states that one-tenth of these products are sold upon the exchanges, applying the rate of taxation which the sapient members of this committee have put into the bill, I discover that the total income resulting from this tax will be $9,733.34 in years when the crops are large, and of course less when they are small.

This is a large sum to pour into the Treasury of the United States every year, is it not? But in order to get this into the Treasury, I discover, by application to the Internal-Revenue Department, that it would cost less than $100,000. Putting it down at $90,000, for every dollar of revenue received into the Treasury of the United States via this bill the cost would be, say, $9. This does not, of course, include the expense of a multitude of costly law suits the Government would be obliged to carry on.

Mr. PENCE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HARTER. I can not to-day.

Mr. PENCE. I never asked you one before. I asked you one one time, and you did not get time to answer it.

Mr. HARTER. That is true. Better luck to you this time.

Mr. PENCE. I understand you to base your statement as to the cost of collection on information received from the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. HARTER. That is, as to the expense of collecting.

Mr. PENCE. I think the House would like to have that made clear, because I submit that as I understand from the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] the appointment of an additional officer to execute this law would not be necessary.

Mr. HARTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] is apparently, if his quotations at the Populist seance yesterday decide, a much better authority on the Bible than he is on this subject; so you can count him out. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENCE. I know, if your statement is correct, and if this estimate is made by the Department, the House will be glad to have a few facts about it.

Mr. HARTER. I will give them, but I would rather not be interrupted, inasmuch as I have scarcely got started into the discussion of this tremendous Missouri measure. I have treated this bill with no great degree of seriousness, because it has not occurred to me that it was a bill that required that kind of treatment. When you have a tragedy on hand you carry a long and solemn face, but if it is a farce, like this antioption bill, you feel like enjoying yourself and taking your family along with you. [Laughter]. But as the information is asked I will read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 19, 1894.

HON. MICHAEL D. HARTER:

Impossible to estimate on short notice the increase in the annual expenses if this office has to execute the antioption bill in all parts of the United States. Expense not believed to be great, probably less than $100,000.

G. W. WILSON,
Acting Commissioner.

Therefore I estimate it at $90,000.

Mr. PENCE. Why not a dollar and a half?

Mr. HARTER. Say, then, the cost of the execution of this exceedingly meddlesome bill will be $1.50. You see I am very obliging to you Populists. The receipts over and above the expenses under the Populist view of this case, then, would be $9,731.84, about enough money to keep a Democratic Congress in toilet soap for a session.

But to come to another phase of this matter. I am not going to talk much, if at all, about the constitutionality of this bill, after the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLACK] has spoken on that subject in connection with the bank-tax measure; but I recommend to you, my good friends from the South, a thorough digestion of Mr. BLACK'S constitutional argument, for it applies perfectly to this case. Every syllable, word, and line applies to the bill now under discussion.

But who will pay these taxes, if they are paid? It is the unfortunate farmer. The unfortunate farmer will pay the tax under this bill, and he alone.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That is about all the use you have for him.

Mr. HARTER. Remember, I am not supporting this new plan for robbing the farmer. It is true it is only going to raise a small amount; but why select the farmer for more taxation? Our Republican friends have had him under the harrow for the last thirty years. Why should you Populists and Democratic Populists, and why should the Democratic-Prohibition-Populist candidate for governor in my adopted State come in here and make such a proposition in the name of the farmer, when the farmer is at the plow and none of them know what injury he is proposing to do them here? I am afraid if this bill passes and the effect of it is seen on prices on the produce exchanges between this and the election, there will be no chance for my reverend friend, no matter how many parties may nominate him for governor this fall. But now as to prices; as I think I have exploded the idea of revenue, for the bill, if passed, will simply help to increase the Treasury deficit.

Now, as to prices. My excellent and able and dangerously eloquent friend from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] stated that the effect of dealing in options, etc., was to reduce the price of the article so dealt in. Now, sir, any page upon the floor of this House would say at once, "If this is true, Mr. BRYAN, then the markets in which option trading is carried on extensively would be the lowest priced, otherwise you are mistaken." The fact is, gentlemen, that the markets of the United States in which option trading prevails are the high-priced markets of the United States of America and of the world; and when you think over the matter you can see that it could not be otherwise. What makes prices? Demand. What helps and greatly enlarges actual demand? Trading.

Now, the short seller comes in the House of Representatives of the United States for a great deal of blame. I admire the short seller. I sympathize with the short seller. I think the poor devil deserves sympathy. It is he who is always in the most dangerous position. He is like the man in a forlorn hope in time of battle. He can not often hope to be a winner. In the first place he develops a new demand for the grain he sells, and that puts up the price of it. Why? Because in the first place he can not sell unless there is a buyer, and by his own short selling he makes himself a positive and anxious buyer; later on he must be a buyer no matter whether he wishes or not. In every time of disaster, in the hour of panic, in the midst of bank disturbances, who is it, I ask you, who maintains the prices of stocks, the price of cotton, the price of wheat, and of corn? It is the short seller, and the short seller alone.

When everybody else is panic stricken; when nobody else is able to buy; when those who have already bought are disturbed, or perhaps bankrupt, in their efforts to carry what they have bought, there is nobody to go in and stand under that market for the farmer and the planter except the short seller. We ought to sing praises to the short seller. If there is any man who deserves the thanks and the blessings of the planters and the farmers it is the man who has the courage to go on the exchange and sell their products "short." Do you know, you planters of the South, do you know that there are to-day between three and four million bales of surplus cotton in the world for which there is no market?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. There is no money to buy it with.

Mr. HARTER. Destroy these exchanges and where would this cotton go now? In this country to-day we have about a hundred million bushels of wheat and a big crop coming on, and no market for the wheat in sight, and yet, as a result of buying and selling futures and options on the exchanges, wheat to-day is 3 or 4 cents above the parity of the world's value. I am going to quote from my very able and eloquent and ingenious friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] as to what it is that makes markets. In his speech in May, 1892, upon the tariff he made the remarks I am about to quote, and when he stands upon ground that he is familiar with he preaches a political gospel which any man may properly use as a text, but he is a little off his beat when he gets into any commercial question of this kind. [Laughter.] I ask the Clerk to read the passage of the speech of the gentleman from Missouri which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the wheat-growers can not be protected; it is a commercial impossibility. We raise a surplus and ship to the consuming countries of the world and we have to sell that surplus against the lowest-priced labor on earth and in the open markets of the world. The wheat-grower must compete with all the pauper labor, and the lowest pauper labor on earth, and he must sell the surplus that fixes the price on his entire crop in competition with that labor.

Mr. HARTER. There, sir, with his own lance he transfixes himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Pull it out and go ahead. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTER. I will devote a little attention to you after awhile, if I find I can spare the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I thought you would probably slop over somewhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTER. That settles the point, and ought to settle it in the minds of most people. The price of what the farmer produces is fixed by the surplus, and the price of the surplus is fixed in the market where the surplus is sold. Now, gentlemen, you will have to face your farmer friends on this question. Many of you are afraid to vote against this bill, thinking that they want you to vote for it; but you will have to face them by and by, and face them when they put such points to you as this, that the very markets that you would destroy by this legislation are the highest markets on earth. Suppose my Populist-Alliance friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] had a lot of cotton to sell, as he doubtless has, what kind of a market does he seek?

He would want to sell in a high-price market. That is the option market and no other.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Selling in that market a man does not sell his cotton at all. He goes and makes one of these transactions and then goes home and tells his wife that he has sold ten bales of cotton, when in fact he has not done any such thing, but it is sold for him by these fictitious gamblers.

Mr. HARTER. Well, I am glad to know that even the gamblers are fictitious. [Laughter.] I suffered under the dreadful suspicion that they were real, actual, bona fide devils. Some of you gentlemen here are farmers, amateur farmers, agriculturists of different degrees.

Now, if you are a wheat farmer, what kind of a market do you send your wheat to? Who sends his wheat to market in Cincinnati? Who sends his cotton to Frankfort, Ky.? Who sends his corn to Hard Scrabble, Ill.? None of you. All of you who have any agricultural products to sell seek the option markets. Why? Simply because they are the highest markets. Now, I have a fatherly, a brotherly, a filial interest in my good friend from Missouri, Gen. HATCH, and one reason why I shall vote against this bill is to prevent the stigma of its passage from falling upon his shoulders, because next year when the Populists of the South and the farmers of the West get in their cotton and their wheat and seek to make their sales in the highest markets, the answer will be, "Gen. HATCH has destroyed those markets; there are no longer any markets of that kind." Everybody knows that under such circumstances my friend from Missouri would not be a welcome guest at any county fair in the United States, and as long as I live I want to see him in a position where the farmers and the planters will greet him with, "Hail, Gen. HATCH," and not "Damn Gen. HATCH," as they would if he can make this bill law. [Laughter.] I am the best friend the gentleman from Missouri has on this floor.

And now, suppose you could do this. Suppose you could interfere with the liberty of a man in Ohio to go out and cut his corn, or to decide whether he should live in a brick house or a frame house, or whether or not he would buy at this time the wheat he wanted to use next December—suppose you could pass a bill of this kind, and that instead of it being a silly, meddlesome, mischievous boomerang, that it was wise, prudent, and constitutional, and would do what you ignorantly imagine it will, what would you accomplish? You would increase the price of bread to every man, woman, and child in this country.

What an infamous idea to present here to the members of this House, and to the country, and from a Democratic source! It is unfortunate, to say the least, that this measure emanates from the Democratic side of the House. I can understand perfectly well the consistency of my friend from Ohio, Gen. GROSVENOR. He has always believed in this kind of legislation, and he ought to vote for it. But my friend Gen. HATCH never believed in such rubbish, and he ought to do as I do with this bill—throw it into the wastebasket and say, if we forgive him this once he will never do it again. And we will forgive him, too.

Mr. PENCE. Did not the gentleman himself, in his interrogatory to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] a day or two ago, maintain that the dealings on the stock boards raised the prices?

Mr. HARTER. The gentleman admitted it.

Mr. PENCE. Did you not maintain that?

Mr. HARTER. I did and I do; and there is this difference between a Democrat like myself and a Populist like Mr. BRYAN. I say that if free, unfettered, constitutional, lawful speculation or dealing on any board naturally raises the price of an article, that article is raised, if you like, by the very law of God, because it is the law of nature. But I would not pass a law to raise the price of anything; nor would I pass a law to put down the price of anything. What clause is it, gentlemen, in the Chicago platform, that we have heard so much about, which says it is the duty of a Democratic Congress to pass laws designed to put up or put down the price of any article? I will wait a moment for some one to produce on this floor a plank or two of that mutilated unfortunate and much misunderstood platform. [Laughter.]

I am speaking of this bill as a Democrat looks at it—not as a Populist looks at it. I have great respect, you understand, for both Populists and Republicans. The view they take of it is a natural one for them.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. How long since you left the Republicans?

Mr. HARTER. Probably I have been a Democrat longer than you have. I am an entirely different kind of a Democrat, you observe.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I am glad you are. If you are a Democrat, I do not want to be one. If you are a Democrat, I am not.

Mr. HARTER. In this latest expression of feeling which the gentleman has presented to the House, he and I cordially agree.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. The gentleman changes too much—first a Republican, then a Democrat—first a pig, then a puppy, figuratively speaking.

Mr. HARTER. If the gentleman thinks that kind of language proper in debate here, he is welcome to his opinion. Now, sir, let me proceed with this good-humored discussion of a very foolish bill.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. The gentleman will allow me to say I used that expression in a speech the other day. I did not mean it in an offensive sense. I was alluding to the Mugwumps, and I told an anecdote about an old negro who carried a pair of pups——

Mr. HARTER. My dear sir, the reason——

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I think you heard my speech of the other day.

Mr. HARTER. I credit you with being too much of a gentleman to use such a term on this floor in any offensive sense. Nobody can be more conscious of the fact that the term "puppy" can ever apply to me, coming from anybody.

But, gentlemen, the world has had this kind of laws before—never passed by Democrats. Let me give you a history of this kind of legislation. I am not absolutely certain, but I think the Chinese tried it in the eleventh century; I am certain, however, that the Dutch tried it in the year 1610, and our ancestors in England tried it in 1734. And in 1812 they had just such a law as this on the statute book in the State of New York.

And during the late war a number of our friends here—and they were good men deeply interested in the welfare of the country—decided that persons who were selling greenbacks short for gold were engaged in a criminal trade. This was in 1864.

Secretary Chase was satisfied that the thing was treasonable; and my able, learned, honorable, safe, cautious friend, Senator SHERMAN, after a while was seduced into the same belief, and you remember the law was passed, a law like this of my friend from Missouri; it was indeed the original of the Hatch bill, so far as Congress is concerned, and it provided that no man should sell greenbacks short. My friend from New York [Mr. HENDRIX] will remember it. What was the effect? It was promised that greenbacks would go up and gold would go down, just as our learned friends here to-day promise the cotton-raisers and the wheat-growers that their products shall go up if this pending bill is passed. What happened? Within two days after that law was passed gold shot up like a rocket, rising, I think, 78 cents on the dollar; and within fifteen days the law was repealed. So if you pass this antioption law you will be glad to repeal it within fifteen days; but I tell you that will not save the bacon of my friend HATCH, and I am speaking in his behalf this afternoon.

I do not want to see all the presidential timber in the Democratic party destroyed, cut up by the roots at this session of Congress if I can help it, because if all these other men are cut out, it may be possible that I myself will have to offer my carcass as a sacrifice at the next presidential election [laughter]—a fate which I very much desire to avoid if possible. You can understand, therefore, my interest in preserving for the country and for the party our great, strong, sound, safe men. If they are to be allowed to kill themselves off with free-silver, sugar-trust, anti-option, high-tariff measures, our party will, I am afraid, turn to me as the only genuine, reliable, blue-blooded Democrat on earth, and thus force me into the breach and ultimately elect me, for I give you notice that if ever I am nominated for President, nobody can prevent the country availing itself of such an unusual bargain.

I can understand, Mr. Chairman, how a man like my friend from Missouri, Gen. HATCH—an earnest man, who is right on many political subjects—should have gotten himself into the way of believing that some such measure like this (which he does not understand) would be of some practical value to somebody. But his friends ought to come to his rescue. I can excuse him, and I hope the country will, though I am sure that the very best thing that we can do for him will be to help to defeat this bill, and save him from all risks. [Laughter.]

Until this bill was introduced all legislation prohibiting speculation in food products was urged because speculation invariably advances the price of corn, of wheat and oats, and it has been reserved for the philosophers on the agricultural committee to discover that this is all a mistake and that it reduces them. They are such marvels in the line of discovery that it might be wise to authorize them to investigate the facts and report to the House the name of the man who struck Billy Patterson.

Is it possible that these men do not remember a few years ago that the workingmen of Chicago threatened to blow up the produce exchange because it raised the price of wheat and increased the cost of flour? Never in the history of the United States, except for a few days last summer, caused by the currency or bank panic, has the price of wheat, corn, or cotton on any option or future-dealing exchange been lower than its proper parity with the world's markets; on the contrary, on such markets the prices are nearly always above—to the advantage of the farmer and planter—and when "corners" come the people who reap the profits are the planters and the farmers, while the reviled "shorts" are compelled to bleed gold. The perfectly enormous advantages which these exchanges confer on the farmers Gen. HATCH would (not intentionally it is true, but actually) take from them, and thus depress the farm and the plantation still more.

Who is back of this bill? Who brought it before Congress? I will tell you. I am a miller myself and I know a little about this subject. Senator WASHBURN and some of his friends want this bill enacted. Of course they do, for the very same reason that Gen. HATCH does—over the left. I know that Gen. HATCH is sincere in his convictions, and that he would like to see wheat sell for $1 per bushel. I know, too, that the gentleman from South Carolina on my right is sincere, and he wants the price of cotton put up to 10 cents. Gen. HATCH wants wheat—the market price—put up, and so would I if the laws of God and of nature would put it up. But I am opposed to even considering here any law which the framers hope will require any poor washerwoman in this land to pay a cent a bushel more for the wheat she is compelled to use in flour, or a cent a yard more for the calico that she needs to clothe her than the laws of trade—supply and demand—require.

Senator WASHBURN and his associates have trained with Gen. HATCH, and if the general were to look around he would find a large-sized colored man in his woodpile. Is it possible that he can suppose Mr. WASHBURN et al., the agents, stockholders, and friends of the great British milling syndicate, favor this legislation from the same standpoint that he does? Why, even the reverend chaplain [Mr. SIBLEY] of this new anti-option religion got mad last night because he thought that my friend WARNER was helping the British to put down the price of cotton in order to buy a woolen suit cheaper. [Laughter.]

In fact, to-day the agents of the British milling syndicate, who are interested in putting down the price of wheat, you will find, are the real friends and only intelligent well-posted advocates of this bill. I like these men very much as company at dinner; but when it comes to sleeping with them in a political bed, I say to my friend from Missouri he had better come and sleep with me, though I am in favor of a hundred-cent dollar and free trade on our exchanges and low taxes everywhere, and I say that I welcome him back to the Democratic fold, not as my friend from South Carolina welcomes Gen. GROSVENOR, as the "vilest of the vile."

But, Mr. Chairman, let me proceed. Here Senator WASHBURN and his cohorts are, and how earnestly do they desire that the price of the farmer's wheat shall be enhanced in the market; for, of course, the more they pay for wheat the less their flour costs them (?). You will do the farmer more real injury through this bill than dry weather, grasshoppers, and chinch bugs combined. Take, for instance, next August, when Gen. HATCH wants to market his grain, and the farmers generally want to market theirs. Do you suppose they could find a market for all the wheat in that time of rush at decent prices if it was not for "futures" and "option" trading? Well, yes; perhaps they could; but they would find me a buyer, they would have Mr. WASHBURN for a buyer, and many others like us, and practically at our own prices. What do you think we would pay?

The same is true, I will say to my friend from South Carolina, when you bring in your eight million bale crop, as I hope it will be. Do you suppose you will find a market for it at a fair price if only actual buyers bid on it and you exclude speculators? Just as soon as dealing in futures ceases you will find nobody wanting to buy except at combination prices. Why, as a matter of course as soon as your law goes into effect, and you stop the buying of cotton for future delivery, down goes the price of cotton like Mr. What's-his-Name to the bottom of the sea. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. McGinty.

Mr. HARTER. Well, I hope Mr. McGinty will excuse me for connecting his name with this kind of crazy legislation. [Laughter.]

Let me speak of another thing. There are countries in this world which raise wheat and where they have no such thing as dealing in futures. There are countries blessed with the Washburn-Hatch system of trading in grain, who have not any option trading at all. Go with me to the Argentine Republic, and you will find no dealing in options there. But what will you find? Wheat goes from the Argentine Republic to the British market at less by over 6 cents per bushel (counting freights) than the farmer of Missouri can get for his wheat in the open market in Chicago, and I tell you it is due to option trading; it is due to an open market; it is due to freedom and to brains.

I should like to dwell more on these points, but I see time is going, and I wish to speak of another subject, namely, the moral aspect of the matter. When the outside public—who have not the good fortune to be members of this House, and who are quite excusable in being surprised at the kind of animals which make up this menagerie here—discover that Congress is proposing by its legislation to reform the balance of the country, do you not think at least a few of them will be unkind enough to say "Physician, heal thyself! Would it not be just as well for the members of Congress to take the beams out of their own eyes before they get ready to take the motes out of the eyes of gentlemen in New Orleans and New York and Chicago?" It occurs to me that gentlemen in this part of the country had better stop gambling on their own hook before they make laws to prevent other people from enjoying the same pleasant but costly relaxation.

This is the whole case on its moral side. What business has Congress to legislate as to the conduct of people in Illinois? Why, if you tell me gambling is wicked, I admit it; but murder is wicked. Why is not Congress engaged here in passing laws to prohibit murder in the State of Illinois? If not, why do you undertake to pass a law here to prohibit gambling in the State of Illinois? If laws of this kind are to be passed, let the States pass and execute them. Why not attempt to regulate the conduct of the citizens of Illinois in all other matters? I admit that you have the power to pass this kind of a law for the District of Columbia and for the Indian Territory and New Mexico, and other Territories. I admit that you have this much authority. But you have no right to say what a man shall do with his money, or what he shall do with his wheat or with his cotton, in any of the States of this Union.

Gentlemen, this thing of legislating men into saints by the simple phrase "Be it enacted," has been a failure from the beginning of the world. What kind of a country did Oliver Cromwell and his puritanical, Calvanistic Ironside associates establish in Great Britain? Why, those old "Praise God Barebones" fellows were the greatest frauds and humbugs who ever walked the face of the earth. And again, look at the State of Maine, for instance, where they have been making people teetotalers by act of the Legislature. Even a man who is a total abstainer like myself can not go into the State of Maine and stay a day without feeling dizzy, or walk entirely straight until he gets over into New Hampshire. [Laughter.] Such is the result of this kind of silly legislation. As you have no right to enforce these laws, you will only make Congress contemptible in the eyes of the people if you pass them.

I am sorry I have so little time, but I will finish within the hour.

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. HARTER. No; the House has been very kind to me and I am not going to impose on it. But I want to talk to my Southern friends. Gentlemen, I am sure you must know that the men of the South have no warmer friend on the floor of this House than I am. There is no man more interested in seeing the South built up. There is no man more willing to take you to his heart than I. There is no one here who appreciates your qualities more than I do. I could not agree with you in what I believed to be your unholy effort to wreck the Republic; but, gentlemen, when I remember that you went out of this Republic under the circumstances you did, without a factory in all the South for the production of a pound of gunpowder; when there was not a percussion-cap factory south of the Ohio; when you had no stores, no artillery, or any way of making a gun or a cannon, or anything else; and when I recollect that for three or four years you kept at bay the greatest nation on the face of the earth—a nation, too, backed up by a just and upright cause, and supported by all the money which it needed—I say I am lost in admiration at the courage and ability of you men from the South; and wrong as I am sure you were, I am glad I am of the same blood that you are, and to the day I die I shall be proud to call you brothers. [Applause.]

But at the same time I want to face you fairly on this question, as friend should talk to friend. After your fathers had helped to found this Government, had cemented its foundations with their blood, and after they for seventy years in its legislation had contributed the soundest views upon human government, when they had furnished the practical application of the principles of the Constitution under which the country was prosperous, and to which we must again return if we would be as prosperous as we ought to be, why did you turn your backs upon this nation in which you had so great an interest, of which you form so honorable a part? Why did you go into rebellion or undertake to tear down the fabric of this Government? Stripped of all verbiage, you went into the rebellion because you feared that legislation of precisely the same general character as this Hatch bill would be passed.

You went into rebellion, not because Hatch bills had been passed, not because we had in any way interfered with your personal rights or your liberty to trade, in South Carolina or anywhere else, but you went into this war and impoverished yourselves, you made orphans and widows by the million, because you feared that there would be this kind of legislation. And what kind of a spectacle in the eyes of gods and men do you gentlemen from the South present, when you come here, you men who have been lieutenant-generals (and who deserve the titles you got from your government), what kind of a spectacle do you present when you vote for such legislation as this? I see about me men who, in defense of what they believed to be right, left their arms and legs upon the field of battle. I see generals here whose honesty, integrity, high character, and lofty courage all will admit. Yet I see them hobbling in here to vote for legislation so infernally and eternally opposed to the doctrines of the Constitution, so repugnant to common sense that even the most radical Republican from a Northern State is ashamed to come here and advocate the principles which you, my Southern brethren and fellow-Democrats, are supporting—legislation, too, at which the country fairly turns aghast.

Why should you justify that which a friend of mine from the West said a few days ago? He said to me, "I thought your friends from the South were most badly whipped in the last war; but I never thought they were so thoroughly beaten that they would come up here and advocate the very principle which they had fought to crush out." When I advocated the repeal of the State bank tax I voted for the repeal of it on the very ground that you did; and I have the right to demand of you, as consistent men, if you claim to be Democrats, that you stand shoulder to shoulder with me and let your elbows meet mine in resisting this legislation.

What will be thought of the Democratic party if it oppose a bill because the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] presents it, and then favors the same principle in another bill because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] presents it. I tell you, gentlemen, we must look at these things as they are, because the people will see them in their true light.

Are we to vote for this principle, or lack of principle, which will trample the Constitution of the United States under our feet, as Democrats when it serves our purpose as Democrats, and that on this particular principle, or lack of it, we will hold up the Constitution to be worshipped whenever our Republican friends offer to put a foot upon it, even if they take their shoes off first? I say that it is all wrong.

Here is the Southern view of this kind of legislation, written by that prince of South Carolina editors, Mr. Hemphill, of the News and Courier, last month:

ARE WE TO HAVE FIVE-CENT COTTON?

An overproduction of cotton, prospective as well as actual, at a time of universal inactivity and depression in trade, has brought the price of the Southern staple to a distressingly low level. But Congressman HATCH of Missouri, seems determined to force prices still lower, if agitation looking to crazy legislation can bring about that result. Just now, when spinners are so apathetic and when the Southern farmer needs to stimulate in every possible way the dormant demand for cotton, Mr. HACTH would close at once and finally the speculative markets, which offer the only hope of supporting the price of cotton until the return of better times. For it is just that, and nothing less, which would be the upshot of his antioption bill if it should become a law. The millions of bales of cotton which the South must sell in the fall would find no buyers except the agents of the spinners, who, quick to take advantage of the situation, would be likely to obtain their raw material in abundance at 5 cents a pound or less.

Mr. HATCH'S bill, ruinous as it would be, is ostensibly framed in the interest of the farmers. While it is quite as absurd and visionary as the other pet schemes of the Populists, it would certainly be, in its immediate effect upon the farmer's pocket, far more hurtful than any of them. Though there are plenty of cranks and demagogues in Congress, we have little fear that the Democratic leaders will ever allow the party to be handicapped by such a blunder as would be involved in the enactment of the bill. But the mere agitation of the scheme is a costly business for the South. The long fight over a similar bill in the last Congress had the effect of depressing the price of cotton then to an extent that must have caused a loss to the South of at least $30,000,000. It is rather too bad that Mr. HATCH should again be encouraged to indulge in so expensive a bit of Congressional fun.

Another thing occurs to me which will seriously affect those members of the House who vote for this bill, and I therefore ask What will the Hatch antioption bill, if it becomes law and is enforced, cost the farmers and planters of the United States per year? This, it will be admitted, is a practical question, and will naturally be asked by the farming element and planting population next November in every district in which those who vote for this wretched misfit Populist legislation come up for reëlection.

If this bill passes and the enforcement of it actually does destroy, as its backers say it will, all so-called "gambling" in "futures" and "options," of course the 3 cents a bushel on wheat, the 1 cent a bushel on corn and oats, and the one-half cent a pound on cotton which every planter and farmer gets in the option or future markets (like Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, Duluth, Detroit, Toledo, Buffalo, Galveston, New Orleans, New York, etc.) because of this class of dealings, will also disappear. He will then get the "actual sales" prices which Mr. HATCH and his friends demand, that is, the prices fixed in the world's markets, as Mr. HATCH has so clearly stated in his May, 1892, speech, and no more.

See what this means! On an average good crop the farmers of the United States will have an account to settle with the antioption candidates of $15,000,000 on wheat, $20,000,000 on corn, $7,000,000 on oats, and $20,000,000 on cotton; in all, $62,000,000.

In other words, if this bill becomes law, it will cost the farmers and planters of the United States not less than $62,000,000 each year on grain and cotton, and probably $30,000,000 more on pork and its various products, or in the end not much, if any, less than $100,000,000 a year; and yet the men who vote for it here say, "We are the friends of the farmer."

Well may the farmer at the polls this fall cry out, "From such friends deliver us!" and then proceed to unload these grasshopper, dry-weather, chinch-bug enemies of his by voting for any candidate who is opposed to antioption laws, whether he be a Republican or Democrat, white or black. Look at Mr. HATCH'S own district. If his bill passes and is enforced, and does stop trading in futures and options, and in this way robs his constituents of the blessings of the St. Louis and Chicago produce exchange markets, the loss to the farmers in his district alone will, on wheat, corn, oats, and pork, aggregate not less than $238,000 a year, or $476,000 during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Now, I want to see Mr. HATCH reëlected, and I cheerfully certify to his good qualities, and I am always proud to count him among my friends, and will rejoice to see him reach the Presidency before he dies, but will his district consider his other services in the Fifty-fourth Congress worth to them enough to wipe out the $476,000 burden he proposes to put on the farms of the First Missouri district? I ask this about Mr. HATCH because of his great prominence in this war on the farmer, this crusade against the planter, which the supporters of this bill are carrying on, but it applies to every man on this floor who votes for this vicious measure.

How, for instance, can a man from Georgia or South Carolina hope to be sent back here by an intelligent, reading community of planters, every man of whom will realize before this fall's election that in his mistaken, ill-guided zeal his sitting member has advocated and voted for a bill which must make his lot in life as a cotton-raiser more unbearable than ever? The vote on this plantation-destroying, farm-smashing bill will, of course, be a yea-and-nay vote, so that the name of every member who supports it will be known to every intelligent farmer or planter in his district.

Messrs. HATCH and company may declare up hill and down dale that their intentions were good, and no man recognizes as I do the honorable personal character of the support the bill has but will admit all this; but the outraged farmer and wronged planter will merely remark, "Hell is paved with good intentions, gentlemen," and proceed to give them Hail Columbia at the ballot box.

My excuse, if I need an excuse for opposing this class of legislation, is that it is all wrong, and that that man is the truest Democrat and he is the truest friend when he points out the mistake of his friends, and opposes the error of his own party. You will live to see that I am a true friend and a fairly wise adviser, too, in the Congressional elections coming on this fall, and you will also live to realize it during the next Presidential election. Sometime ago I received a communication from a gentleman named Gill residing in this city, asking me to appear at a meeting that was to be held in Convention Hall, in which they would consider various questions hinging on this bill and also involving the principle of protection, in fact, involving the whole idea of paternalism, and in the course of that letter there was a kind of covert hint that it would be well (as I understood it) for a man to be extremely cautious as to what he said, as his remarks would be printed and circulated amongst the people of the United States.

Well, sir, when I believe I am right I am not only not afraid, but, on the other hand, I am exceedingly anxious, upon any important question, that my remarks may be read by the people of the United States; and as I felt that there might be some uncertainty of my ability to attend the meeting, I wrote him a letter, which has been referred to in this debate, and which I understand is the publication conplained of. In order to see whether there is any just ground for the complaint, I now ask the Clerk to be kind enough to read it, and with the reading my remarks this afternoon close.

The Clerk read as follows:

A SIMPLE REMEDY FOR THE HARD TIMES—MR. HARTER'S ADVICE TO THE COXEYITES—IT OUGHT TO BE TAKEN BY EVERY MAN AND WOMAN IN THE UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1894.

Representative HARTER of Ohio is one of the public men who have been invited to address a mass meeting which some of the sympathizers with the Coxey movement are getting up in this city. The question on which he was asked to express his views was, "What, if anything, can Congress do to give work to the unemployed, to increase the price of produce, and to restore to our people confidence and prosperity?" He has written to the chairman of the committee as follows:

"DEAR SIR: As I am not certain I can be at the meeting, I wish to suggest an effective remedy for hard times, which is also a very simple one. Confine the work of Congress to the limits of the Constitution. Stop levying taxes to provide profits (under the name of protection) for a portion of our people at the expense of the balance.

"Publish far and wide that it is not the business of the United States to raise prices, provide work, regulate wages, or in any way to interfere in the private business or personal affairs of the people. Declare that the control of State banks, and all other State and local affairs, like roads for instance, shall remain exclusively with the State and local governments. Prove to all the world that we intend to keep every dollar of the circulating money issued or coined by the United States at the full gold value of 100 cents. Put our civil service upon a business-like foundation. Kick out spoilsmen and bunco legislators, and prosperity will return without investing in any quack nostrums, and without putting on liver pads or porous plasters.

"A little everyday common sense, industry, economy, and hopefulness will hasten the return of good times, but avoid quack remedies, quack Congressmen, and crank Senators, and when such worthies tell you we must put up the price of silver, wheat, grindstones, tulips, or toadstools to the figures they commanded in the days of Adam, of George Washington, or even in 1873—I say when such ideas are advanced, put cotton in your ears and keep on at your calling. The troubles we are having are the outgrowth of simon pure paternalism and when these few changes are made in our present methods, and we then return to Americanism in its purity, that is, to personal, individual self-reliance, our troubles will fade away as the mist flies before the rising sun.

"If, however, we go on in the mad chase after prosperity, under the leadership of the Coxeys, McKinleys, Stewarts, Peffers, Blands, Hatches, etc., we will find harder times and greater suffering ahead of us. You may say or I may believe that all of the men named are very good fellows, first-class fathers, husbands, and neighbors, quite well-meaning and highly commendable men in every sense (and I only use their names to identify the various crazes, wild ideas, vagaries, and cranky notions they have urged and advocated), but they must injure all they lead and will bankrupt any nation.

"Men with level heads and a fair share of good, common, everyday sense, are at a discount these times; but if the country follows cranks much longer the result will be so disastrous as to create finally a very active demand and bring about a most urgent call for those who during all these times have kept the faith and constantly warned those who cared to listen of the judgment to come. Frown down, then, every charlatan politician, every long-haired, wild-eyed, social philosopher, whether he be a governor or a gravedigger, a silver-mine owner or a tramp, and advise those who are willing to listen to you to work, save, and keep sober.

"Tell them to depend upon the sweat of their faces and the labor of their hands, and not to put their trust in politicians or depend upon the bounty of the Federal Government or the soup-kitchen charity of the municipality. Our country, with all its magnificent resources, is still here; our people have not lost their skill, and we can be as prosperous and happy as ever if we demand equal laws and a sound currency from the Government, and then work out our own salvation.

"Yours, respectfully,

"MICHAEL D. HARTER."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman from Ohio will yield to me, as it is after 5 o'clock, I will move that the committee rise, with the understanding that the gentleman has the right of way to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARTER. A personal explanation. Inadvertently I said that Mr. Pillsbury favored this bill. Mr. Pillsbury personally does not favor this bill. My remark applied to Senator WASHBURN, which was strictly correct.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for the purpose of making the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAILEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7007, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HUNTER. I want to ask unanimous consent to publish some remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will not be in order unless the motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

Mr. HATCH. I will withdraw it temporarily, so that the gentleman may ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent to publish some remarks in the RECORD upon the bank-tax bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HATCH. I renew my motion.

Mr. COX. Before the discussion of that question was entered upon, the time in which gentlemen could have remarks published in the RECORD on that subject was limited to a certain number of days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ten days.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to say to the gentleman that in consequence of ill health I was not able to avail myself of that privilege.

Mr. COX. I make no objection.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was then agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. COX, from the Committee on Claims: A bill (H. R. 6582) for the relief of Anthony McAndrews, of Louisville, Ky. (Report No. 1118.)

Also, a bill (H. R. 5923) for the relief of Michael Scanlon. (Report No. 1121.)

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims: A bill (H. R. 2147) for the relief of J. C. Shelby. (Report No. 1122.)

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills were adversely reported and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (H. R. 7230) for the relief of the officers and crew of the dredge wrecked in Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1123), was ordered to be printed, and to lie on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6850) for the relief of Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va., and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition asking amendment to income tax so as to exclude fraternal societies, orders, etc., from citizens of Nashville, Tenn.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 21, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

ANTONIO MAXIMO MORA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to the resolution of the Senate of December 20, 1893, a report from the Acting Secretary of State, covering the desired copies of correspondence in the matter of the claim of Antonio Maximo Mora against Spain.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 20, 1894.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VILAS presented petitions of T. G. Martin and 35 other citizens of Chippewa, Falls; of A. F. Newman and 3 other citizens of Spring Valley; of E. S. Mason and 15 other citizens of Beaver Dam; of J. A. Decker and 11 other citizens, and of W. H. Putnam and 10 other citizens, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Cigar-Makers' Union No. 304, of Racine, Wis., praying for an increase of the duty on imported cigars; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented resolutions adopted by the Congress of the Sons of the American Revolution, held in Washington, D. C., April 30, 1894, together with a letter from J. C. Breckinridge, president of the District of Columbia Society, Sons of the American Revolution, favoring the publication of the Revolutionary records, rolls, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Kansas City (Mo.) Life Underwriters' Association, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Brunswick, Ga., praying that an appropriation be made for a national exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in the fall of 1895; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the memorial of the Potts-Thompson Liquor Company, of Atlanta, Ga., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Maine Medical Association of Portland, Me., praying for an increase of the appropriation for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of 13 citizens of Gorham, Me., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders or associations, be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Weymouth Council, Royal Arcanum, of Weymouth, Mass., and a petition of Gloucester Council, Royal Arcanum, of Gloucester, Mass., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders or associations, be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 16 citizens of Middlesex County, Mass., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of 60 cigar manufacturers of Union No. 51, of Holyoke, Mass., remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Jones amendment relating to wrapper tobacco, to the Wilson tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SQUIRE presented sundry petitions of citizens of Everett, Wash., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon presented a petition of sundry citizens of Multnomah County, Oregon, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4961) granting certain rights over Lime Point military reservation in the State of California, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1211) for the relief of Pay Inspector John H. Stevenson, of the United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 2146) to incorporate the National Gas and Electric Light, Heat, and Power Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Commitee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 2147) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah E. Comly; which was read twice by its title, and referred, with the accompanying paper, to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2148) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Granger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (S. 2149) for the relief of L. E. Bowen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 2150) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceano of New York, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2151) to amend "an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CAREY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COTTON STATES INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. GORDON. In order to secure prompt action, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment to the sundry civil appriation bill appropriating money to the Cotton States International Exposition. The object is to add some words at the end of the amendment, not to alter the character of it. I will say, in a word, that the object of the amendment now offered is to enable the President to appoint one colored man upon the board in order that he may aid in getting together the exhibits to be made by the colored race. That is the only change I propose to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that the words may be added.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection; and it will be so ordered. To which committee does the Senator desire to have the amendment referred?

Mr. GORDON. I desire to have the words added to the general amendment, which has already been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The whole amendment as now proposed is to be offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

MRS. KATE BIRD.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Kate Bird, mother of Edward N. Davie, deceased, late a folder in the folding room of the Senate, the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' salary as folder aforesaid; the said sum to include all funeral or other allowances.

PUBLIC SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the resolution heretofore submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] relative to public savings banks does not come over as a part of the morning business, but that it has gone to the Calendar.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not ask that the resolution be taken up this morning. I want it to lie on the table, and at some convenient time I shall call it up for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 1259) to amend section 2 of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, entitled "An act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, so as to read:

That there shall be, and there is hereby, constituted an excise board of the District of Columbia, which shall consist of the three Commissioners of the District, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum for business, and the duty of which shall be to take up and consider all applications for license to sell intoxicating liquors and to take action on such applications, and the action of said board shall be final and conclusive, and only on the granting by the said board of a license to an applicant to sell intoxicating liquors shall the assessor issue a license to such applicant; and the said board shall make such rules and regulations for carrying into effect this act as they may deem requisite and proper. And said board shall make an annual report to Congress, setting forth the number of applications for license, both favorably and unfavorably acted on, the number of persons convicted for violations of this statute, and the number of fines collected and uncollected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF MARK DAVIS.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 599) for the relief of the residuary legatees of Mark Davis, deceased. I beg to state in explanation that Mark Davis was a loyal citizen and owned property in the city of New Orleans. His property was taken possession of by Gen. Banks after an order of protection had been given to it by Gen. Butler. Gen. Banks rented out his property, collected his bonds, and received money which was turned into the Treasury. The bill proposes to pay to the legatees of Mark Davis the money that was collected by the Government and turned into the Treasury. It has passed the other House and has been twice reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the present consideration of the bill. The next bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

ALASKA CODE.

The bill (S. 1546) authorizing a commission to draft a code of laws for the District of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the governor of the District of Alaska to appoint a commission to consist of five persons, who shall be residents of the District, and whose duty it shall be to formulate amendments to the act of Congress approved May 17, 1884, and known as "the act providing a civil government for the District of Alaska," and to draft a code of laws, both civil and criminal, with a mode of procedure, for the government of the District.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE NAVAL MILITIA.

The bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. PERKINS. Do I understand that there is objection to the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to it, but I did not notice the Senator from California here. Let the bill be considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the request to have it passed over. Let the bill be considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to any State, upon the written application of the governor thereof, a vessel of the Navy, to be selected from such vessels as are not suitable or required for general service, together with such of her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation as he may deem proper; the vessel to be used only by the regularly organized naval militia of the State for the purposes of drill and instruction.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That when such loan is made to the governor of any State the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail from the enlisted force of the Navy a sufficient number of men, not exceeding six for any vessel, as ship keepers, the men so detailed to be additional to the number of enlisted men allowed by law for the naval establishment, and in making details for this service preference shall be given to those men who have served twenty years or more in the Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PERKINS February 2, 1894, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the Naval militia, has had the same under careful consideration and recommend its passage with an amendment.

The committee call attention to the accompanying letters from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, which fully explain the necessity of the proposed legislation.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, January 3, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: When we came to this office we found that it had been the practice of the Department to place certain vessels not fit for use for practical purposes, some of them about to be condemned and others requiring very extensive repairs before being fitted to go into commission, under the temporary control of some of the States for the uses of their naval militia. Matters appertaining to this branch of the service having been placed by the Secretary under my direction since coming here, I ordered one of the old-time monitors to North Carolina for the uses of the militia of that State, in addition to those already placed temporarily in control of other States.

We now have before us requests from Pennsylvania, California, Washington, and will, undoubtedly, in the near future, receive similar requests from other States, asking that such ships be loaned to them.

I have come to the conclusion, after examination, that there is no authority under existing law as to our right for the placing of these ships under State control, even for the purposes specified, while on the other hand the Department is exceedingly desirous to do so if it could be assured of its power in the premises.

The ships to be loaned would in no wise impair the efficiency of the Navy, and, indeed, in some cases are those so completely over the dead line as to repairs that we would not think, unless in the greatest emergencies, of fitting them for commission, and they can, therefore, without the slightest impairment of our force, and, indeed, with the greatest possible advantage in the way of building up a naval reserve and meeting the requirements of the thousands of volunteer sailors all over the country, be placed for the time being at the disposal of the States requesting them.

In order to avoid any possible question as to the legal right of the Department to put these vessels temporarily in the control of the State authorities, I think it best to submit the following act, and will esteem it a favor if you will introduce it and endeavor to have it acted upon as soon as possible.

I think it might be safely said that in the near future we will have requests for this class of vessels from nearly all the States bordering upon the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and Gulf waters.

Very sincerely, yours,

W. MCADOO,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN R. MCPHERSON,
Senate Naval Affairs Committee, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, January 30, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith an amendment to be made to the bill (S. 1399) entitled "A bill to promote the efficiency of the naval militia." We find from experience that it will be necessary for the Government, in the case of ships temporarily loaned to States for the use of the naval militia, that there be on board someone representing the Department, so as to see that proper care is taken of the property. Even were the States to whom possession is given of these vessels willing, as is not the case in every instance, to pay for their proper care taking, it would still, we think, be better that a direct representative of the Navy Department should have care of the ship and be responsible to this Government for its preservation.

By selecting these ship-keepers from men with long and honorable records in the Navy we will be able to make these positions somewhat of a reward of merit for an exceedingly deserving class of enlisted men who will perform the duty at the very small remuneration allowed sailors in the Navy.

The amendment, as you see, states the maximum number of men for each ship as not to exceed 6, but it is not intended to employ generally as many as this, and the whole number will probably not at any time exceed 20.

Trusting that the amendment will meet with your approval and can be incorporated in the bill before it is reported, I am, very respectfully.

W. MCADOO,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN R. MCPHERSON,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate, City.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 4, I move to strike out "furnish" and insert "loan temporarily," so as to make it correspond with the rest of the bill. It will then read:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to loan temporarily to any State, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1827) to define the boundaries of the three judicial districts in the State of Alabama and to regulate therein the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States and the powers and duties of the judges thereof, and for other purposes. It is a local bill, and will take but a short time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the southern judicial district of the State of Alabama shall include the counties of Mobile, Washington, Baldwin, Conecuh, Escambia, Clarke, Monroe, Wilcox, Marengo, Choctaw, Sumter, Pickens, Greene, Hale, Perry, and Dallas.

SEC. 2. That the middle judicial district of said State shall include the counties of Montgomery, Lowndes, Autauga, Butler, Elmore, Chilton, Coosa, Clay, Tallapoosa, Randolph, Chambers, Lee, Macon, Bullock, Russell, Barbour, Henry, Dale, Coffee, Pike, Crenshaw, Geneva, and Covington.

SEC. 3. That the northern judicial district of said State shall include the other counties therein not mentioned as constituting the southern and middle judicial districts of said State, and shall be divided into the southern and northern divisions, and the southern division of said northern judicial district shall include the counties of Jefferson, Bibb, Tuscaloosa, Shelby, Talladega, Cleburne, Calhoun, St. Clair, Etowah, Cherokee, Dekalb, Blount, Walker, Fayette, Lamar, Marion, and Winston. And the northern division of said northern district shall include the remaining counties therein, namely, Franklin, Lauderdale, Colbert, Lawrence, Limestone, Morgan, Madison, Marshall, Jackson, and Cullman.

SEC. 4. That all offenses hereafter committed in either of said districts or divisions shall be cognizable and indictable within the district and division where committed; and all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each district and divisions shall be inhabitants thereof; and all offenses committed within either of said districts and divisions prior to the time this act goes into operation shall be prosecuted and tried as if the act had not been passed.

SEC. 5. That all civil suits not of a local character which shall be hereafter brought in the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern district of Alabama, in either of the districts thereof, against a single defendant, or where all the defendants reside in the same division of said district, shall be brought in the division where the defendant or defendants reside; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions such suit may be brought in either division; and all mesne and final process, subject to the provisions of this act, issued in either of said divisions may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions.

SEC. 6. That all civil suits and other proceedings now pending in the circuit and district courts in said State shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 7. That the judge of the middle and northern district of Alabama shall no longer be the judge of said northern district, but he shall hereafter be the judge of and hold the courts in and for the northern division of said northern district as the same is constituted by this act, and shall not be required to reside therein; and the courts in said northern and southern division shall each be entitled to a clerk. And the judge of the southern district of said State shall be the judge of and hold the courts in and for the southern division of said northern district as the same is constituted by this act, and shall not be required to reside therein. The judges of the said northern and southern divisions shall each have and exercise all the powers and authority they now have and exercise, respectively, as district judges in their respective districts as constituted by this act.

SEC. 8. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1893; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 4,000 extra copies of the special report made by the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia on typhoid and malarial fevers and other preventable diseases; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1995) granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska;

A bill (H. R. 4720) to pension Lucy Brown, dependent foster-mother; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts within the city of Baltimore to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years.

DISTRICT WATER-MAIN ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia, which is now upon the table, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR subsequently reported the bill with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1893 be printed, and that 10,000 extra copies be printed, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

REPORT ON FEVERS, ETC.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That in addition to the "usual number," there be printed 4,000 extra copies of the special report made by the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia at its meeting of June 6, 1894, on typhoid and malarial fevers and other preventable diseases, of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the said society.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the Secretary proceeds with the reading, I ask unanimous consent to make a verbal correction. In paragraph 314 in an amendment which was made several days ago the words "seven and one-half per cent ad valorem" I see are printed when the amendment intended to be made was 7½ cents per pound, on bristles, sorted, bunched, or prepared, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the correction will be made as suggested.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was requested by the Secretary of the Treasury to move an amendment to section 5, on page 123, which was passed over yesterday. I send the amendment to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "importer," in line 1, page 123, at the end of section 5, add:

And if any article of imported merchandise, or the packages containing the same, shall be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, with a quantity in excess of said merchandise, then the same shall not be delivered to the importer until the false marking thereon shall be totally removed or effaced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 54. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1895, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States, or any citizen of the United States residing abroad, derived in each preceding calendar year, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, a tax of 2 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $4,000, and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income from all property and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States, and not citizens thereof. And the tax herein provided for shall be assessed, collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, we have now reached the consideration of one of the most important features of the pending measure; important not only because the tax which it seeks to impose equals in the aggregate about one-fifteenth of the whole Federal taxation of the United States, but because of the peculiar nature of the burden, as well as the vast and varied interests which it injuriously affects.

When this debate first opened—I do not recollect the precise date, but it was a "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary"—I had the honor of submitting to the Senate some remarks against the pending proposition, which were followed soon thereafter by a most able and eloquent speech upon the same side by the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

With all due respect to what has since been said in favor of this tax by several distinguished Senators who have endeavored to defend the same, it is confidently submitted to the Senate that the arguments presented in opposition to the necessity, justice, and advisability of any such tax have never been successfully answered. The arguments have been evaded, but not refuted.

I do not intend to reiterate what I have heretofore said, but only to amplify a few of the points then suggested, and to add some new observations rendered appropriate and necessary by the changed character of the bill contemplated by the committee's amendments.

AN UNWISE POLICY.

In the first place, considered from the mere standpoint of political expediency, it was unwise to incorporate an income tax in a tariff reform bill. There were honest differences enough already existing among party friends relating to the details of legitimate tariff legislation, which necessarily had to be reconciled without going out of our way to seek fresh causes of contention in the effort to incorporate this tax—an experimental scheme of taxation at best—upon a measure for a revision of the tariff.

The Democratic party was substantially united in favor of tariff revision—if not as to details, at least in the final result sought to be attained—but it was well known that irreconcilable differences of opinion existed in relation to the propriety of restoring a war tax in time of peace; and yet in spite of such recognized differences and in face of the protest of Democratic constituencies and against the advice of public men who have never faltered in their devotion to true Democratic principles, this income tax feature has been ingrafted upon this measure, and we are persistently asked to accept it against our better judgment as a condition of obtaining any tariff legislation. It was good politics to have avoided this unnecessary issue. A wise statesmanship would have promply eliminated this bone of contention and conciliated and united Democratic sentiment rather than have attempted to secure the support of a third party at the risk of dividing your own.

Prudence dictated that this Congress should not attempt to formulate new Democratic doctrines to which we have never been committed, but rather to carry out the pledges we had already made. It is a wise party which does those things which it ought to do and has promised to do, and leaves undone those things which it ought not to do and has not promised to do.

Perhaps I overestimate the importance of party platforms and appreciate too keenly the binding obligations of party pledges. I believe that it is the solemn duty of a political party to redeem the promises upon which it obtained power, and that repudiation thereof will sooner or later bring disaster upon it at the hands of a betrayed and indignant people. I regret the spectacle which we have recently witnessed of a Democratic Executive nominating and a Democratic Senate confirming, officials for the Territories and for the District of Columbia who were nonresidents thereof, in violation of the principle of home rule and the explicit provisions of the Chicago platform.

We have recently seen a Democratic House of Representatives refuse to repeal a Federal tax on State bank circulation, a tax imposed under the taxing power of the Constitution, ostensibly for revenue, but in fact producing no revenue whatever and a tax utterly indefensible in principle—intended to be prohibitory in effect—such repeal having been expressly favored in our national platform, while the same House went out of its way to inject a Populistic income tax in a Democratic tariff bill, and the Senate is now asked to ratify a portion of such inconsistent action. For one I protest against the repudiation of the promises of the Democratic party, in order to adopt and carry out the promises of the Populist party.

What are the conceded facts of the situation? It stands conceded that an income tax has never been adopted as a Democratic principle by any convention or body authorized to formulate party doctrines.

It is conceded that it is a plank, not of the Democratic or Republican parties, but of the newly formed Populist party. It is conceded that it is a war tax which was never imposed in the whole history of the Government except during the stress of our civil war, and was one of the first war taxes abolished when peace was restored. It is conceded that it has never been approved by a vote of the people anywhere.

It is virtually conceded that there is no genuine emergency demanding its restoration at this time.

It stands substantially admitted that the other provisions of the bill will provide ample revenues for the support of the Govment.

Yet, notwithstanding all these facts, it is urged that this tax should be retained in the pending bill because forsooth a majority of the Democrats in Congress demand it. This is no adequate reason for so unwise and unprecedented a procedure. A tariff bill should relate to the tariff, and that only. Internal-revenue taxes may properly be included therein, provided there is no substantial dispute in reference to the propriety of their imposition, but otherwise they should be embraced in a separate bill. This course is essential to orderly legislation and to a decent regard for the opinions of minorities.

A familiar form of the violation of this just rule is witnessed in the vicious practice of engrafting objectionable or questionable legislation as a rider upon appropriation bills. Such bills appropriating moneys needed for the support of the Government as a general rule meet with universal assent and should contain nothing else but appropriations, and no other or general legislation foreign thereto should be injected therein, except possibly in the rare contingency of great public emergencies when the life or liberties of the nation may be deemed at stake.

Legislation involving different subjects, theories, and purposes should be kept distinct, and each measure should stand or fall upon its own merits, and the approval of any questionable scheme should not be forced by means of injecting its provisions into an appropriation or a tariff bill when otherwise it would not be favored. It is unfair to those who might desire to support the main features of an appropriation or a tariff measure to be obliged to accept a questionable provision foreign to the principal subject-matter of the bill itself or else record themselves in opposition to the whole bill.

This just and rational rule governing legislation has been violated by the injection into the pending bill of an objectionable feature in no wise essential to the bill itself, and for which some Democratic Senators can not conscientiously vote although they desire to support any fair and reasonable measure revising the existing tariff.

The violation of this rule in this instance is utterly indefensible, unwise, and arbitrary. With more propriety a majority might have incorporated in the bill a provision repealing the State bank tax—an internal-revenue tax, because they would have had the justification that the repeal at least was required by the Democratic national platform; but here there is no such excuse.

With still greater propriety they might have injected into the bill a clause providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, or, if not that, at least for the coinage of the silver bullion seigniorage now in the Treasury (as a means of present governmental relief), and have insisted with great plausibility that they were merely fulfilling the obligations assumed in the national platform. But, passing over these alleged party promises, they deliberately set out, not to redeem Democratic promises, but to fulfill those of a third party, at whatever risk and at whatever sacrifice.

If a Democratic Congress is to be permitted to repudiate well-established Democratic principles and to enunciate new ones without the sanction of a national convention, and to compel their support as a test of party fealty, we may next expect to hear of the adoption in a tariff or appropriation bill of Mr. Henry George's single-tax theory, or a provision abolishing all custom-houses and resorting to direct Federal taxation instead of a tariff for revenue, or providing for the assumption of governmental control and management of all the telegraphs, railroads, and banks of the country, or the adoption of any other wild and visionary scheme of socialism, paternalism, or Populism which the majority may see fit to sanction.

Upon the point which I am now considering it is entirely immaterial whether an income tax is right or wrong, just or unjust, necessary or expedient, but it is sufficient that it is not a Democratic tax and its support can not properly be made a test of fidelity to Democratic principles. It is enough for our present purpose to know that it ought not to have encumbered, embarrassed, or delayed a tariff-reform bill, and that the true enemies of tariff reform are those who, while ostentatiously shouting for tariff reform, yet obstinately insist without reason that an income tax is part and parcel of that reform and must accompany it, be the consequences what they may. Democrats, whether in or out of Congress, whether charged with official responsibilities or otherwise, have no right to supplement, confuse, or interpolate Democratic principles with Populistic or socialistic sentiments.

Neither is it essential whether this tax is popular or unpopular with the masses. If proper to be adopted at all, it should have been presented and considered in a separate and distinct measure, upon which Senators could have freely voted according to their individual judgments of its propriety and without embarrassment to themselves or damage to the cause of tariff reform.

I am tempted to suggest that the Democrats of Oregon recently sought to test the popularity of an income tax among the business men and electors of that State by inserting in their platform a clause favoring that tax; and awakening to their senses after the election, they discovered that their ticket was third in the race, that their party was demoralized, and that they had divided themselves instead of dividing their opponents. The most disastrous defeat ever experienced by the Democratic party in Oregon was the result of the effort to substitute newfangled Populistic principles for the good old principles of true Democracy. Here and now I venture the prediction that the same result will follow the same effort everywhere.

A REMARKABLE PETITION.

Mr. President, I have before me a most remarkable petition, which I propose to read here, and then present the same to the Senate for reference. In substance, it is a simple and earnest protest by eight prominent Democratic business men of New York against the enactment of an income tax in violation of the implied, even if not the expressed, plighted faith of the Democratic party in obtaining power in 1892. It expresses better than I can hope to do the sentiments of ninety-nine hundredths of all the Democratic business men of the State of New York. Let me read it:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States and members of the Democratic party, respectfully petition the Federal Senate to strike out the clause in the pending tariff bill which provides for an income tax.

In submitting this petition, we not only plead for the continuation of the system of taxation which has endured without interruption in times of peace since the foundation of the Government, but we claim a right to protection against the establishment of the different system proposed inuring to us through the fact of the Democratic success in 1892.

At the last general election an income tax was proposed, not by the Democratic party, but by two organizations of recent date, the Populist and Social Labor parties, each essentially communistic in its character and purposes. The combined votes of these two parties was slightly in excess of 1,000,000 in an aggregate poll of 12,000,000. The parties demanding an income tax were emphatically rejected at the polls. The party whose candidates were elected was the Democratic party, a political organization founded by Thomas Jefferson, and the habitual advocate and exponent of certain principles and methods of Government which, from the beginning, have been associated with its name by its followers and respected by its representatives when exercising official power.

The Democratic party, by its constitution and by its history, stands opposed to the principle of an income tax. The imposition of that tax at this time would violate the guaranty, involved in the late Democratic success, of the continuation of the principle of taxation which the Democratic party has invariably upheld and practiced. It represents the abandonment of the traditional Democratic policy in favor of a socialistic policy which has failed to receive popular approval. It represents a direct reversal of the treatment of ourselves by the Federal Government which we had acquired the right to expect, and introduces another manner of treatment against which we hold that we are entitled to regard ourselves as safe.

While we do not enter upon a discussion of the justice or injustice of an income tax or of its merits or demerits as a feature of our Federal Government, we submit that the proposition for its enactment at this time comes as a political surprise without warrant and without authority proper to the introduction of a policy so revolutionary.

Without making an effort to add to our number appearing before the Senate as petitioners, we submit this petition for protection against the enactment of an income tax, in the conviction that we demand only what is our moral and political right under the last national election.

Respectfully,

EVAN THOMAS.	SAMUEL D. BABCOCK.
WILLIAM STEINWAY.	W. BAYARD CUTTING.
LOUIS WINDMULLER.	JOHN H. INMAN.
J. EDWARD SIMMONS.	ALEXANDER E. ORR.

I ask for the appropriate reference of the petition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). As the bill to which the petition refers is pending before the Senate, the petition will be laid on the table.

Mr. HILL. Let me inform you, if you do not already know, who these signers are. They are business men, not politicians; representative men of whom any party might well be proud, generous contributors to Democratic campaigns, and men of the highest character. Evan Thomas is the president of the New York Produce Exchange. William Steinway is one of the leading German citizens, the manufacturer of the world-renowned Steinway pianos, and an employer of thousands of workingmen; was the elector at large on the Democratic electoral ticket in 1892, and was for a time a member of the Democratic national committee from New York.

Louis Windmuller is an active and prominent business man, a leading tariff reformer of New York City, a gentleman of culture and high position. J. Edward Simmons is the president of the Fourth National Bank, a prominent Democrat, and one of the leaders in financial circles of the country. He was one of the men to whom your Secretary of the Treasury first applied when he went to the city of New York to raise $50,000,000 upon the bonds of your distressed country.

Samuel D. Babcock is a veteran business man, universally respected, and identified with nearly every business interest in New York. W. Bayard Cutting, John H. Inman, and Alexander E. Orr are well-known representative business men, who need no introduction anywhere. These men together represent every element of factional division which may exist in that city, and can speak substantially for a united Democracy. Sir, I do not wish to drive such men out of the Democratic party by our unwise legislation in the hope of supplying their places with Adullamites, Coxeyites, socialists, and all the "ragtag and bobtail" elements of the community who will be attracted to us by our proposed raid upon the wealth of the country.

THE ENGLISH PRECEDENT.

On every hand the advocates of an income tax with one accord and with much apparent satisfaction point to the fact that in some form or another England has maintained this tax for nearly a century, and that all efforts to repeal it have proved unavailing, and they argue from these circumstances that the tax must have proved itself reasonably acceptable to the English people, and hence would be acceptable here. We submit that the conclusion does not necessarily follow from the premises.

England's form of government is that of a limited monarchy, and not that of a free republic; her institutions are radically different from ours; she sanctions class legislation of every character which we have always heretofore endeavored to avoid; her traditions, customs, and tendencies largely differ from ours; she is slow to make changes, and notoriously submits to many abuses of government which would be abhorrent to Americans.

It would be more correct to say that she has tolerated rather than approved an income tax. Her toleration, however, or even her approval of such a monstrous abuse of governmental functions affords no justification for its adoption here.

She tolerates not only an income tax, but she submits to have a royal family rule over her. She maintains a House of Lords as a part of her legislative system, whose members derive the title to their seats, not from the suffrages of the people, but by reason of rank and hereditary privilege. A life tenure attaches to nearly every royal appointment. She arbitrarily denies home rule to Ireland and Scotland, not because such denial is right and just, but because she has the power and prefers so to do. Her suffrage is not free and equal, but restricted and exceptional in its character.

The fact, if it be true, that an income tax finds favor with such a Government and such a people so radically differing from our own, adds but little recommendation for its adoption here.

We might well insist that as a general rule our country should avoid the instrumentalities, methods, and enactments by which monarchical governments manage to extort enormous revenues from the people. It is true that there is a class of people among us who are Americans in name only, but not in interest or sympathy, who spend their winters here and their summers abroad, who are constantly holding up England as the model Government of the world, and who insist that we should pattern after her laws and institutions. They would swallow an income tax and all, if for no better reason simply because "It's English, you know."

The unfortunate tendency of the times seems to be drifting toward the adoption of English laws and ideas, no matter how antagonistic or ill adapted they may be to our free institutions.

The highest ambition of every American dude seems to be to ape English customs and manners.

Our civil-service laws were borrowed from Great Britain, and although it was loudly proclaimed that they were to renovate and purify our whole political system, and while they have tended to establish a permanent officeholding class, it is questionable whether they have been productive of any substantial or genuine reform. The political conditions of this country are so different from those of England, that the successful enforcement of English laws or laws founded upon English ideas must necessarily encounter great difficulties here, where political parties rather than royal families administer the Government, and a frequent change of parties inevitably occurs.

The public wants some better reason for the adoption of an income tax than the mere fact that England maintains one. She also maintains a monarchical government, a crowned head, an hereditary House of Lords, a restricted suffrage, an enormous national debt, an immense standing army, an established church, a colossal governmental bank, and a score of other things and institutions which conflict with our notions of liberty, justice, and equality, and which would not for a moment be tolerated in a republic like ours. Those who cite England as a precedent for us to follow forget that Gladstone himself does not attempt to justify the English income tax and admits that he has sought to abolish it. I read his letter to that effect in my previous remarks. No English statesman of any repute has ever defended it except as a tax to be levied only in times of war or to meet subsequent deficiencies traceable to the enormous expenditures of war.

England has maintained it for so many years because she has constantly been upon a war footing, and has needed its revenues for semiwar purposes.

Patriotic Englishmen will cheerfully submit to almost any extortion when they are assured by the prime minister that the taxes are needed for the preservation of the "honor and glory" of old England.

When they sometimes become restless and discontented under the severe governmental burdens imposed upon them, the authorities have only to set afloat the rumors of a foreign war, and these tax-ridden patriots relapse into a state of loyal submission. This tax is recognized in England as class legislation, and is defended as such.

It is undoubtedly popular with the House of Commons, whose members are usually the least affected by it; and there is no disguise of the fact that it is aimed at the rich, and particularly at the House of Lords, whose members and those who sympathize with them are generally wealthy and who have for years incurred the displeasure of the Commons by their hostility to reform legislation demanded by the Commons.

An income tax is the instrument or club by which the Commons get even with the Lords. Here there exist no such classes, no such distinctions, no such rivalries, and no such reasons for class legislation.

It is not true that the English income tax is enforced without much friction, evasion, or fraud. The best information obtainable is that it is constantly and successfully evaded, the Government is largely defrauded, and perjuries are frequent. It is necessarily inquisitorial in its character and must naturally be offensive in its enforcement. These things are incident to the very nature of an income tax which pries into men's private affairs, and these features can not well be avoided.

The exemption permitted is only $750, and hence the tax is more equal and equitable in its operation than that proposed in the pending bill, which sanctions the unprecedented exemption of $4,000, and thereby stamps it as class legislation of the worst sort. An exemption of a larger sum would only make the bill so much the worse. Income taxes seem to be the necessary accompaniment of monarchical governments, but they are justly regarded as odious and unnecessary in free republics.

It is a gratifying fact that no such income tax as prevails in England or in any other monarchical government, or as is now proposed in the United States in the pending bill, is permitted to disgrace the statute books of the Republic of France. France has no income tax because she has learned to love liberty, to hate inquisitions, to detest class legislation, and to respect the rights of property.

In the year 1866 there was published in the Albany Argus, with some comments, a letter from Prof. Goldwin Smith, then of Oxford University, to Hon. John V. L. Pruyn, of Albany, chancellor of the University of New York, upon the subject of the English income tax, its history, its workings, its demoralizing influence, and principal distinguishing features. The letter, with a statement which accompanied it, together with the comments of the Argus, were published at the time by Chancellor Pruyn in pamphlet form for distribution, and I am indebted to the courtesy of a friend (Hon. Sidney Webster, of New York) for a copy which he had carefully preserved for twenty-eight years.

It is an interesting contribution to the literature of this subject, and not having been prepared to influence the pending discussion, but solely as a matter of public interest, its observations are entitled to additional weight.

I shall incorporate the document in my remarks. I do not propose to read it at this particular time. It substantitates, Mr. President, every single allegation I have heretofore made, or have made to-day, in regard to the operations of the income tax in Great Britain. That tax was instituted as a war tax and defended as a war tax; it is obnoxious to the English people, and has only been retained because of the reasons which I have presented in brief to you. I will ask that the document may be incorporated in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The paper referred to is as follows:

MODES OF TAXATION—INCOMES AND OTHER INQUISITORIAL TAXES—THEIR DEMORALIZING INFLUENCE—HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH INCOME TAX.

[Letter from Prof. Goldwin Smith, of Oxford, to Hon. John V. L. Pruyn.]

The paper which we publish from Prof. Goldwin Smith was drawn out by some inquiries on the part of Hon. J. V. L. Pruyn, of this city, into the workings of the taxing system of Great Britain during the latter's recent visit there. The result of the discussion was a promise on the part of Prof. Smith to embody his views in a written form; and Mr. Pruyn has received since his return the interesting paper which we copy elsewhere.

The problem of how best to levy on our population the large body of annual taxes required by Government seriously occupies Congress and the State Legislatures. With a large number of the public Prof. Smith's name carries the force of authority; with all, his testimony and the experiences which he cites will have great weight.

Let us not make the great burden we have to bear in the way of taxation heavier by its maladjustment. A pack-horse may chafe under half his accustomed load if it is placed on his back so as to lacerate him or impede his breathing or free pace. We have had in this State a system of taxation in operation which, though confessedly imperfect, has accommodated itself to the modes of business and of thought of the people. It has from time to time been modified, but never changed in its essential character. The charge brought against it was, that while it reached over all the real property of the State, it failed to embrace the mass of personal property.

But the undervaluation of land and the full taxation of the increasing corporate capitals compensated in part for this; and still more the mode in which the whole volume of Federal taxation was collected in the shape of duties on imports. Within a few years the Federal system of taxes, multiplied a hundred fold, has assumed the additional form of stamps and licenses, and taxes on sales and incomes. State taxation, which was the subject of solicitude for many years, while Federal taxation was unfelt, is now overshadowed by the mountain height of the latter. If we attempt to conform the lesser to the larger system we will only aggravate evils which we might extenuate by leaving them alone.

The valuable paper which Prof. Smith gives us points out the evils of an inquisitorial system of taxation. If it is repugnant to English sentiment and habits, how much more so to American. Our people can hardly tolerate the visitations of the census enumerator and his interrogatories as to age, nativity, children, occupation, etc. We have found it impossible to enforce the official registration of marriages or births, or even of deaths. It is a social impertinence to inquire as to a man's religion or wealth.

An arrested prisoner is warned not to answer questions that may implicate him; and going beyond the English law in delicacy, we have abolished the interrogatory of "Guilty or not guilty?" We only demand of the arraigned if he desires to be tried.

Whatever may be said of Yankee inquisitiveness—which is but crudeness and simplicity—we all hold the question in law to be torture.

The reluctance which a mercantile people, like the English, may feel to an inquisition into their day books and ledgers, their debts and credits, is greatly enhanced in our case, where capital is small, ventures large, speculation uncertain, and credit built on so frail a foundation that a breath may upset it. We have been told by mercantile men that if, during the panic of 1852, or the panic of 1857, or the panic of 1860, or any of those intermittent crises to which our finances are subject, the leading houses of New York had been compelled to lay open their affairs to the public many would have gone into bankruptcy.

Is it a wonder that when men are called to a public confessional with such a penalty impending, they resort to falsehood? The sworn exhibits of banks, railway companies, and business corporations, which precede bankruptcy, and the falsehood of which bankruptcy reveals, are not exceptional. They grow out of a universal weakness in humanity. Let not government aggravate and extend the temptation to concealment and falsehood. A mercantile people learn finally to respect truth; for it is at the bottom of all credit and all mutual reliance. That one quality makes a people manly and sincere.

Let not the Government undo the lesson and by imposing a system of inquisition and interrogation upon our people repugnant to their customs and tone of mind make them prevaricators and cheats and drive commerce from its open paths and manly courses into illicit haunts and concealments that imply fear and shame.

OXFORD, January 26, 1866.

DEAR SIR: My work last term left me no leisure to look into the history of the income tax and verify the views which I had propounded in the conversation to which your letter refers; and term had scarcely ended when I was unexpectedly but unavoidably called away from Oxford to a place out of the way of political books and information.

My friend Mr. C. A. Roberts, of All Souls College, was, however, kind enough to assist me by looking into some points which I mentioned to him, and he has placed in my hands the brief sketch of the history of the tax, which I send herewith, and in which references are made to more extensive sources of information.

You will find, I believe, that the sketch in the main corresponds with the account of the matter which I gave you in our conversation.

The tax was first resorted to by Mr. Pitt in 1797, the most disastrous period of our war with the French Republic, in order to meet the exigencies of that great national emergency, without recourse to the constant loans which were subversive of public credit. It was remitted at the short peace of Amiens, and reimposed upon the renewal of the war, but considered by us, as a war measure, to terminate immediately on the conclusion of a treaty of peace. An attempt of the Government to retain it after the termination of the war was defeated, and, in the words of Mr. Wilberforce, the principle was ratified that "war and income tax were wedded together."

The tax was not again imposed till 1842, when Sir R. Peel, who had recently come into power, resorted to it to meet a special emergency, not of a military, but of a financial kind; viz, the large deficit caused by the financial miscarriages of his predecessors in the Government, and the injurious effect of that deficit on public credit. He at the same time wished to make what was then a great and somewhat perilous experiment, viz, the reduction of import duties, in the hope that the increased consumption would more than countervail to the revenue, the reduction of the duty, and he used the income tax to shore up, as it were, the fiscal system while this experiment was being made. The tax was limited to a stated period, and avowedly regarded by its author as an extraordinary measure, adopted to meet a great emergency and facilitate a critical experiment.

Its renewal by successive chancellors of the exchequer, since that time, has been partly justified by the fiscal experiment commenced by Sir Robert Peel, viz, the reduction of duties in the hope of relieving the consumer without loss to the revenue, and by the emergency of the Russian war, when the tax was temporarily increased. But the main inducement has been the dangerous facility of this fiscal engine; by means of which the minister who has it in his hand is able at any time, by a single turn of the screw, to produce an additional revenue of large and certain amount, and thus to keep up the war expenditure in time of peace, to which our Government, or rather our governing class is so incorrigibly addicted.

The tax has been opposed throughout its existence, mainly on three grounds:

I. The unfairness of its pressure on the different descriptions of incomes, those arising from labor and those not arising from labor, the certain and the precarious; to remedy which various attempts at discrimination have been made, but without success, so that the evil may be regarded as at once great and incurable.

2. Its inquisitorial character, and the arbitrary power almost inevitably given to the exchequer in assessing it.

3. Its demoralizing tendency, at least when there is no great national emergency to stimulate the patriotism of the taxpayer, and induce him from a sense of honor to make true returns. Notable instances of this tendency, even in the case of our most respectable class of citizens, are given in the historical sketch. Probably false returns to the income tax have been the easy and seductive first step in many a trader's downward path to mercantile dishonor. Nobody has admitted this more explicitly than Mr. Gladstone, though he has been to so great an extent responsible for the continuance of the tax.

There is another objection to the tax, arising from a socialistic tendency, as a tax imposed expressly on the rich, and capable of indefinite increase and class graduation, which is less felt in the country where the rich are the possessors of political power, but which, if I rightly remember a conversation which I had many years ago with a Swiss gentleman, was greatly felt in certain cantons of Switzerland, where principles bordering on socialism at that time prevailed.

The tax is attractive to our finance minister, as I imagine, not only from its facility and certainty as a source of revenue, but for the relief which it affords him from the necessity of deciding between the conflicting claims of different great interests, agricultural and commercial, in the distribution of fiscal burdens. This advantage, however, would equally belong to any impartial system of taxation, such as that of which, if I can presume to call myself an advocate of any system, I am an advocate—an equal tax on all realized property, combined with a stamp tax and an equal ad valorem duty on all imports.

I of course confine myself to the subject of the English income tax, without touching on the American question. But perhaps I may, without presumption, mention one or two points affecting, in different ways, the applicability of our experience to the case of your nation:

1. The socialistic tendency, which is here kept in check by the political power of the income-tax paying class, will perhaps in your case be equally kept in check by a different influence, viz, by the absence of any sharp class divisions among your people, the more palpable identity of interest, and the greater expectation felt by the poor man of being himself one day numbered with the rich.

2. We live under the system of free trade; you under that of protection I will not enter into the vexed and, I fear, acrimonious question as to the general merits of the two systems; but it is, of course, manifest that free trade, by encouraging the importation of articles on which duties can be levied, is the best for the customs revenue, and therefore the necessity for direct taxation may not be so great in our country as in yours.

3. On the other hand, much of the income paying the tax here is hereditary, or at least belongs to persons not engaged in any industry or trade, the curtailment of whose expenditure, especially when it is devoted to the maintenance of great domestic establishments, though it is an evil and, if carried beyond due limits, an injustice to the persons themselves, does not interfere with the production of wealth by the community; whereas in America the great incomes are generally the prizes of industry, which can not be rendered insecure without injuring industry itself and the leading shoots of commerce, which can not be lopped without stunting the growth of the whole tree.

I fear you will find nothing in this letter very new or instructive; but as you desired me to write down my thoughts, I could not refuse the request of so kind and hospitable a friend.

Believe me, dear sir, yours, very faithfully,

GOLDWIN SMITH.

Hon. JOHN V. L. PRUYN.

SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH INCOME TAX.

When the income tax was first adopted by Mr. Pitt, in November, 1797, the finances of the country were in a desperate condition, and the annual deficiencies had for sometime past been defrayed entirely by loans. Mr. Pitt now contended for the necessity of raising part of the supplies within the year, without adding to the funded debt. The means that he proposed were the laying of the tax on income, on the visible interior of the assessed taxes on houses, windows, etc. The bill was oposed violently in every stage.

Every class declared that it had its special grievance, and it was complained that so large an increase of the tax was an excessive injustice, its basis being an assessment upon past expenditure. The measure was finally carried, although the increase of taxation so added to Mr. Pitt's unpopularity that he was mobbed on his passage to St. Paul's while the bill was still under discussion.

The next year, December, 1798, the form of the assessed taxes bill was altered, and its name changed to the income tax. Pitt described the last bill as having fallen short by three and a half millions of its estimated produce of seven millions, and proposed that the presumption of expenditure, founded upon the assessed taxes, should be laid aside; that the general tax should be laid upon all the leading branches of income, while the statement of income was to proceed from the person himself, the commissioners having power in certain cases to make arbitrary assessments.

This bill also incurred fierce opposition during its passage through both houses; the war was attacked, the evils of draining the nation of its resources were insisted upon. It was said that the bill involved the revolutionary principle that all property belongs to the state; that it led to very inconvenient disclosures of property, especially in the case of mercantile men; and it was asserted that it was gross injustice not to consider the sources of income. In the House of Lords, Lord Aukland ably contended in favor of the measure, that income is income whatever the fund from which it is derived, and that if you take it by its market value it ceases to be income and becomes capital.

After the peace of Amiens the tax was relinquished, but it was imposed again the next year (1803) as a property tax, the same system of exemptions to incomes under £60 per annum being adopted as before.

In 1806 the income duty was raised to 10 per cent, and the act contained this clause: "Be it enacted, That this act shall commence and take effect from April 5, 1806, and that the said act and the duties thereof shall continue in force during the present war and until April 6 next, and after the definitive signature of a treaty of peace, and no longer;" but after the war, in 1816, the Government endeavored to retain one-half of the tax. Petitions were presented and meetings held against the continuance of the tax. The petitions of the city of London argued that though a reduction be made in the amount of tax, yet its principle remaining unchanged its operation would be still more galling. The ministry endeavored to free themselves from the pledge as to the continuance of the tax only during the war, on the ground that the pledge had been differently construed at the time of and since its enactment, but they were defeated, and the principle, as Mr. Wilberforce observed, was ratified that war and income tax were wedded together.

From this period until 1842 the income tax was frequently mentioned as a means to restore the finances. Sir H. Parnell, in his tract on Financial Reform (1830) advocated the same plan of an extensive remission of duties and imposition of an income tax, which was afterwards carried out by Sir R. Peel. In his budget of 1842 Peel observed that both an increase of taxes and a remission of taxes were unavailing to procure immediate relief to the finances, and that this could only be done by the imposition of an income tax, which would afford time for duties reduced to recover their productiveness. (For an abstract of Sir R. Peel's speech on this occasion see Sir Stafford Northcote's Financial Policy, pages 13 to 21, and for the arguments on the other side pages 33 to 41.)

On March 14, 1842, Lord Brougham laid on the table of the House of Lords resolutions to the following purport:

"That a direct tax laid upon income should only be resorted to in a great emergency.

"That it should cease with the necessity which alone would justify its imposition, as its facility of being increased offers a constant temptation to the Government.

"That though a past experience had proved the impossibility of drawing further revenue from increased taxes on consumption and an income tax was thus rendered necessary, it behooved Parliament to distribute the pressure so as to make it most easily and patiently borne. That there should be no invidious exemptions as to high persons (in 1806 stocks standing in the King's name were exempted on a motion made by Mr. Fox).

"That there should be a distinction between income arising from capital of every description and income arising from labor merely.

"That it is expedient to distinguish between incomes for years or for less and incomes possessed by persons who have an interest in the capital from whence the income arises.

"That no distinctions be made in favor of persons in the civil service or of pensions.

"That it is neither consistent with justice nor with sound policy to levy a greater proportion of tax upon larger incomes than upon smaller, and that an exemption of even the smallest incomes from the operation of the tax can only be justified upon the supposition that their owners are wholly unable to pay it.

"That increased economy should be exercised and the tax removed as soon as it shall appear that the ordinary branches of revenue have recovered from their temporary depression."

These resolutions were not agreed to, the previous question being moved and carried nem con, but except in so far as they refer to a distinction of tax upon different incomes, they appear to collect together most of the prevalent opinions as regards the income duty.

The pressure of the income tax was not severely felt for the first few years after 1842. Credit was restored, there were good harvests, and the relief by the remission of indirect taxes was apparent. Its best effect, however, seems to have been the restoration of credit, which took place as soon as it became evident that no resort would be had to a loan.

The income tax was renewed when it expired in 1845, Lord Russell (in opposition) declaring, that although he had been always of opinion that inequality, vexation, and fraud were inherent in the nature of the tax, yet that if the question was between a perpetual income tax and the continuance of monopoly and restriction, he would declare for the income tax, and a diminution and final abolution of all monopoly. Attempts were made by other memners of the opposition, but without success, to get an alteration in the application of the tax to different incomes.

In 1848 the attempt was made by the Government to raise the income tax from 7*d.* to 1*s.* in the pound, but they were obliged to be content with obtaining a renewal of the tax as before, for three years.

In a debate on Mr. Horsman's motion, that the tax should distinguish between permanent and precarious incomes, the chancellor of the exchequer said that landed property already paid a higher rate, as no deduction was allowed for repairs, and that the only way of making taxation equal was to impose a variety of taxes.

In 1851, it being proposed to renew the income tax, Mr. Hume moved and carried by 244 to 230, that the duration of the tax should be limited for a year, and a few days afterwards he obtained the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the mode of assessing and collecting the income tax. (See Sir Stafford Northcote, pages 163, 165.)

In 1852 Mr. D'Israeli, as chancellor of the exchequer, proposed a reduction of the tax on industrial incomes, but his budget was thrown out for other reasons.

In the year 1853 the income tax question assumed another phase. When in his budget of that time, Mr. Gladstone attempted to grapple with the difficulties of the matter, he extended the tax to Ireland, and lowered the scale of exemptions from £150 to £100 and provided for the final determination of the tax in 1860. (See Sir S. Northcote, pages 185 to 193.)

A remarkable part of this speech of Mr. Gladstone is that in which he argued that our debt need not have existed if there had been resolution enough to submit to the income tax at an earlier period than 1798.

The act of 1853 provides that a certain abatement shall be made upon the assessment of the income tax on those who shall have paid so much for life insurance.

Mr. Hume's committee about this time gave in the result of their inquiries. The basis of his scheme was to adjust the tax by proportioning the value of the property, the tenure of the owner, and the age of the owner; the principle was that the interest on the capitalized value of the income should be taxed. The evidence of the actuaries was very strong upon the feasibility of the scheme, but the chief officers of the inland revenue declared that its practice would be attended with insurmountable difficulties, and in spite of the appearance of authenticated accuracy in the plan the committee decided merely to publish their evidence without making a report.

The income tax was doubled in 1856, the time of the Crimean war, Mr. Gladstone arguing that to pay for the expenditure of war by taxation at the time is a moral check upon the passion for war. (See Sir S. Northcote, pages 258, 264.)

In 1857, after the termination of the war, some excitement was caused by the fear that the income tax would be continued at the war rate, but Sir G. Lewis stated that the Government would reduce it at once to 7*d.* in the pound. Next year, however, there was a deficiency, and the question then arose whether the income tax should be suffered to fall as provided by the act of 1853, and the debt postponed, or whether war taxation should be kept up in time of peace, in order to reduce debts contracted in time of war. The former alternative was chosen, but in 1859 Mr. Gladstone imposed an additional 4*d.*, and in 1860 an additional 1*d.* in the pound. (During this latter year certain customs duties were remitted through the French treaty, etc.) In 1861 1*d.* was removed from the income tax, and this year Mr. Hubbard moved for a select committee to inquire into the mode of assessing and collecting the income tax, and carried his motion in spite of the opposition of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. (Sir S. Northcote, page 370.)

Mr. Hubbard's committee, of which he was the chairman, consisted among others of Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Lowe, and Sir S. Northcote. This committee appear to have been throughout disinclined to his scheme; but their investigation was severe and complete. The chief witnesses examined were Mr. Mill and their chairman.

Of Mill's evidence questions 3539, 3543, 3578, 3571, 3572, 3706, 3712 appear most worthy of notice. His principal objection to the existing form of the tax is that income saved and reinvested is twice taxed; once as income, another time as interest of the income invested. In another place (Political Economy) he concludes that the tax has such objections in practice that it is better that it should be reserved for emergencies when the necessity of a large additional revenue overrules all objections. Of Mr. Hubbard's evidence questions 1189, 1190, 1196, 1211, 1213, 1214, 1215, 1243, 1245, 1266, 1249, 1299, 1352 appear to call for notice. He declined to commit himself to the expression that savings ought not to be taxed, preferring to describe the unequal incidence of the tax as the taxation of capital.

Mr. Hubbard's draft report was rejected by the committee. Its general tenor may be gathered from the following remarks of the joint report presented by the committee.

The principal features of Mr. Hubbard's scheme are:

1. A proposal to make net instead of gross income the basis of assessment to the tax, not ascertaining the net income by an account of actual outgoings, but assuming it by a deduction founded on an average from certain classes of gross income.

2. A proposal to divide all incomes into two classes, of which the one should comprise incomes called spontaneous, and the other incomes called industrial, and to tax the former upon the full amount of the net income, and to tax the latter upon two-thirds of that amount.

3. A proposal to distinguish in certain cases between the interests of invested capital and the repayment by installments of the invested capital itself, and to levy the tax upon the interest only, and not upon the repaid portion of the capital.

The committee conclude their report by declining to adopt these proposals, or to suggest any method for the reconstruction of the tax. Mr. Lowe drew up a separate draft report against Mr. Hubbard's scheme, as also did Sir Stafford Northcote. One also was drawn up by Mr. Sothern Estcourt, who remarked "that the committee had to consider whether an inequality occasioned by an artificial attempt to arrive at a perfectly correct result would not be more likely to be a subject of complaint than the admitted inequality of the existing plan, by which all are covered under one mantle of universal and impartial application which does not exactly fit anybody."

He then remarks upon the injustice of taxing professional gains, and concludes that the income tax is, in its nature, essentially an unequal and unsatisfactory source of public revenue, etc., and that true policy dictates, if the tax is to be maintained in ordinary times, it should be kept so low that the difference between the relative position of man and man, class and class, should not be of such an amount or importance as to demand the intervention of the State.

In 1862 Mr. Hubbard brought forward a motion requiring the readjustment of the incidence of the income tax upon incomes derived from industry and skill as compared with those derived from property. The motion was rejected. It was repeated in 1863, and again thrown out.

This year the tax was reduced from 9*d.* to 7*d.*, and a modified allowance was permitted to incomes between £100 and £200. In 1864 another penny was taken off, and in 1865 the tax was reduced to 4*d.* in the pound. Mr. Hubbard brought forward another motion in 1864, to this purport: "That the inequalities and injustice attending the operation of the existing income tax disqualify it from being continuously reimposed in its present form, as one of the means of levying the national revenue," but it was rejected by 67 to 39.

Thus far with the history of the income tax in England. The one thing surprising in tracing its course is, that it should be still preserved as a regular means of supplying the exchequer in time of peace, and for no great particular object. Not a statesman of eminence who has not spoken against the tax; its inequalities are glaring, and its unpopularity great, yet it still exists. The fact that direct taxation accidentally became a cry of the Liberal party in England may have, in some degree, contributed to the long continuance of this tax. The merits, indeed, of any tax are but negative, but apart altogether from the general question of direct and indirect taxation, the income tax seems to have such intrinsic faults in its nature as to prevent its regular use by a statesman almost in any case, but especially in the fitful and fluctuating way in which it has been employed since 1842.

The difficulties connected with the income tax can be ranged under four heads:

1. That of ascertaining the income of different individuals.

2. That of levying an equal tax on incomes derived from different sources, which involves the difficulties of drawing an accurate line between capital and income.

3. The encouragement it gives to careless expenditure.

4. The eminent danger of those who benefit by the exemptions using and altering the tax, either thoughtlessly or purposely, so as to press hardly on the nonexempted classes.

The first difficulty can only be met by either the adoption of the objectionable principle of self-assessment, or by the employment of annoying and inquisitorial means.

The principle of self-assessment gives such unlimited scope to fraud, that the tax was described by Mr. Gladstone in 1858 as doing more than any other tax to demoralize and corrupt the country. Instance after instance might be given of income-tax fraud, but perhaps the following are the most remarkable, and have greater authority:

1. Mr. Gladstone, in his Budget of 1853, quoted the case of the alteration of Canon street, London, when the people in the old street received compensation for their loss of business. The number of persons was twenty-eight. They claimed in all the sum of £48,159, as compensation for their profit of a single year. The amount awarded by the jury was £26,973; but the return of profits for assessment to the income tax, which they had separately made, amounted only to £9,000.

2. Mr. Stafford Northcote, in a debate on the income tax, March 23, 1850, said: "Two years ago he was employed in investigating the claims of persons connected with the ecclesiastical courts, for compensation in consequence of the abolition of their offices. Those claims were generally preferred with great fairness, and were substantiated by the production of books and accounts; but when he came to compare some of them with the returns which the claimants themselves had made to the income tax, he was astonished by the most painful disclosures. One gentlemen, who had stood very high in the profession to which he belonged, had paid income tax for some years on an average income of £3,000; but it was proved satisfactorily that his actual income had been double that amount, and in one year it had been £9,000.

That gentleman, before he applied to the treasury, had paid arrears to the income tax commissioners to the amount of £609 in order to enable himself to come into court. A very respectable firm proved that in five years they had made £31,432; but the amount they had returned to the income tax in the same period was no more than £8,800. In another case, a gentleman claiming between 3,000 and 4,000 pounds sterling a year by his profession, had assessed himself for one year at £200 per annum. Afterwards his returns rose to £1,161, and when questioned he stated that he "had fixed upon that amount because he thought that an odd figure would look better than a round sum."

The Quarterly Review, remarking upon these cases, says that in every trade alike they are the first easy lessons in lying, the first apprenticeship in cooking accounts and doctoring calculations. If the tax were reserved, as it ought to be, for rare and grave emergencies, and when every other consideration is overborne by the necessity of a speedy supply of money, there would be less fear of fraud, people's patriotism would be appealed to, and they would be ashamed at deception.

Fraudulent returns could be partly checked by the adoption of a stricter inquisition, but there are few things which excite greater antipathy to the tax than the necessity which even now traders are under of disclosing their affairs. (See papers of the Income Tax Reform Association, 1857.)

In considering the encouragement which the income tax at present gives to careless expenditure Gladstone, in 1858, said in the House of Commons: "So long as you consent, without special purpose, to levy the income tax as part of the ordinary and permanent revenue of the country, so long it will be vain to talk of economy and effective reduction of expenditure. It is a source so productive, an engine so convenient, and it is so easy to lay on 1 penny or 2 pence at a time and argue that it will not be perceived."

The result is that our national income tends to be adjusted to the expenditure, instead of our expenditure being made to adjust itself to the revenue.

Lastly. The consideration of the use likely to be made of the tax through the system of exemptions is, perhaps, more political than financial: but its importance with an extended franchise is manifest.

If the tax is retained, the danger can only be met by deliberately making the tax permanent and invariable in amount, so that it may be a steady and fixed element in the financial system of the country, yet susceptible of sudden increase in time of war.

AN UNJUST TAX.

Mr. HILL. The advocates of an income tax fail to appreciate the important and controlling fact that tariff or Federal taxation is not the only taxation in this country. They ignore a most material and essential consideration, that in addition to Federal taxation there exists State, county, and municipal taxation to which every man of property is more or less subjected, and that such State, county, and municipal taxation combined exceeds in amount the whole tariff taxation of the General Government by over $260,000,000. In other words, the statistics demonstrate the fact that the tariff taxation of the United States does not equal one-half of the other taxation to-wit, State, county, and municipal taxation, which for the purposes of this argument, I may hereafter denominate "local taxation."

Does any one dispute these figures? If so, I have them here in detail before me, and I will read them if desired. We have no right to shut our eyes to these facts. In framing a system of Federal taxation which shall justly and equitably reach the citizens and property in the respective States of the Union, it becomes our first duty to inquire as to what general system of local taxation exists in the States. Is there a tax upon consumption there or a tax upon property? These are most pertinent inquiries to which we should carefully address ourselves.

In the first place, we should endeavor to avoid a duplication of taxation. This is so plain and tenable a proposition that it needs no amplification. If by some scheme of taxation already existing in the States, there is a virtual and substantial tax upon consumption there, by which local revenues are realized for the purposes of the support of State, county, and municipal governments, then it is wisdom upon our part in framing a general system of Federal taxation to avoid as far a possible a duplication of any tax upon consumption, but to resort to some other system.

With these general principles in view, to which every intelligent citizen can readily give assent, let us see where we stand and what situation confronts us.

We find that the general system of taxation already existing in the States is a direct ad valorem tax upon the real and personal property of the citizens and corporations. This is the general rule, to which of course there are some exceptions, as a few States have peculiar and unusual systems of their own not now necessary to be specially noted.

In addition to these direct taxes upon property, some States have special taxes upon corporations and some have taxes upon incomes; but the general rule is as I have stated.

Therefore, as direct taxes upon property itself, according to its value, are imposed in the States, to secure State and local revenues, it would seem to follow that to secure Federal revenues some Federal system should be adopted, other than direct taxation upon property.

What sources of revenue—other than direct taxation upon property—remain open and accessible to the General Government?

The Constitution itself answers the question. It expressly confers upon Congress the power to raise revenues by taxation upon foreign importations. It does more than that—it goes further and declares that this field for raising Federal revenues shall be reserved exclusively to the General Government, and the States are positively prohibited from entering upon it.

The power is ample—the sources are sufficient. The General Government has no occasion to resort to any other or direct taxation to secure sufficient moneys for its support. Direct taxation may properly be left to the States as their exclusive field for raising revenue—left not because of a want of constitutional power to enter it, but as a matter of courtesy, a matter of policy, a matter of propriety.

Double taxation is thereby avoided, a clashing between State and Federal interests is prevented, the spectacle of an unseemly scramble for revenues in the same direction by State and Federal authorities is happily averted, and two different and distinct systems of taxation—one direct, the other indirect—are seen to work harmoniously together side by side, neither encroaching upon the jurisdiction or prerogatives of the other.

This was evidently the theory of the fathers of the Republic when, instead of resorting to direct taxation, they early inaugurated the policy of a tariff for revenue to meet the needs of the General Government.

That was the policy advocated by Thomas Jefferson, the founder of Democracy, in his second inaugural address. I need not repeat what he then said, as it has been quoted several times during this debate. In substance and effect he opposed direct taxation for Federal purposes, and advocated an adherence to the policy of raising Federal revenues by means of taxation upon foreign importations. That policy left the States free to monopolize all the known systems or methods of direct taxation for local purposes, and reserved, exactly as the Constitution contemplated, all the taxation upon imports for the uses of the General Government.

That was the Democratic policy maintained from the days of Jefferson to the time of our civil war, with only a few occasional interruptions; it was the policy of a tariff for revenue; it was the policy which justly recognized and preserved the rights and prerogatives of the several States; it presented a homogeneous system or means of taxation for both the National Government and the several States. That policy was maintained during the war of 1812; it was continued during the Mexican war; and it was not until our great civil war, when tariff revenues proved insufficient for the immense drain upon our financial resources, that we were compelled to resort to income and other war taxes, both direct and internal.

It is suggested to me that no one man can read the debates upon the adoption of the Federal Constitution without coming to the conclusion that the Constitution never would have been adopted if the clauses to which I have referred were not placed in the Constitution.

Then, when "this cruel war was over," and peace once more dawned upon our fair land, by common consent, as it were, the income tax was speedily abolished, although the nation was fearfully in debt and tariff taxation was strained to the uttermost to meet the demads of the Government.

It was recognized as a war tax fit only to be maintained in war times, and necessarily to cease in times of peace. Yet now, nearly thirty years after the close of the war, and twenty-four years after the abolition of the income tax, we find men who are masquerading as Democrats, but who are Populists in heart and principle, advocating the restoration of this income tax, a relic of our civil war, and a constant reminder of all its terrible memories.

Look at the inconsistent position in which this proposed legislation will place the Democratic party. For twenty-five years we have clamored against war taxes; we have reminded the people over and over again that they were suffering from war tariff legislation; we have invoked the patriotism of our citizens to obliterate every unpleasant and unnecessary feature that remains of that great conflict which can be properly eliminated; test oaths have been abolished; general amnesty has been decreed; past differences have been so far happily discarded and forgotten that those who were conspicuous in their devotion to the lost cause in that great conflict are now our honored and trusted leaders in both Houses of Congress, largely shaping the legislation and destinies of a reunited country; Northern capital is seeking investment in Southern States, and Southern men of brains and ambition are finding homes in Northern cities where a cordial welcome always awaits them; the pacification of the country has been largely effected, and sectional animosities and jealousies are fast dying out; and yet now after a quarter of a century has passed away and the Democratic party, for the first time since the war, has been intrusted with the full control of the Government, one of our very first acts is to restore the most odious, inquisitorial, and offensive war taxes with which a free people were ever afflicted.

If this is political wisdom, it is folly to be wise. If this is true Democracy, I want none of it. If this is the best leadership which we can present in this great crisis, I, for one, must decline to follow it. I prefer to stand with Jefferson, and Jackson, and Tilden, in opposition to all income taxes, and direct Federal taxation, but in favor of a tariff for revenue for Federal purposes and direct taxation for State purposes.

SPURIOUS DEMOCRACY.

I repudiate the spurious Democracy of these modern apostles and prophets, who are part Mugwump, part Populist, and the least part Democratic, who seek to lead us astray after false gods, false theories, and false methods. I object to our restoring a war tax which the Republicans themselves rejected years ago, with our approbation.

I protest against that lack of foresight and judgment upon the part of some professed Democrats who always seem anxious to adopt whatever the Republicans and the people have repudiated. There were those who vigorously opposed the issue of greenbacks during the war, but when Republicans after the war sought to curtail and restrict their further issue, these men became the earnest champions of a greenback currency and sought to merge the Democratic party into a greenback party. They opposed the policy of a return to specie payments, and then when specie payments became an accomplished fact they clamored for paper money.

Then subsequently they espoused the cause of a metallic currency and became the earnest advocates of free silver—the free and unlimited coinage of silver; but soon thereafter, with characteristic fickleness unworthy of so good a cause, they accepted the Bland compromise measure, which provided simply for a limited coinage. Then the Republicans in 1890 passed the Sherman law, which provided, not for the free and unlimited coinage of silver the same as gold, but for a limited coinage and the purchase and storage of silver bullion, treating it as a commodity instead of a money metal, a measure which violated every correct principle of finance; and although the Democratic party opposed that measure and denounced it for three years and demanded its repeal in their national platform, the present leading advocates of an income tax when the opportunity for action came last year strenuously opposed its repeal in Congress for three long months. They are the same shortsighted men who four years ago made the air of the Capitol resound with their denunciations of ex-Speaker REED'S rules, and recently turned around and adopted the substantial principle involved in those very rules, amid the laughter and ridicule of the whole country.

Mr. President, I can not follow such leadership, which shifts and turns and temporizes upon every public question; which compromises every well-established Democratic principle for which the party contended when out of power; which stands ready to adopt every passing "ism" of the hour; which surrenders principle for expediency and pursues no consistent course from one year to another. If political success of my party is only to be purchased by such methods and such sacrifices I prefer defeat and the preservation of my self-respect.

STATE VS. NATIONAL TAXATION.

Mr. President, the national victory of 1892 meant a reduction of the tariff; it did not mean an income tax. It did not mean an invasion of State rights, a usurpation of State privileges, or the absorption of State sources of taxation.

It did not mean direct taxation on the part of the General Government. It meant a tariff for revenue, a reasonable reduction in tariff duties, the substitution of revenue duties for prohibitory duties wherever the latter existed, the placing of raw materials upon the free list, and the restriction of the revenues to be raised to the actual necessities of the Government.

This was the policy to which the party was solemnly committed.

But instead of pursuing this plain and simple course, which duty unmistakably marked out, this bill in its present shape abandons many Democratic principles and seeks to impose upon the party and the country a vicious and offensive scheme of Federal taxation for which they never voted.

But it is said in justification of this departure from Democratic precedents, that tariff taxation does not reach the wealth of the country, but that an income tax will, and hence that the latter is desirable.

A tariff duty is an indirect tax upon consumption, and wealth pays its share of whatever it consumes. There are no classes exempt from its operation, and the greater the consumption the larger is the tax.

No men and no two families consume productions equally, and hence in amount their taxation is not the same, but it is equal in the sense that each pays his pro rata share.

A poor man and a rich man do not pay exactly alike, nor do two poor men nor two rich men, but each pays proportionally to what he uses.

No one pretends that this system of tariff taxation is, of itself alone, absolutely and entirely just, neither is any other single system of taxation which the world has ever tolerated, as there will always necessarily exist some inequalities in such matters, but taken in connection with other systems which exist in the States and with which it must be considered and operated, we insist that customs duties affords the best, easiest, and least felt method of raising Federal revenues which has yet been devised, and in my judgment it will continue to be the settled policy of this Government long after those who are now so loudly complaining of its hardship and injustice shall have been forgotten.

The burdens of tariff taxation are sometimes grossly exaggerated. The whole customs duties collected last year only amounted to about $205,000,000, which, divided among 60,000,000 of people, made a tax of scarcely $3.50 apiece.

What a tremendous sum to pay for all the blessings of a free government!

A tariff tax is an indirect tax, and is therefore the least felt by the people.

I adhere to the Democratic doctrine that the tariff is a tax, and that the consumer and not the foreigner pays the tax; but while this is true as the general rule, of course the importer alone pays the tax in the first instance and usually the consumer afterwards; but it is also equally true that sometimes it is very difficult to ascertain when and in what proportion, if at all, the consumer pays any particular tariff tax.

Tariff duties do not always increase prices, and sometimes their effect seems to be to diminish prices. Prices are largely affected by competition, the question of supply and demand, and hard times or good times. When the duty upon wool was increased by the McKinley bill in 1890, the price of wool did not rise in this country, but it diminished, and has remained lower ever since.

Under such circumstances it can not well be said that the consumers of wool paid the increased duty, except upon the possible theory that but for the duty the wool would have been still cheaper. No absolutely exact rule or principle can be laid down in such matters. The tariff subject is not an exact science. Extravagant duties invite competition, and competition usually lowers prices, but prices are not always regulated by tariffs, and hence there is no accurate method of ascertaining how much of the annual revenues realized from a tariff bill are really paid by the actual consumers. The people are not suffering so much today from indirect tariff taxation as they are from direct State and local taxation. The productions and manufactures upon which tariff duties are now imposed were never so cheap as they are at this time.

The evils of the hour from which the people are suffering arise largely from an inadequate and disordered currency and a bad financial system, dating back from that evil day in 1873 when free bimetallic coinage ceased in the United States.

It is State and local taxation from which the people are also suffering, which is double that of the Federal tariff taxation. Look at the financial condition of the States whose representatives here are especially jealous or anxious in urging the substitution of income taxes for tariff taxes.

There is Georgia, whose junior Senator I am pleased to regard as my personal as well as political friend, and who made his debut in this Senate in an eloquent and earnest defense of an income tax, has a State debt of $10,449,542; Tennessee, whose able representative in the House [Mr. MCMILLIN] is the real author of this income-tax provision, but whose sense of fairness and propriety for which he is noted should have led him not to insist upon inserting it in this bill, but if at all, in a separate measure, is staggering under the load of a State debt of $19,695,974; Missouri, whose senior Senator [Mr. VEST] is largely responsible, voluntarily or compulsorily, for much of the present bill, has a State debt of $11,759,832; Alabama, whose influential Senators have obtained for her a tariff duty upon iron ore, and not satisfied with that violation of Democratic pledges, now demand an income tax in order to fulfill Populist promises, has a State debt of $12,413,196; Texas, the versatile and elastic free-trade sentiments of whose junior Senator [Mr. MILLS] permit him without inconsistency to vote against free iron ore and for free lead ore, against free sugar and for free wool, but for an income tax always, has a State debt of $4,317,515; Louisiana, with a sugar tax of $43,000,000 imposed upon the whole country for the incidental benefit of her own sugar industries, can not be heard to complain of the hardship of other tariff duties or to demand an income tax in place thereof, while her own State debt amounts to $16,008,585; North Carolina, with a State debt of $7,703,100, and South Carolina, with a like debt of $6,953,582, and Indiana, with a debt of $8,538,059, and Arkansas, with a debt of $8,671,782, and last, but not least, Virginia, whose able and distinguished senior Senator sits upon my left here, and for whom I have great personal respect and friendship, and whom I am sure would not intentionally do injustice to the great Democratic Empire State of New York, where he has many warm admirers—his State has a debt amounting to the enormouse sum of $34,227,234; these States whose aggregate State debts amount to the grand total of $132,066,619, supplemented by immense county, city, and town indebtedness amounting to millions upon millions more, are suffering more from the burdens of their own local direct taxation than from any indirect Federal tariff taxation or from the absence of an income tax.

In order to relieve the people from these local burdens there is no objection to these States providing for local taxation upon incomes, or to the adoption of any other system of local taxation which they desire, whereby wealth in these States may be compelled to bear its full portion of local taxation, but we object to their insisting that New York or the General Government shall also adopt an income tax for their particular benefit.

Is there any particular complaint from these States that their men of wealth escaped taxation? If there is, and an income tax will reach them, why do they not adopt a State income tax, and at once relieve their own people? No; that is not their purpose or object. They desire a Federal income tax, not to reach the men of wealth in their own States, but to reach those in other States.

I noticed the other day that Evan P. Howell, of the Atlanta Constitution, a genial and popular Democrat of Georgia, visited New York. He met a correspondent who spoke to him and congratulated him upon the appointment to this body of the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], who in part represents that State here. After having done so the correspondent said to him: "I observe that Senator WALSH is advocating an income tax in the Senate. What do you say to that, Mr. Howell?" Mr. Howell replied: "That is all right. We are all for an income tax down in our part of the country; and so is Senator WALSH, who represents us, because none of us have $4,000 income, and somebody else will have to pay the tax."

They admit that such an income tax will affect their own people but little. They have taken pains to fix the exemption high enough so that their States will be compelled to contribute little or nothing. It is the great Democratic State of New York which they are after—that is the State to be punished. Its chief city, which has always been the target for every Republican attack, is now to be raided by its own party friends in Congress.

The State which has ever been friendly to the South and its people, which has ever defended their constitutional rights and prerogatives; the State which has always opposed force bills, carpet-bag governments, federal election laws, arbitrary arrests, and federal interference in State affairs; the State which is one of only three Northern States which have a full Democratic representation in this Senate, and thereby gave the Democratic party its control here, and which has Democratic Representatives in the other House; the State whose citizens are the most generous contributors of those in all other States towards Democratic campaigns in every part of the country; that State, because its business men have by their energy, ability, thrift, and industry built up their business, their industries, and their varied enterprises, so that they realize large incomes from them, is to be subjected to an odious, unnecessary, and objectionable income tax, at the instigation of their party friends from the South, as soon as we get possession of the Government; a Federal tax for which New York nor any other Democratic State ever voted; a tax which no Democratic national platform ever approved; a tax rejected and discarded by the people of all parties twenty-four years ago; a tax the imposition of which will drive New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut into the Republican column, there to permanently remain; a tax the individual feature of which has not been recommended by any Democratic President or Secretary of the Treasury or Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but a tax suggested, advocated, and now persistently pushed by a majority which is temporarily "in the saddle" in this Congress, and is driving the Democratic party with reckless and headlong speed into the abyss of political ruin.

Mr. President, the excuse for the restoration of an income tax is the avowed purpose of reaching the wealth of the country. This is the oft-repeated answer which is made to every objection raised. I assert that it is not a tax upon wealth per se. Wealth is property, either real or personal, and this is a tax upon neither. It is a tax upon what a man earns—upon his thrift, his industry, his capacity, his pluck, his savings, his prudence; but it is not a tax upon wealth, upon what he actually has. It is not a tax upon what a man has really acquired, but it is a tax upon what he is earning or acquiring; a tax imposed in transitu, while wealth is being earned or acquired.

Incomes are uncertain with men of business—they have large incomes one year and large losses the next. A tax once paid can not be restored, and there is no method of equalizing the tax for a given period of years. A man may earn $10,000 one year and invest it in business the next year, and for five years annually lose money until he has lost all and more than he earned; yet he paid the income tax, not upon the net result of five years' business, but upon the result of one year's venture.

An income tax works manifest injustice because, like all war taxes, it is founded upon no principle. That is the very nature of a war tax. It reaches out for whatever is in sight, regardless of justice, circumstances, or results. Income is not property according to the usual or proper acceptation of the term. It may be due but not realized—it may not have been reduced to possession; it can not always well be reached on a sheriff's execution.

Taxation should be imposed, not upon incomes which are usually variable and uncertain, but either upon property or upon importations. The General Government should not endeavor to monopolize both the direct and indirect methods of taxation.

The property of the country—its stable and acquired wealth—should be reached by direct taxation, while indirect taxation reaches whatever we consume.

Of course, property or wealth per se is not reached by a tax upon consumption, and is not intended to be. That is left to be reached by direct taxation.

The advocates of an income tax point to this or that wealthy citizen who owns houses and lands without number, and complain that he pays no more taxes to the General Government than the poor man who owns nothing at all but supports a whole family. That may be true, although usually it costs more to support the rich man's family than the poor man's, and hence the rich man pays more under a tax on consumption.

But even if that were otherwise no injustice is done anybody.

No one expects that any one system of taxation is to reach every class. We must not forget that while there is one General Government, there are also forty-four States, with local systems of taxation of their own. (Our Union is one body, united like the ocean, but divided like the waves.) The Constitution contemplated that the General Government would resort to tariff taxation for its revenues, and that the States would resort to direct taxation upon property, and together the two systems would work harmoniously together, and reach all classes and all property, and our fathers before us so construing the Constitution inaugurated the present system of tariff taxation which has been in existence from the foundation of the Government.

The rich man who owns the houses and lands pays State, county, and municipal taxes thereon according to their value, and he pays his tariff taxes besides upon whatever he consumes.

The poor man, however, who owns no property, of course pays no State, county, or municipal taxes, but simply his tariff taxes.

If income taxes should be substituted for tariff taxes, then the poor man would pay nothing, either to the State or local or national governments.

No person should be exempt from all taxation—both direct and indirect—simply because he owns no property.

The statistics show that 80 per cent of our population own no taxable real or personal property whatever, and hence they pay no direct taxes. The only way the 80 per cent are reached at all is through tariff taxes—a tax upon consumption. The Constitution imposes no property qualification as a condition of being entitled to vote, but it fully recognizes manhood suffrage.

The poor man's right to vote is strengthened and intrenched by the fact that he is not a drone in society, but that while he pays nothing for police, fire, and other local purposes, nothing for lighted streets or good roads, nothing for the maintenance of courts or justice or for schools where his children are educated, yet he does pay his share of taxes upon consumption through the imposition of customs duties.

His enemies are those who would suggest the substitution of an income tax for these tariff taxes, whereby he would pay nothing whatever for the support of his State or National Government.

The same Constitution which guarantees manhood suffrage—that is, the right of every citizen to vote whether he owns property or not—also provides for taxes upon consumption in the shape of tariff taxes and forbids the States from imposing any tariff taxes; and this is a most significant fact in my judgment, because it indicates that it was the intention of the framers of that instrument that manhood suffrage and taxes upon consumption should go hand in hand together; and when you destroy the one you undermine the security of the other.

Will some one tell us why 80 per cent of our population should escape all taxation whatever, as they would if income taxes should be substituted for tariff taxes?

It is never desirable in a free government especially, or in fact in any other government, that property should pay all the taxes.

What good reason can be urged for any such discrimination?

Are property owners the only ones interested in the maintenance of government?

Is property the only thing to be protected in the administration of public affairs?

Let us take a broad view of the situation—a nonpartisan view—a view free from demagogy and from clap-trap, and unawed by popular clamor and uninfluenced by unintelligent criticism.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

We hear upon every side the flimsy excuse that Senators do not personally favor an income tax and doubt the wisdom of the experiment upon which we are about to enter, but that their people want it and they must vote for what their people want.

This is a narrow and timid view of public duty. Public sentiment is fickle at the best—it comes and goes; it is unreasonable and arbitrary and pig-headed at times. There are occasions when it should not be tamely submitted to, but should be resisted and defeated.

I respect what is called public sentiment when it is right, but I detest and defy it when it is wrong, unreasonable, and arrogant. It should never be allowed to swerve us from our sense of official duty. We should not mistake a healthy and an honest public sentiment for a mere clamor, an outburst of passion, or a freak of prejudice.

It is in emergencies above all other times when public men should keep level heads, maintain their courage, and adhere to their sincere convictions. In my judgment public men should not imitate the willow and bow to every passing breeze, but stand up brave, erect, and strong like the oak of the forest, and defy the storm which always soon passes away.

OUR TWO SYSTEMS OF TAXATION.

Again I repeat the inquiry, why should accumulated wealth or property pay all the taxes of any government?

In France, where the government consists of one central power or organization from which all legislation emanates, there are direct taxes upon property, custom-house taxation, and also a capitation tax.

No one there escapes taxation except the absolute pauper. A capitation tax is imposed to reach those who own no property and may not be sufficiently reached by indirect tariff taxation.

Their system recognizes the desirability from every rational point of view, that every citizen should pay something towards the support of the government which protects his person and under which he "lives, moves, and has his being."

Here our country is divided into States and one complete system of taxation for both the nation and the States is not practicable, if for no other reason because the Constitution expressly forbids the States from entering upon one field of taxation which is regarded as exclusively belonging to the nation.

But the nation can have one system and the States another, and neither need conflict with the other. There is not so much difference between the total amount of Federal taxation and that of State taxation as to prevent substantial equality in the distribution of public burdens.

Our duplex system of taxation is not a complex one. It is simple and easily understood. The State system and the national system work harmoniously together. The merits of the one can not be weighed without considering at the same time the merits of the other.

The man of property, the rich man if you please, pays taxes upon his houses and lands and personal property, the property which he actually owns, under our State systems of taxation; while the man without property, the poor man if you please, pays his taxes upon consumption, upon what he uses, as does also the rich man; and the mere fact that the poor man may or may not pay a greater proportion of the taxes upon consumption than the rich man is no evidence of inequality in taxation, as each pays in proportion to what he owns and what he uses.

Accumulated wealth—that is, property, houses, lands, and personalty—should pay its full share of the public burdens, State and national, but it does not follow that it escapes its full share simply because it is not reached directly by tariff taxation alone.

The propriety, if not the absolute necessity, of the General Government pursuing a different system of taxation than the States, in order to not conflict with them and not to unreasonably duplicate taxation and in order to reach all classes, is so apparent that it needs no further argument.

WHICH GOVERNMENT PROTECTS PROPERTY?

Much is said about the General Government "protecting" property, and that therefore property should pay taxes directly to it. Such protection is more of a fiction than a reality, more of a theory than a practical result. In truth and in fact the property and personal liberty of the citizen is protected almost exclusively and entirely by his town, county, and State governments. The local governments are those which protect property and personal rights, which supply us with fire and police protection, with sewer privileges, with pure and wholesome water, with gas and electricity for our streets, which maintain our pavements and roads, which arrest and punish our offenders, which support our public schools and sustain our countless charitable institutions, and charter our public conveyances, protect our suffrages, and maintain public order everywhere, and which make life worth living.

The obligation of ourselves and our accumulated property is to the State and local governments and not to the General Government, except in the remotest degree.

In fact the General Government has but a very limited jurisdiction over us, which is defined in the Constitution. It can legislate but little in regard to our domestic affairs. All the various relations of life, and our business, our occupations, our contracts, our homes, our comforts and privileges, are all regulated by the State and not the nation.

The nation can not give us honest local governments; it can not protect us from fraud, speculation, robbery, murder, fire, darkness, bad highways, ignorance, pauperism, intemperance, and crime generally, or from any of the other evils the prevention or regulation or control of which requires the expenditure of public moneys.

The very nature of our Government prevents such protection and forbids such interference with the domestic affairs of States.

The jurisdiction of the General Government is very much restricted. It can do three things under the Constitution (Constitution, Article IV, section 4): First, it can guarantee to every State a republican form of government, a comparatively easy task, usually entirely fulfilled when the State is first admitted into the Union; second, it must protect each of them from foreign invasion, a danger which no one need ever fear; third, it must protect them from domestic violence, but only when asked by the Legislature or executive of a State. The occasions for interference to discharge this last duty have been very rare in the history of the country.

It may therefore be safely asserted that the new-found theory for tolerating an income tax in time of peace, because of the protection which the General Government gives to wealth, property, and individuals, has little or nothing to support it. The same false theory has been especially invoked to justify an income tax upon corporations, and it has been urged that as corporations are invested with vast powers and privileges not enjoyed by individuals, and receive much protection in their vast undertakings, and are as a rule prosperous by reason of opportunities afforded to acquire wealth by their aggregated capital, they are fit subjects for an income tax.

The first answer to this plausible argument is that corporations already pay to the States their share of taxation. If they do not, they can be compelled to do so by the States themselves, and their failure or fulfillment of that duty is a matter of no concern to the General Government.

The next answer is that these corporations are created by the various States and not by the General Government, and their obligations are to the States and not to the nation. The corporations created by Congress are few indeed—they can be counted on the ends of your fingers. They cut no figure among the great mass of the corporations of the country.

The existence of these corporations thus created by the States may furnish a reason why the States might subject them to income or other special taxation, but not why the General Government should do so.

Many States which have created them have already subjected them to immense special taxation, from which large revenues are derived for the support of their State governments, and the General Government has no moral right to imperil or diminish those revenues by imposing double taxation.

AN UNNECESSARY TAX.

In my address to the Senate on April 9 last I made the point that this tax was not required by the necessities of the Government. I think I furnished the data which conclusively established that contention.

I have yet to hear those figures disputed. No Senator around this circle has endeavored to maintain the necessity for this tax at this time; no official has supplied any information which shows that it is needed.

I need hardly suggest that nothing but the most pressing necessity would justify the imposition of such a tax in a time of profound peace. That necessity should be proved; it should not be assumed. The great compromiser of the age—the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]—while personally expressing his dislike of this tax and regretting its adoption, yet with that spirit of conciliation which always characterizes him reluctantly accepts it, and has seen fit to suggest that it may be denominated an "emergency" tax.

What "emergency," in any proper sense in which that term can be used, has arisen which justifies it? None whatever.

There has simply been a falling off of the usual tariff revenues, occasioned by the temporary depression in business and by the scare produced by contemplated tariff changes, and that is all.

The ordinary routine of business will soon be resumed and the usual revenues will be flowing into the Treasury. There is no "emergency" in fact; it is a mere play upon words to call the present situation such.

Whatever emergency there may have been, if any at all, is already past and been met by the issue of bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such a contingency can be met again in the same way if necessary.

Besides, this tax is not intended to meet any existing emergency, because by the very terms of this bill not a dollar can be realized from the proposed income tax until July 1, next year. Besides, it is not possible that the framers of this measure regarded extraordinary revenues as desirable at this time, because they have deliberately provided that the sugar tax, which in their wisdom they have voluntarily or otherwise seen fit to impose, shall not go into effect until the 1st day of January next.

What an absurdity it is, then, to call this odious income tax an "emergency" tax in order to make it more palatable to the people.

The income tax is not required to pay the bonds recently issued, because it is impossible to pay them until they are due—thirty years from their issue.

That an income tax is not needed to meet the existing or accruing Treasury demands, is apparent not only because no income can be realized until next year, but because the other revenues already provided for in the bill will be ample.

The chairman of the Finance Committee, in his first speech in advocacy of the bill, admitted that the revenues provided for therein would realize substantially enough to meet the annual expenditures as estimated by Secretary Carlisle, without any income tax at all; and the chairman's own figures as to estimated revenues were shown to be erroneous to the extent of $3,092,732, which amount added to his figures would make $32,481,977 surplus including an income tax, and leaving $2,481,977 surplus without an income tax, the income tax being estimated at $30,000,000. Since the chairman's speech and since those estimates were made the duties in this bill have been largely increased, not, however, I assume beyond a revenue point, and if I am wrong in that particular I am ready to be corrected.

Mr. PEFFER. That is a violent construction.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Kansas says that is a violent construction; but for the purpose of the argument I propose to assume it. If I am wrong in that respect, I am ready, as I said, to be corrected. So much larger revenues are expected to be realized than Senator VOORHEES then admitted. What is the amount required for the expenditures of the Government for the next fiscal year?

Secretary Carlisle's estimate contained in his last annual report was that $448,306,789.93 would be sufficient, but this sum included $162,631,570 for pensions, and it has since been shown by later estimates, by a comparison with the pension expenditures for the past eleven months, and by the opinions of competent experts who study such matters, that the pension expenditures for the coming year will not exceed $135,000,000, especially under the reforms and economies which have been instituted in that Department.

Deducting therefore, the difference between the amount estimated last December, to wit, $162,631,570, and the lesser amount now shown to be required, to wit, $135,000,000, amounting to $27,631,570, from the total amount of governmental expenditures first above mentioned, viz, $448,306,789.93, leaves $420,775,219.93 as the correct amount for which revenues must be provided.

There is no dispute whatever as to the following estimated receipts, to wit:

Internal revenue (under existing laws)	$160,000,000
Postal (under existing laws)	84,427,766
Miscellaneous (under existing laws)	20,000,000
	264,427,766

Soon after this bill was first reported (complete) to the Senate the Treasury experts made and published an estimate of its anticipated revenues, which was as follows:

Customs (including $41,822,631.61 for sugar duties)	$163,361,000
Additional internal revenue to pending bill as follows:
Income tax	30,000,000
Spirits	20,000,000
Cards	3,000,000
	216,361,000
Add conceded receipts first above mentioned	264,427,766
Total	480,788,766
Since this estimate was made the sugar schedule has been rearranged and the duties somewhat increased, so that they are now estimated by the Finance Committee at $43,151,699.20, making an increase of $1,329,067.59 to be added	1,329,067
Final total	482,117,833
Deduct amount required for expenditures as above stated	420,775,219
Surplus	61,342,614
Deduct amount of proposed income tax	30,000,000
Remaining surplus	31,342,614

Was it the Democratic party which a few years ago was heard loudly declaiming against the danger of accumulating an enormous surplus in the Treasury of the United States? I think I heard some such argument repeatedly urged in the campaign of 1888.

There is no escaping the figures I have given. They show that there is no necessity whatever for an income tax in this measure, as ample revenues will be produced without it.

Who says to the contrary? What Treasury official, what member of the Finance Committee, what competent expert, what political economist has ventured to dispute these figures?

To this large surplus there should also be added the additional revenues sure to be realized under the increased duties placed in the bill during its passage in the Senate. Besides, the fact should not be forgotten that the estimated revenues are based upon the importations of the fiscal year 1892-'93, which was largely affected—especially the latter half of it—by the financial stringency, followed by the panic of that year, and hence it may fairly be assumed that under better business conditions, which all Democrats hope for and all the people may reasonably anticipate when the tariff question is disposed of, there will be larger importations received and greater revenues realized than have been estimated, and that a huge, or at least a very respectable surplus will soon be in our Treasury.

Mr. President, it has been difficult to fathom the motives of the Finance Committee in their insistence upon deferring their proposed duty upon sugar until January, 1895. The committee, it must be admitted, did not very successfully defend the propriety of their action. Their attitude has placed them in an awkward and unpleasant position, inviting much criticism which might better have been avoided.

Sir, can it be possible that their well-known anxiety to retain the income-tax provision in this bill has led them to postpone the date for the operation of the sugar tax in order that there might be created an apparent greater necessity for this income tax?

Any other explanation seems unreasonable. It is absolutely impossible under the present condition of this measure—with the duties which have been added to this bill—with the large sugar tax provided for, which is likely to produce a revenue much greater than has been estimated by anyone—to justify the retention of an income tax therein upon any theory that the Government needs the revenues.

Some other pretext, some other excuse, some other subterfuge must be invented.

THE EXEMPTIONS.

This measure exempts all incomes less than $4,000.

There is no precedent anywhere for an exemption of such an amount, and I have already expressed my views of the outrageous character of this provision and do not care to repeat them. The larger the exemption the more emphatically the bill becomes class legislation, utterly indefensible by fair-minded and intelligent men.

If there must be an income tax, it should be substantially uniform and consistent, and should tax all incomes or none at all. If any exemption is permitted, it should be a very small amount, corresponding in some degree with other tax exemptions or with exemptions on executions. There should be no favoritism, no discriminations, no privileged classes. If a tax upon industry, thrift, and earnings is defensible at all, then all exemptions are matters of governmental charity and must necessarily be very limited and reasonable.

Some of the zealous defenders of this tax do not seem to comprehend its nature or to realize why it is objectionable.

The New York World of yesterday appealed to the friends of the tax in Congress, asking them to "listen to reason," and urging that the exemption of $4,000 is too low instead of too high, and demanding an amendment raising it to $5,000.

The suggested amendment would make the bill worse instead of better. It would render it still more objectionable as class legislation, and restrict its operation to a fewer number of people. Its present discriminations are some of the potent objections to it now. The true doctrine is that all property should be taxed, or none at all; and likewise all incomes should be taxed, or none at all.

Mr. President, there is no sense or reason in this four-thousand-dollar exemption. It bears evidence upon its face that it was fixed at that amount in order that Congressional salaries might be reached just a trifle, and thereby to demonstrate the patriotism, unselfishness, and disinterestedness of Congress, and yet not seriously diminish those salaries. It is a cheap effort to obtain unworthy credit. It bears the stamp of demagogy, hypocrisy, and insufferable pretension.

If Congress in its consideration and treatment of this subject desires to be honest, manly, and consistent, let it fix the exemption, if any, at the reasonable sum of $1,000, and much criticism which now justly pertains to the measure will then be avoided.

The bill also exempts the salaries of all State, county, and municipal officers. This is a most important and sweeping provision, worthy of the most careful consideration. It creates at once a privileged and exempt class—the office-holding class—an immense army of people, usually receiving large salaries and earning them comparatively easily. Yet this immense number of people are not to share with their less fortunate neighbors in in bearing the public burden of this particular tax. If the exemption of this powerful and numerous class is a matter of discretion with Congress, it is needless to argue that it ought not to be granted, and it fitly illustrates the injustice of this bill.

And if on the other hand this exemption is not a subject upon which a discretion can be exercised, but is made necessary by constitutional requirements or inhibitions, then it illustrates the inherent imperfections and injustice of any Federal income tax.

I am sure the committee will not attempt to justify this provision upon any ground of its inherent propriety, but will fall back upon the plea that they were powerless to prevent it and insist that it must accompany any income tax which the Federal Government can enact. No man will attempt to sustain this provision except upon constitutional grounds. It is one of the most offensive features of this bill, because of its discriminations, because it exempts whole classes of people, no matter how rich they may be, how large their salaries, how easily they earn their incomes. Whom does it exempt?

The governor of New York, the mayor of New York City, the mayors of all our large cities, the judges of all our State courts, State, county, and municipal, our regular State officers, and every State, county, and municipal officer receiving a salary of $4,000 and over.

What is applicable to New York is applicable to every other State paying such salaries. And yet this bill is urged upon the ground that its object is to equalize taxation, to aid the poor, and to reach the rich.

Is this defect incident to any Federal income tax which we can enact? Let us see. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Collector vs. Day (11 Wallace, 113), held in December, 1870 (the case arising under the provisions of our then existing income-tax law), that it was not competent for Congress under the Constitution of the United States to impose a tax upon the salary of a judicial officer of a State.

It is significant that soon after this decision was announced the Federal income tax was repealed.

The case arose in Massachusetts, and the salary assessed was that of Judge Day, of the court of probate and insolvency for the county of Barnstable, Mass., the salary being fixed by law and payable out of the treasury of the State.

I have stated the question which was presented and actually decided, to wit, that the salary of a judicial officer of a State can not be affected or assessed under a Federal income tax.

The respect due that decision of the highest court of our land, of course justified and in fact compelled the authors of this measure to exempt judicial officers of a State. They found that this discrimination in favor of judicial State officers must be inherent in any Federal income-tax bill which can be devised. So far I make no complaint. But the authors of this bill have gone further and exempted not only judicial officers, but all other officers of the States, and not only of the States, but of the counties, and not only of the counties, but of municipalities.

They insist that they have not only exempted judicial officers because required so to do by the strict terms of the decision, but have exempted all others who, by the reasoning of the court, are entitled to the same exemption because they stand in the same situation.

The decision of the court, it must be confessed, is a very broad and sweeping one. It is true that the decision was not placed upon the narrow and technical ground that the officer was a judicial officer and therefore he was exempt, but upon the broad and general ground that he was a State officer, or rather upon the still broader ground that the officer was a part of the government of the State, and was one of the means or instrumentalities employed for carrying into effect some of the legitimate powers of the State government, and that therefore neither he nor his salary could be interfered with by taxation or otherwise on the part of the General Government.

The substance of the decision was that no instrumentality or means employed in any way by a State government to carry out its own reserved powers could be taxed or interfered with by the General Government.

It has already been previously held (Dobbins vs. Commissioners of Erie County, 16 Peters, 435) that it was not competent for the Legislature of a State to levy a tax upon the salary or emoluments of any officer of the United States.

It was deemed that the cases of McCulloch vs. Maryland (4th Wheaton, 316) and Weston vs. Charleston (2d Peters, 449) had settled the principle that "the State governments can not levy a tax upon the constitutional means employed by the Government of the Union to execute its constitutional powers;" and it was declared that what the State could not do to the General Government the General Government could not do to the States.

The case (11 Wallace, 113) is authority for the broad principle that the General Government and the States are separate and distinct sovereignties, although both existing within the same territorial limits, and that each acts independently of the other within their respective spheres; and that all means or instrumentalities created or employed by a State government to carry out its own reserved powers can not be interfered with by taxation or otherwise, but that all such means and instrumentalities must be left free and unimpaired.

The authors of this bill have rightly interpreted this sweeping decision—the most important in its consequences in matters of taxation that has ever been announced—but they do not go far enough—they do not carry out its reasoning to its legitimate result.

They have correctly interpreted the decision to exempt not only the salaries of judicial, but all other officers of a State, including all its divisions of authority, because these are parts of the State, embraced within the scheme of the State government; but they have not exempted the other means or instrumentalities which State governments have created to enable them better to carry out their functions, to wit, domestic corporations.

Take, for instance, a railroad corporation, which a State has chartered for the express purpose of developing a certain section of its territory, and it has provided that a certain portion of its earnings or a share of its dividends shall be paid to the State, for the general purposes of its government; will it be said, in view of this decision of the highest court of our country, that this same railroad can be compelled by means of a Federal income tax to surrender a portion of its earnings or dividends to the General Government, and thereby exclude the State government or diminish its revenues?

What the General Government can not do directly it should not be permitted to do indirectly. In New York, as well as in other States, municipalities and towns have been permitted to aid the construction of railroads by loaning them money, and have taken as security for such loans the bonds or stock of such railroads, and for the payment of which bonds or dividends upon stock the earnings of the railroads have been pledged by law or by contract; and now, can the General Government by means of an income tax step in and monopolize those earnings and exclude those towns and municipalities from their rightful participation in those revenues?

AN IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

Mr. President, this is a most important question, fraught with fearful consequences. In New York, as well as in many other States, certain stock corporations created by the State, such as railroads and transportation companies, gas companies, trust companies, certain insurance companies, electric and power companies, and divers other corporations, are either by the terms of their incorporation or by law required to pay, in addition to the ordinary direct taxes upon their property, certain special taxes upon their earnings, dividends, or business, sometimes called a franchise tax or by some other name, which taxes go directly to the support of the State government.

Mr. President, as a lawyer as well as a Senator, I contend that the General Government has no constitutional power by means of an income tax to reach or disturb any of the revenues of that class of corporations. It can not absorb them, diminish them, or destroy them. It may tax other corporations who simply pay ordinary taxes upon their real estate or capital stock, the same as citizens who own real estate or personalty, but these particular corporations must be regarded as a portion of the agencies, means, or instrumentalities of the State government, which are beyond the taxing power of any other authority.

Mr. HOAR. I do not rise, of course, to interrupt the Senator from New York. But I am quite sure he will pardon me for stating at this time that the doctrine which he is now advocating has been expressly asserted by the supreme court of Massachusetts more than once—by Chief Justice Shaw in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Temple, and by Chief Justice Gray in the case of Richardson vs. Sibley, and in the case of the Central Bank vs. The Worcester Street Railroad Company—that is, that railroads, whether street railroads or steam railroads, and by inference such corporations as gas companies and water companies, are mere instrumentalities of the Commonwealth, having the power of eminent domain committed to them, to be regulated in their charges by the Commonwealth, their tolls being merely a mode of paying them for the performance of a public function, just as the salary of a State officer is paid for the performance of a public function.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for the suggestion.

The State must be regarded as having set apart and appropriated to itself, for its own purposes of administration, the revenues of these corporations, and no other power can lawfully interfere with them.

If this bill shall pass in its present shape, what a spectacle will be presented! The Federal and State governments each reaching out for a portion of the earnings or incomes of these corporations! Which is to have the preference? If the incomes earned only amount to a sum sufficient to pay 1 per cent, which sovereignty is to take it—the State or the nation?

The lawful right and power to tax largely involves the power to destroy. Can the General Government lawfully destroy these agencies or instrumentalities of the State—these corporations which virtually constitute a part of its State system of government, a part of its scheme of administration, a part of its financial system?

If it can tax them by usurping their earnings, it can virtually destroy them. It can seriously cripple the State.

The principle involved here is the principle of State rights. The policy involved is the policy of self-preservation—preservation against the aggrandizements of the General Government.

Federalists may approve an income tax—Democrats can not. It violates our notions of State sovereignty. It offends our sense of fairness. It belittles the States. It is a long step toward centralization.

Judge Bradley, in his dissenting opinion in the Day case (11 Wallace, 129), anticipated the far-reaching results of that decision. He saw the very difficulties which we are now encountering; he apprehended the very point which I am now making. He said, with almost prophetic vision:

> In my judgment, the limitation of the power of taxation in the General Government which the present decision establishes will be found very difficult of control. Where are we to stop in enumerating the functions of the State governments which will be interfered with by Federal taxation? If a State incorporates a railroad to carry out its purposes of internal improvement, or a bank to aid its financial arrangement, reserving perhaps a percentage on the stock or profits for the supply of its own treasury, will the bonds or stock of such an institution be free from Federal taxation? How can we tell what the effect of this decision will be?

Mr. President, there will necessarily ensue a conflict between the State and Federal Government in the effort to secure revenue from the corporations which I have named. One-fifth of the railroad mileage of the whole country is now in the hands of receivers, and three-fifths more may follow if this bill becomes a law in its present shape. These railroads can not bear the burden of this double taxation—either the State or the General Government will suffer. In the State of Pennsylvania, as I am advised, the corporations pay all the taxes required for the support of the State Government. Can they stand an increase of 2 per cent more to the General Government, based upon their net earnings, but allowing them to deduct nothing for fixed charges, such as interest upon their bonded debt, or for extraordinary expenses.

AN EXTRAORDINARY PROVISION.

In this connection permit me to observe that the Vest amendment, which is proposed to be incorporated in the bill, proposes that this 2 per cent tax shall be imposed upon the net earnings of corporations "above ordinary working or operating expenses." This provision allows nothing to be deducted for fixed charges, interest, or bonded debt, extraordinary expenditures incurred by reason of fire, accidents, or otherwise.

It is a most extraordinary provision, which could not be justified even in a time of war. It will cripple, embarrass, and throw into receiverships hundreds of corporations now struggling for existence.

It is cruel and wrong, because it is unnecessary. It is not a tax upon "incomes," because incomes in the proper sense of the word, when used in a tax or financial bill, means profits over and above all legitimate expenses; it is not a tax, it is a usurpation of revenues; it is official spoliation; it is virtual robbery under the form of law.

These exemptions to which I have referred, those already included in the bill and those which are necessary to be included to render it constitutional, demonstrate the unwisdom, the impracticability, and danger of this income-tax scheme.

The very numerous exemptions which are inherent to it make it class legislation. Do you expect to make this bill popular with the people, when they come to understand that the great army of officeholders are exempt from its provisions; when a vast number of corporations can not constitutionally be reached by it; when unscrupulous business men can easily evade it; when it offers temptations to perjury and fraud; when its results will be disappointing; and when at best it is doubtful whether it will not be held to be a direct tax, made upon a wrong basis, and therefore unconstitutional?

UNSATISFACTORY RESULTS.

It is difficult to estimate what revenues this income tax alone will bring into the Treasury. I have contented myself with accepting, for the purposes of the argument, the estimates of the Government officials, who fixed the amount at $30,000,000, one-third of which is expected to be paid by the State of New York.

Much depends upon the execution of the law, upon the conditions of trade, the prosperity of the country, and the honesty of those who are compelled to yield to its inquisitions. It may realize $60,000,000; it may not exceed or even reach $30,000,000.

Considering the growth of the country, its increase in wealth since the repeal of the former law, private (but not official) experts whom I have consulted estimate that if there were no corporate or official exemptions every 1 per cent assessment ought to realize $30,000,000. But human nature is the same the world over, and oppressive or unpopular laws are usually easily evaded or frustrated where whole communities are reluctant to have them enforced. The experience of other countries and of some of the States reveals a bad situation and has produced unsatisfactory results. If that experience shall be repeated under the proposed law the revenues realized will be disappointing to the country, and the odium of the failure of the law will attach to the party that enacted it.

I have recently received a letter from that distinguished political economist, Hon. David A. Wells, of Connecticut, giving the results of the enforcement of the Massachusetts State income law in the city of Boston. Mr. Wells's views and statements are always interesting and reliable, and his letter upon this particular point which I am discussing is very timely. I will read it:

NORWICH, CONN.

SIR: I desire to ask your attention to the recent experience of the city of Boston in attempting to collect an income tax, which ought to be especially interesting and instructive at the present time, inasmuch as it affords a practical demonstration, first, of the inexpediency of the enactment of any tax which creates extraordinary opportunities and temptations for fraud and evasion; and second, of the utter impracticability of successfully administering, under a popular form of government, any form of tax like that which Congress now proposes to assess upon incomes, which any considerable portion of the people regard as unjust, arbitrary, and unnecessary.

Few States in the Union have a more illiberal, all-prevading system of taxation than Massachusetts, and in no State is the administration of tax laws more stringent and arbitrary. In respect to an income tax which is made applicable to incomes derived from property concurrently subjected to taxation, the methods of administration as exemplified in the city of Boston are as follows: Taxpayers are required to make a return annually and in detail of all their income subject to taxation, and blanks are officially furnished to citizens for such purpose. If no return is made—and few returns are made—then the board of assessors meet in secret in an upper room of the city hall, known as the "dooming chamber," and arbitrarily determine the amount of income for which each delinquent shall be assessed; and from such determination there is practically no appeal.

The amount thus assessed for income to the individual is then "lumped in" with the aggregate of his other taxes, and if a dissatisfied taxpayer wishes to discover what amount has been decided upon as his income, the assessors will not afford him any information. Under such circumstances it might naturally be supposed that the administration of an income tax in the city of Boston would be an unqualified success. But what are the facts?

The tax rate in Boston for 1892 was $12.80 per thousand, and the amount returned as actually collected in that year from all taxes was $10,782,240. The amount collected from the income tax is not specifically returned; the amount assessed for income to the individual income-tax payer being included in "the aggregate of his other taxes."

But it is understood that the assessors' estimate of the income subject to taxation in the city of Boston for the above year, arrived at by the "doomage" process, was $4,237,029, or 2 per cent on the whole amount of the personal property made subject to taxation; an absurd estimate, inasmuch as the personal property assessed for taxation was probably less than 50 per cent of a true valuation. But be this as it may, the amount of revenue that accrued to the city from the tax on the incomes of its citizens for 1892 was probably not in excess of $55,000. Well recognized local authorities on this subject further state that no one familiar with the facts believes that the amount of income returned for the purpose of taxation in the city of Boston is in excess of one-tenth of what would be taxable under the existing law if the assessors could discover it. And this is practically the tax experience that it is now proposed that the Federal Government shall make operative over the whole country.

If anyone thinks that this extraordinary tax experience is limited to one section of the country, he would do well to acquaint himself with the recent results of the State of Ohio in attempting to tax money on deposit. Ohio has even a more efficient and minute scheme of taxing all classes of property than Massachusetts. Not only is every citizen bound under oath to make a complete return of his property, but the law in addition empowers each county in the State to contract with certain so-called "tax inquisitors" for the payment of 20 per cent of all taxes collected through their agency on previously unassessed property.

How successful this scheme has been in collecting taxes on money on deposit is shown by the fact, revealed in a recent report of the State board of tax commissioners, that while the amount of money on deposit in the State, national, and private banks of Ohio in 1892, and subject to State taxation, was at least $190,000,000, the amount actually returned for taxation in the whole State during that same year was but a little over $32,000,000. There is a remark that has almost assumed the character of a proverb, that a text suitable to and illustrative of every situation may be found in the Bible. The text that is most applicable, and which ought to be full of instruction to every Congressional advocate of the enactment of an income tax by the Federal Government in time of peace, will be found in the sixth chapter of the First Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, where the Apostle, as if he had the existing situation in view, remarks: "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient."

Very respectfully yours,

DAVID A. WELLS.

To Hon. DAVID B. HILL, United States Senate.

THE FIVE YEARS' LIMITATION.

But it is said that the policy of making this tax a part of the permanent financial policy of the Government has been abandoned in the Vest amendments and that this tax is now to be imposed for five years only. The amendment mitigates the wrong but little. It is another miserable compromise between principle and policy, in which principle as usual is sacrificed. This tax is either right or wrong, either justifiable or unjustifiable. If right, it should be adopted as a permanent policy of the Government; if wrong, it should not be enacted at all, even for a single year, much less for five years.

How can Senators who have honestly and earnestly opposed an income tax because they have regarded it absolutely and radically vicious in principle, accept it for five years? Why accept it at all? What party emergency demands it? Has the Democratic party become so lukewarm or disloyal towards tariff reform that it will refuse to pass a tariff-reform bill unless it contains an income tax? But it is urged that the object of the five years provision is that the law may be thoroughly tested, and if it proves unsatisfactory it may be repealed.

The law can be just as easily repealed whether the provision for an income tax is permanent or temporary. No law which is unjust and unreasonable should be enacted, even though the power of repeal always exists.

This is a discriminating, a sectional, a communistic tax; it checks enterprise and energy; it retards progress; it oppresses the honest citizen who will tell the truth as to his resources, and it will give the advantage to the sharper who will prevaricate; it is a tax aimed at one section of the country for the alleged benefit of another; and such a tax should not disgrace the statute books either permanently, for five years, or for a single moment.

This is no time to yield honest convictions in order to make dangerous experiments in revenue legislation, in the vain effort to satisfy a discontented class who always want a grievance, and who will clamor against your Government and your Administration and against property and against riches, just as loudly and persistently after this sop shall have been thrown to them as before.

The argument that every bad law should have a fair trial to determine whether it will prove acceptable to the people is a vicious one, because the tendency of such action is to encourage every scheme of a doubtful character. The recognition of one paves the way for the recognition of another.

SAVINGS BANKS.

In their mad haste to attack the rich the champions of an income tax either intentionally or inadvertently assailed the poor.

Until the amendments relating to savings banks were offered yesterday in the Senate, the programme of the majority here seemed to be to place such institutions on substantially the same level with business corporations, and to subject them to the 2 per cent tax. If there was any other intention it was not apparent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say to the Senator that the exemptions as applied to savings banks only relieve a limited number of those institutions.

Mr. HILL. I was going to say that I have not had time to examine those new amendments, which are for the first time printed and placed upon our desks this morning, to determine whether they contain an absolute exemption of mutual savings banks or not, but from hearing them hastily read at the Secretary's desk yesterday, I fear that they are not sufficiently broad to accomplish that purpose.

They should be made so plain and clear that there can remain no possible doubt of their intention. Argument ought not to be necessary to sustain the proposition that mutual savings banks should be absolutely exempt from any income taxation.

They represent the savings of the poor; they are not established for ordinary business purposes; the earnings—aside from those necessary for legitimate expenses—belong to the depositors, and are paid to them from time to time in the shape of interest or dividends; they ordinarily have no capital stock, and the managers are simply the agents or trustees of the depositors.

Any tax upon these institutions, directly or indirectly, would be a hardship; and a tax of 2 per cent would cause a reduction of fully one-half of their income on small savings.

There are 649 mutual savings banks in the United States, of which 454 are in the Eastern States, 183 in the Middle States, 10 in the Western States, and 2 in the Southern States. The total amount of their deposits is $1,550,820,403, the number of their depositors is 4,290,712, and the average deposit is $361.43. Two hundred and ninety-six thousand seven hundred and three depositors have less than $1,000 each.

The savings banks in the West and South (except those before mentioned) are planned on money-making lines, have a broader investment scope, and have capital stock upon which dividends are paid to the owners, and of course they are upon the same plane with other stock corporations, and are not claiming exemption.

This Government can not afford to permit the savings of the poor to be taxed through a Federal income tax. It would be the crowning infamy of this bill.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The same excellent reasons why mutual savings banks should be exempted from this tax apply with full force to mutual life insurance companies. Until the new amendments of yesterday were offered it was reasonably clear that it was the intention not to exempt this class of institutions, and I am not certain that the amendments have changed that purpose. I have not yet had an opportunity this morning to carefully examine them. Let me submit a few observations upon the general subject, suggested to me after consultation by those who have given it a special study.

Life insurance, when conducted as a business for gain, has no more claim than any other business to exemption from taxation. If the dividends and profits of other corporations are subjected to an income tax, it is admitted that the dividends and profits obtained from capital invested in the business of life insurance should be subjected to the same tax. There are corporations in the United States with considerable capital which earn dividends by conducting the life insurance business, and no one asks for any exemption of the profits of such companies.

But life insurance by the head of a family for the protection of his family ought not to be taxed. This is a fundamental principle of public economy and public policy which has not been directly questioned by any high authority. In Great Britain, the original home of both life insurance and of the income tax, an express provision of law has always exempted from the income tax moneys paid by policy-holders in premiums for the insurance of their lives, and such moneys are deducted by them up to the sixth part of their profits and gains in their returns from the amount of income held to be taxable.

In the United States the original income-tax law provided for the exemption of the return premiums of life insurance companies conducted on the mutual principle, and successive amendments perfected this policy until, in the law of 1870, it was expressly provided that nothing contained in the sections imposing an income tax should be applicable to any moneys paid by mutual life insurance companies to their policy-holders.

An attempt having been made by the revenue authorities, in spite of this exemption, to tax as profits the undistributed sums added to the contingent funds of life and health insurance companies, a special resolution entitled "a resolution to determine the construction of an act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, was passed by both Houses and approved July 13, 1870, providing that no such tax should be imposed on any undistributable sum added to the contingent fund of any such company.

The reason of this exemption is obvious. When two men agree together that whichever of them shall first die the other will take care of his family, they form a mutual life insurance company. When one hundred thousand men make the same agreement, specifying the precise extent and manner in which the survivors shall take care of the families of those who die prematurely, the principle is the same. All the machinery of organization, collection of premiums, payment of so-called dividends or return premiums and of policies at maturity, are but the necessary incidents in order that the general plan may be carried out scientifically and effectually.

It still remains true in every such case that the amount paid for insurance is an expenditure. It is a burden assumed at present in order to avert the risk of a greater burden hereafter. It is a sacrifice made at this time to prevent indigence and misery hereafter. There is no profit in it in any case. The amounts paid by the company to policy holders in the end are but the accumulations of the amounts which they have received from policy holders in premiums. Statesmen, therefore, and political economists have wisely preferred to encourage rather than to tax the operations of such companies.

As I understand it, all that is asked in behalf of the two millions of heads of families throughout the country who have paid to such institutions a part of their savings and have pledged to them another portion, for the prevention of pauperism and the protection of their families in the future, is that the principle declared by Congress in the resolution of July 13, 1870, should be clearly embodied in the law now to be passed.

It should be remembered that the effect of the proposed income tax upon life insurance will be a serious burden even if the exemptions which are asked for are granted without qualification. The funds held in trust for policy holders by life insurance companies can only be accumulated for their benefit by being invested, and they are largely invested in the stocks and obligations of other companies doing business for profit in the United States. By taxing the dividends and profits of such companies the income of life insurance companies is diminished, and they are compelled thus to pay indirectly a large amount into the Treasury of the United States.

It should also be added that the language of section 55 of the House bill (H. R. 4864) might be so interpreted as to require the beneficiaries under a matured policy of life insurance to pay the tax upon the whole amount of the policy. But it is not believed that it is the intention of Congress to levy a specific tax upon the sums as provided for the support of widows and orphans. It is the policy of a wise statesmanship to encourage a business upon which society must largely rely for its own protection against the evils of pauperism.

OTHER OBJECTIONS.

I need not reiterate the numerous other objections to this tax which were pointed out and commented upon in my previous address. Its inquisitorial features were discussed, the annoyances to which it subjected business men were arrayed, the inevitable exposure of their private affairs, notwithstanding its weak guaranties for secrecy, was made manifest; the dangerous powers with which it invested political officials were noted; its liability to abuse was commented upon; and its elements of injustice and inequality were mentioned in detail. These objections have not been removed by any amendments which have yet been offered. They can not well be eliminated, because they are inherent in any income tax bill.

But why detain the Senate with argument, with facts, with figures, with precedents, with illustrations?

It is well understood that Senators—I trust not a majority, however—intend to vote upon this question not according to their convictions but according to the decree of a party caucus. I trust that the humiliating spectacle will never be witnessed. It is even said—aye, boasted—by some, that this income-tax feature is the best and most popular provision of this measure. If that be so, if this feature is really the most meritorious provision of this bill, I can only exclaim in the emphatic language of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], "Then God help the Democratic party."

INCOME TAX VS. TARIFF REFORM.

Mr. President, we have listened day after day to the apologies which have been offered by the Finance Committee through the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] for the numerous changes which have daily been made in the bill during its progress through the Senate.

It has indeed had a hard road to travel. We have been assured that these changes—"concessions," as they have been politely termed—were extorted from an unwilling committee who want the country to understand that they only yielded under protest and against their better judgment. The bill, therefore, in its present shape does not seem to be satisfactory to them nor to anyone.

I but express the general judgment when I assert that the country was surprised at many of these changes. The people did not seem to expect any taxes to be imposed upon the necessaries of life. They did not expect a Democratic Congress to tax raw materials. They did not expect to see some of the McKinley duties increased. They have been disappointed and are cast down. They desire an explanation of all this, not simply a plausible and ingenious one, but the true one.

The secret of all these changes is—and the country should understand it—that there was serious and determined opposition to an income tax being retained in this bill, where of right it ought not to have been. But the Finance Committee above all things desired its retention. It was their pet scheme. The subcommittee, representing the great States of Arkansas, Missouri, and Texas, wanted it because their section desired it—because they were committed to it, not as Democrats, because it is not a Democratic principle, but as individuals—as representing the supposed interests of their people. They could yield everything except the income tax.

Hence it was retained, and the various changes which have been assented to were influenced by the important consideration that thereby the bill would be enabled to pass with an income tax as a part of it. Votes for an income tax in some form, either permanently or temporarily, had to be secured.

TARIFF REFORM SACRIFICED

It seems to have been regarded as more important that there should be a victory for an income tax than for tariff reform. Hence tariff reform has been sacrificed in the house of its supposed friends. Democratic principles have been bartered away for Populistic principles.

There has never been an hour when a genuine tariff-reform bill, based upon Democratic principles and framed within strict revenue lines, could not have passed this Senate, provided it had contained no income tax. Who would have refused to vote for such a measure? What Democratic Senator would have been so recreant to his party and to his principles? No one can name him. But the retention of an income tax was intensely desired, was greatly preferred; it was the ultimatum presented, and hence Populistic votes were preferred to Democratic votes. This is the "true statement," and the country is entitled to it.

Mr. President, it is immaterial to me personally whether my views upon this subject shall prevail. I am getting used to defeat in this Senate, and another one is a matter of supreme personal indifference to me.

I feel not for myself, but for my party, which I desire to preserve from the disintegration which threatens it by the unwise and destructive legislation here proposed.

Born of a Democratic ancestry, reared under Democratic teachings, a public life devoted to building up and strengthening the party whose principles I have always zealously espoused, my interests, my sympathies, my hopes, and my aspirations are all within party lines.

I believe that a most serious mistake is liable to be committed in the course which, it is said, the majority here now contemplate; a mistake which may prove fatal to Democratic success for many years to come; a mistake which fritters away all for which we have struggled in the long years past; a mistake upon the very threshold of our advent to power; a mistake which will forfeit the confidence of the people; and so believing, I should be false to my country, false to my party, and false to myself if I did not raise my warning voice and express to my fellow-Democratic Senators, with whom I reluctantly differ, and to the country at large, my conscientious and matured convictions upon this most important subject in this great crisis of our country's and our party's history. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will exclude from the galleries those who violate the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, after the very able and exhaustive speech of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] there seems to be little left to be said as showing sufficient reason for the defeat of the pending bill. I am led, however, to present some views upon it, in part, because of a resolution which was passed by the Board of Trade of the city of Wilmington, in my State, in the following words:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this board that the amendment to the Wilson bill, called the income tax, is contrary to the best interests of the country and undemocratic, and the board especially requests you to use your influence to prevent its passage.

The resolution is addressed to the Senators from Delaware. The members of this board are of both political parties. It is a nonpartisan commercial organization, intended to promote the public good, and the resolution is fully expressive of the opinion and sense of the locality in which the members of the board reside.

It seems to me that almost all the reasons against an income tax may be summed up in a few words. The provision is unnecessary and unavailing to accomplish anything that its proposers intend. I wish to call the attention of the Senate especially to the fact, already dwelt upon with great force by the Senator from New York, that it will be no relief to the taxpayers of the country in respect to the burdens which weigh most severely and harshly upon them. The farmers, the merchants, the mechanics, the laborers, the owners of land, whether in large or small quantities, will find no relief in an income tax from those taxes which are hardest for them, year in and year out, to pay.

The taxes which are the hardest to pay are those imposed under the State governments which are summed up under either State, county, town, city, or municipal taxation. They include all of that large domain of taxation which, under our dual system of government, is remitted to the States and with which the Federal Government has nothing whatever to do. They include roads, causeways and bridges, schools, courts, juries and witnesses, jails and penitentiaries, and police, in the rural communities, while in cities there are included the broad domain of water supply, streets, sewers, schools, police, and in both classes interest upon the public debt. All of those subjects belong to the States and the minor political organizations under the States. The Federal Government has nothing whatever to do with them. As all of us know, they constitute a body of taxation very onerous and very hard to bear, and yet most imperative and necessary in the conduct of our affairs.

Take, for instance, the subject of a road tax. Everybody knows from his own experience how heavy the road tax is, and yet how important a tax it is. We have had only recently a further manifestation of interest on what is known as the subject of good roads, largely promoted by the wheelmen and cyclists of the country, an opportunity in which this Republic, boasting so much of its civilization, is very far behind the effete monarchies of the Old World. We know that there are in this country hardly any good roads. There are more in New Jersey possibly than in any other State.

The great difficulty that stands in the face of every promoter of good roads is, where will you raise the money; how can you increase the burden of taxation; how can you hope that the people of the city, or the county, or the township, or the municipality will be willing to pay the money by taxation that is necessary to support this burden?

Possibly Europe has been able to expend so much money upon roads and have its roads so good because it has not been called upon to pay so much for schools. America has disregarded the roads in the interest of schools. We have everywhere the common schools, and now over almost the whole country schools are graded from the lowest primary up to the ultimate high school, all under superintendents of education, State, county, or city, with teachers who are put in training and required to come up to a certain standard of attainment to fit them for teaching, all involving an expensive establishment, and it is a very large expense.

To that has to be added the important element of new schoolhouses. Take a growing city like the city of Wilmington, which passed this protest against the income tax. It has had to provide for the needs of schoolhouses for a continually increasing population. To build schoolhouses necessarily carries with it very large taxation. So, if you take causeways, bridges, courts, juries, witnesses, jails, penitentiaries, and the constabulary of the country, you have a very large and continuing and steady burden of taxation.

But it is when you come to the municipality that this burden becomes the greatest. Take the water supply of our cities. In the city of Washington to-day there is the vilest of dirty water in use because the aqueduct which it was attempted to construct a few years ago was built by fraudulent contractors and feeble engineers; and to-day Congress is unwilling to put upon the citizens of the District of Columbia the burden of a tax that will give to the District and city clear, good water by the building of proper aqueducts and reservoirs.

No more important matter faces our municipalities than the construction of sewers, and all the great expense is involved in the construction of sewers to save our people from what Horace, in his ode, called the "cohort of fevers," that rise from a lack of proper sewerage, the cost of which is very great, even when the money is properly expended.

The police of a city is a very large charge, and so is the interest upon the debt, whether State, county, or municipal. The enormous magnitude of the debts of those States from whom come particularly the demand for an income tax was presented by the Senator from New York in portentous fashion in his remarks this morning.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to summarize in this way what every citizen in this country knows in his own experience as to the extent of the domain of the States, the cities, the towns, the townships, and the counties in the management of affairs under our system.

I know that in my own county the tax which falls upon its people in the rural districts amounts to as much per annum as 50 cents upon the hundred dollars. In the city of Wilmington, where I reside, it amounts to $1.50 upon the hundred dollars, and the combined county and municipal taxes to the residents of that city amount to 2 per cent upon the hundred dollars upon a a full valuation, and that is the tremendous burden which can not be escaped.

When wheat goes down and corn goes down, and nothing is to be had for berries and nothing to be had for peaches, the price that the farmer gets for his produce falls, but the taxes remain and stand there and hold the people of this country, as in a straitjacket, with an iron grasp.

Mr. President, if this income tax were to relieve the people of the United States in city and in country from this burden, there would be strong support of it throughout the land; the farmers would be glad to be relieved from the incident of this heavy taxation. They have been striving to be relieved from it.

In the New England States great shrewdness and acuteness have been exercised in their legislation to reach by taxation all sorts of personal property and the investments of those who are wealthy and have their wealth invested in, so to speak, personal property. It is one of the difficult matters how to reach it. When such taxation is put upon the people of a State, men move out of the State to escape the burdens of that taxation and go elsewhere. I know that in Delaware a commission has been appointed with a view of readjusting the burden of taxation so that it shall not fall so heavily upon the people of the country, but, by possibility, may fall more upon the men of wealth in the cities.

This income tax, Mr. President, is projected with a like idea, but it will not help one iota the burden of the taxpayer in the States, or counties, or cities. It is only a question of the readjustment of Federal taxation, and in no respect touches the question of the readjustment of the taxation that falls under the domain of the States in our system. No citizen of the United States need think that he will escape the coming of the State, or county, or city taxgatherer by the passage of the income tax.

Mr. President, it is equally unnecessary as a source of Federal taxation, because the Federal Government has other sources of revenue both ample and appropriate for its needs. The General Government has a monopoly of customs and excises. The States are denied the customs absolutely, and excises largely. In time of peace customs and excises furnish a revenue not only equal to the public needs, but largely in excess of them. In customs and excises the Federal Government is in possession of a great and easy source for the raising of revenue. As I took occasion to express it in some remarks that I had the honor to submit to the Senate upon the education bill in the Fifty-first Congress, the Federal Government in time of peace has a maximum of revenues and a minimum of duties; while the States and the municipalities under it have a minimum of revenues and of sources of revenue, and a maximum of duties.

No one recognized this more than the founders of Democracy, and the Senator from New York is fully justified in arraigning his party associates upon this floor this morning in going back upon every principle of his party, and upon principles never more clearly announced than by the founder of the Democratic party. When Mr. Jefferson came to pronounce his second inaugural, after he had been reëlected by an almost overwhelming majority of the electoral college and the people of the United States, he had occasion to deal with a state of affairs that brought out an utterance that bears upon this subject. The debt of the Revolutionary war had nearly been paid off. He was looking forward to a time of continuing and undisturbed peace. All the conflicts which were to grow out of the Napoleonic warfare were then wrapped in the womb of the future. Mr. Jefferson supposed, therefore, that he was dealing with a condition of excess of Federal revenue. He said:

> The remaining revenue on the consumption of foreign articles is paid cheerfully by those who can afford to add foreign luxuries to domestic comforts, being collected on our seaboards and frontiers only, and incorporated with the transactions of our merchantile citizens, it may be the pleasure and pride of an American to ask what farmer, what mechanic, what laborer, ever sees a taxgatherer of the United States?

It now becomes an issue with the Democratic party to have the face of the Federal taxgatherer known to a great many people who are to-day not troubled with him at all.

> These contributions enable us to support the current expenses of the Government, to fulfill contracts with foreign nations, to extinguish the native right of soil within our limits, to extend those limits, and to apply such a surplus to our public debts as places at a short day their final redemtion, and that redemption once effected, the revenue thereby liberated may, by a just repartition among the States and a corresponding amendment of the Constitution, be applied, in time of peace, to rivers, canals, roads, arts, manufactures, education, and other great objects within each State.
> In time of war, if injustice by ourselves or others must sometimes produce war, increased as the same revenue will be increased by population and consumption, and aided by other resources reserved for that crisis, it may meet within the year all the expenses of the year, without encroaching on the rights of future generations by burdening them with the debts of the past. War will then be but a suspension of useful works, and a return to a state of peace, a return to the progress of improvement.

It has never been our fortune, Mr. President, but for a short time, to realize the anticipation of Mr. Jefferson. There was a period when, in the Administration of President Jackson, there was such a surplus in the Treasury of the United States that it had to be divided among the States. The reduction of the revenue by the tariff of 1833, the tariff of 1846, and the tariff of 1857 carried us, with constantly reducing revenues, to the time of the war of the rebellion, and since that we have had enough to do to meet the public debt. But the great fact still remains that there has been, and is to-day, absolutely no necessity for an income tax to meet the exigencies of Federal expenditures.

It is not necessary, Mr. President, to deal in any great volume or body of figures; it is enough to know that this generation has paid off almost entirely the public debt incurred during the war. That debt reached its maximum upon the 31st of August, 1865, when it amounted to $2,381,530,294.96. By the last statement of the Treasury the interest-bearing debt has been reduced to the sum of $635,041,840, of which $50,000,000 constitutes an increase under this Democratic debt-paying Administration.

Mr. PLATT. Debt-contracting.

Mr. HIGGINS. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut—debt-contracting Administration.

Mr. President, we have been the wonder, the envy, and the despair of the world. This Republic, with no monarch, no king, no imperial authority, living under the broadest of individual liberty in a widely extended confederation, has been the one power amongst all mankind that was equal to the task of reducing a vast public debt. The only criticism which has been made upon it is that it was done too rapidly for the public good, that we took too great a burden upon the generation which contracted the debt and that we should leave more for posterity, that it was well to have this debt continue as a basis for the circulation of notes and currency by our national banks.

During all of that time since the war—the income tax was repealed in 1870 or 1871—who has been saying that we needed to to reënact the income tax in order to raise revenue to pay the public debt? Nobody. We paid it despite the repeal of the income tax. It was put on us as a war tax, and under the criticism of the Democratic party as a war tax it was repealed; and the whole amount of this great burden discharged by the American people in the period which has elapsed since the beginning of the war, when this debt began to be incurred, the whole amount that was raised under the income tax was $346,967,388.12.

But, Mr. President, when you consider the magnitude of the obligations that have been discharged by other sources of Federal taxation, customs and excise, you must remember not merely the principal of the public debt, but its interest. You must bear in mind a sum which I wish I had with me—it is attainable, however—on account of claims and other indebtedness not included in the public debt eo nomine which has been discharged since the beginning of the war. In that is the great burden of pensions, which in the last year reached over $150,000,000. This load the nation has taken on its back and has proudly walked off with it, scarcely feeling its weight, because it could draw upon the exhaustless reservoir of customs and go to the full extent of excises or internal-revenue taxation that wise policy could dictate. Upon what plea of necessity, then, are we brought to an income tax when you have such sources of revenue?

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

Mr. HIGGINS. With great pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I should be glad if the Senator would tell us what was the amount of the revenue and expenses for the year 1893, when the conditions most of the time were supposed to be normal. How much surplus were we supposed to have?

Mr. PLATT. About $2,000,000.

Mr. HIGGINS. I wish that I had anticipated the question of the Senator from Colorado and had the figures.

Mr. TELLER. I will give the Senator from Delaware the figures, as he was treating the subject as if we had a large amount of revenue to go upon.

Mr. HIGGINS. I shall be obliged to the Senator from Colorado if he will kindly give the figures.

Mr. PLATT. I said from my seat about $2,000,000. My recollection is that the actual receipts exceeded the actual expenditures by about $2,000,000. I may be mistaken, however.

Mr. TELLER. The total revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1893 were $461,716,561.94, and the total expenditures were $459,374,887.68, leaving the magnificent surplus of $2,341,674.26. It seems to me, with all due regard to the Senator's statement, that we were near a deficiency in 1893.

Mr. HIGGINS. I should like now to ask the Senator if he can not give us the figures for 1892.

Mr. TELLER. I could do so in a moment, but the surplus for 1892 was a very small one, as the Senator must recollect. It can not be contended now that the approaching deficiency in 1893 was the result of bad times, because the year 1893 ends with the 30th of June of last year, and I suggest to the Senator that under existing circumstances there has been a deficiency of nearly $80,000,000 since that time for 1894.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

Mr. HIGGINS. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. I have paid some attention to this matter, and while it is true that if the expenditures and receipts of the last half of the year had been upon the same ratio as those of the first half of the year we should not have had a large surplus, yet we should have had a great deal more than $2,000,000.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado for directing my attention in a channel which I had intended to take hereafter, but it logically comes up at this time. Before undertaking to deal with 1893, I beg to remind him, and to call attention generally to the fact that this problem did not arise then. It was presented to the people of the United States in a way which has had grave consequences following therefrom, which has challenged the attention of the country, which has invoked the most momentous political conflict since the war, which has carried the Democratic party into a majority in this Chamber, and which is coming now to its decision by the people of the country, first in the pending tariff bill, and then what the people will say about the bill when they come to vote on it.

President Cleveland in his message in 1887 called the attention of Congress to what he said was not a theory, but a condition, a phrase which has stuck in the minds of the people. That condition was a surplus with which he had to deal, the product of laws made by the Republican party which he and the Democratic House of Representatives were unable to repeal because they had not control of the Senate. Those laws furnished a part of the ample surplus which then overburdened the Treasury after paying off the debt at the rate of $100,000,000 a year, which was the annual discharge of our debt for so many years. It was a payment which we expected as much as the breakfast when we rise in the morning.

That challenge, cast down by President Cleveland, was met by the Republican party in the campaign of 1888 and resulted in the decisive Republican victory and Democratic defeat all along the line; and when the Republican party came to deal with the problem in 1889 and 1890 in the McKinley bill, they undertook to remove the condition and to reduce the surplus, and they began by taking fifty or sixty million dollars of taxes off of sugar at one blow. No; I will not say a blow; it was the opposite of a blow. They took off the shoulders of the people of this country per capita the burden of the sugar tax which weighed upon every man, woman, and child who used sugar. They relieved them from that amount of taxation. They largely enlarged the free list, and that was their answer to the criticism that their existing laws produced too much revenue.

Mr. President, it was quite uncertain at that time where the great step of the removal of the duties from sugar would carry us. It might possibly produce a deficiency, and it came very near it in 1893, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has pointed out, when it made a surplus of only $2,300,000, in round numbers. Enough is as good as a feast, but if it had produced a deficiency and the Republicans had remained in the control of the Government, we could easily have added taxation in some respect to have eked out the revenue without resorting to an income tax.

We need not have raised so much as to pay off $100,000,000 of debt a year, but we could have continued in that unbroken career of wise legislation and administration and national prosperity to which we beg, in the language of the day, to point with pride. Not until the threat of Democratic control of this Government came before the financiers and the people of this country and the world over did our revenues begin to go down and peril thrust its horrid front before us.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it did not begin with the election of the President. That was not enough. There are many conservative elements in Mr. Cleveland's repertoire of principle, shifting though at times, and elastic, evanescent, kaleidoscopic though it may be. It was not until it became apparent that the Democratic party would have a majority in the Senate that a cold chill ran down the backs of everybody; gold began to flow out, and President Harrison and Secretary Foster began to clew down their sails for a storm. They had the bonds printed and prepared to issue, if need be, to maintain the gold reserve. They did not issue the bonds. President Harrison, conservative and wise as he always was, felt his way along and said, "I shall initiate no policy which I can avoid pending the advent of Mr. Cleveland and his Administration," and the whole legacy was left for them.

I take advantage of this opportunity to state what I failed to say last summer upon the bill for the repeal of the silver-purchase law, my profound confidence that if this Administration had promptly issued those bonds and got gold to support the reserve, we should have escaped the panic of such disastrous consequences to the country, or at least we should have largely reduced and mitigated its effects. But the President of the United States then, as to-day, stood before the Populistic influences of his own party. He was afraid to issue bonds to maintain the gold reserve. He reserved his issue of bonds until he had to do it to pay current expenses. A law which was not good enough to authorize the issue of bonds to save us from the panic is good enough perforce to raise money to pay current expenses, when almost any lawyer will say that it is an abuse of a statute to use it for any such purpose.

So we have come down to the point where the public debt has been increased $50,000,000 by that cause and a deficiency of $75,000,000 for this fiscal year faces us, not because the country needs an income tax, not because the customs and internal revenue are not the ample fountain from which to draw everything that is needed for the Federal Government. The Democratic party, with an imbecility which can find no comparison except in its own antecedent history, creates this condition of things, this deficiency, and then turns around and takes this miserable, odious, and abominable remedy of an income tax with which to furnish a remedy for the wrong which it itself has created. That is the case, Mr. President.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a question on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HIGGINS. With great pleasure.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to inquire in the first place whether it is not true that the prospect of the inauguration of a new revenue system with reference to the collection of imposts did not prevent the introduction of foreign goods into the United States, and thereby very largely reduce the revenue, and if it is not prospectively still reducing it until the new tariff legislation can be had? Also, whether it is not likely that there will be a large influx of goods, whether there is not a vast aggregation of goods even now ready to be thrown on the American market from abroad, which will be likely to give a very large increase of revenue as soon as the importations come in, and will there not be a striking contrast between the record of the Treasury Department on this subject in the past year and the conditions that are likely to succeed after this bill becomes a law? In that case there will be no lack of sufficient revenue with which to conduct the Government if we have a fair and reasonable revenue bill, and therefore there is no reasonable ground for the introduction of an income tax for the purpose of supplying the deficiency.

Mr. HIGGINS. I have no doubt the Senator is right in both respects. Of course, people are not going to export goods into this country under a high tariff when they hope to get them in under a low tariff. We are called upon to vote to-day to impose this income tax, with all its inequalities, upon one section of the people of the country, in absolute ignorance of the volume of revenue that will be produced from other sources under other branches of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if he believes there will be more revenue under this bill than under the McKinley act?

Mr. HIGGINS. That would be a pure guess. I am not an expert on these subjects, but I have always understood the economical and common-sense principle to be that a tariff that is very high and approximating to the prohibitive will necessarily produce a limited amount of revenue; whereas a tariff which is moderately high, not high enough to exclude the importations, low enough to admit them, will very greatly increase the revenue.

At the same time it seems to me that under the modifications the present bill has received at the hands of the Finance Committee, and that we have been voting on now for some weeks, we ought to expect a great volume of imports and a very heavy increase of our revenue. Therefore, when we have levied this tax that is so pertinaciously added to the bill, the Administration will find itself face to face with the old condition of more revenue than the expenditures of the country will require.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator asked me to give him the revenues and expenditures of 1892. I sent for them, and I should like to give them to him.

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. The revenues for 1892 were $425,886,260, and the expenditures were $415,953,803, leaving a surplus of $9,914,453.56, or a little less than $10,000,000. I should like also to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the revenues for 1892 were considerably less than the revenues for 1891. The decrease of net revenue for 1892 over that of 1891 was $22,675,972.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am indebted to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who has now left the Chamber, for a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the fiscal years 1891, 1892, and 1893, which I beg leave to have printed in my remarks without reading:

NOTE.—After the year 1862 the collections during any given fiscal year were not confined to the preceding calendar year, but naturally include amounts due and unpaid for any previous year.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Internal Revenue Office, August 23, 1893.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

Mr. HIGGINS. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. The course of revenue derived from customs before and after the passage of the McKinley act is quite instructive, and I ask leave of the Senator at this point to put in a few figures.

The receipt of customs for the year ending June 30, 1889, was $223,832,741; and for the year ending June 30, 1890, it was $229,688,584. That was before the passage of the McKinley act. Then we passed the McKinley act, and in 1891, it will be remembered, we took off the sugar duty.

Mr. TELLER. The act was passed in 1890.

Mr. PLATT. It was passed in 1890 and did not affect sugar until 1891; and there was taken off during the year 1891 about $65,000,000 of revenue from sugar; that in the year 1891 affected somewhat the revenue derived from customs, so that it fell off to $219,522,205. In 1892 there was a still further falling off, the McKinley act taking full effect, when the amount derived from customs was only $177,452,964. But in 1893 the revenues derived from customs under the McKinley act began to make quite a gain, and the amount for that year was $203,355,016.

Now, I compare 1890 with 1892 in order to see the effect of the McKinley act deducting sugar upon our revenues from customs. In 1890 the customs revenue amounted to $229,688,584; in 1892, the lowest point reached, the amount was $177,452,964, the loss being $52,265,620, or about $13,000,000 less than the loss which came from taking off of sugar. So, setting that aside, there was still a gain in customs revenue under the McKinley act.

But now I compare 1890 with 1893. The revenues in 1890 were $229,688,584, as I have stated. In 1893 they were $203,355,016, the loss between 1890 and 1893 being only $26,333,568; and yet we lost the $65,000,000 of revenue from sugar in 1893.

Now, I go a little further, and I compare 1892 with 1893, both being under the McKinley act. In 1892 the amount was $177,452,964; in 1893, $203,355,016, there being a gain under the operation of the McKinley law from 1892 to 1893 in customs of $25,902,052. Now, one more comparison and I shall not detain the Senate any longer. I take the first seven months of 1893, $121,678,704, and the first seven months of 1894, $81,286,083, showing a loss between the first seven months of 1893 and the first seven months of 1894 of $50,390,621.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am much obliged to the courtesy and the industry of the Senator from Connecticut in placing these important figures in my remarks.

It was proved in the experience from 1861 to 1893 that this country is able to take care of itself. As I have before stated, and I do not intend to repeat, this country met the greatest conflict of history, military and financial, and it carried it with ease. It staggers, it totters, it falls, it alarms Europe, it appeals to Wall-street bankers only when it passes out of the hands of the party which carried it through this heroic period and goes back to the hands of the party who left it in 1860 unable to borrow money even at 8 per cent. Of course it has gone back in 1893.

Grave uncertainty has penetrated everything. The people of the country are going through an agony—the capitalist, the manufacturer, the merchant, the corner grocer, the blacksmith, the laborer, the farmer, everybody; and the revenues of the Government merely reflect the general collapse. And yet this condition of collapse, the syncope of the patient, is taken as the occasion for applying a remedy that is to continue through years as if we needed any such remedy.

Mr. President, I do not care to protract these remarks or to repeat what I have already said upon this question. I have but little more to say. I shall not undertake to go into the constitutional and judicial question as to whether this proposed statute is in violation of the fourth paragraph of section 9 of the first section of the first article of the Constitution, which says that—

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

The Supreme Court of the United States in time of war upheld the constitutionality of the income tax imposed during the war, but I do not know whether if this income-tax measure should be enacted and carried before the Supreme Court, as doubtless would be the case, what the decision of the Court would be. I do not know whether, bound by the effect of their previous decision, they will consider that this is not a violation of that prohibition of the Constitution. But, Mr. President, I have no question but that it is a most gross violation of the spirit and the purpose with which that provision and that prohibition was placed by our wise founders in our fundamental law, in the Constitution of the United States, that great chart for the liberties and the property of the American people.

When they said that "no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or emumeration," that is of population, it was intended that the people in one section of the country should not impose taxes upon the people of another section of the country, and yet that is what is being attempted to be done in this feature of the tariff bill. People, Senators and others, who represent a population that is largely free from any one receiving incomes above $4,000 are perfectly willing to sacrifice their wives' relations in order to carry this war to a successful conclusion; they are perfectly willing that this tax shall be laid upon another part of the country.

Mr. President, this is a very serious and grave matter in our national policy. I yield to no one on this floor or in the wide domain of this country in my desire for a wide and a wider America; but if there is any one evil that it would carry with it it would be the disposition on the part of one section of the country to impose the burden of taxation upon the other, that they might thereby escape themselves. The only justification for an income tax is one not with $4,000 of exemption, but with a very limited exemption, so that its application will be general. Making the exemption as high as $4,000 will relieve the largest portion of the country in territory and in population and put it upon one corner.

Mr. President, in this composite nationality of ours I do not know how far into our pedigree enters the old English blood. It might be cruel, it might be brutal, but it was honest, it was courageous, and it was fair. It did not believe in striking below the belt; and it is contrary to English fair play for one part of this country to be undertaking to impose the burdens of that taxation which conducts the business that they get the benefit of upon one part of this country and not upon another. Against that injustice I protest, not so much for the people whom I have the honor in part to represent, though I do not believe that this measure meets their view, as against that wider constituency in the United States who can always be relied upon in the last resort to deal fairly and justly by every man in the land.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Allison,	George,	McMillan,	Quay,
Bate,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Roach,
Berry,	Gorman,	Martin,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oregon	Smith,
Caffery,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Squire,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Carey,	Hill,	Murphy,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Huston,	Patton,	Vest,
Coke,	Irby,	Peffer,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Jarvis,	Perkins,	Walsh,
Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,	Washburn,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Proctor,	White.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks in the hearing of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

On yesterday a brief colloquy took place between me and that Senator, and I had supposed that the incident was closed, but after debate between the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and the Senator from Nebraska, in which the subject of a duty on lumber was further discussed, the Senator from Nebraska referred to the subject-matter which had been considered between him and me.

The Senator spoke in an unusually low voice and not in the stentorian tones with which he sometimes addresses the Senate. I heard with difficulty. I did hear the word "insinuation" used. I did not hear the opprobrious epithet which the Senator took occasion to apply to me. In the close of the Senator's remarks he reiterated the statement that the charge I had made was false, and that he believed that I knew it was a falsehood.

Mr. President, what I had stated was not an insinuation, and I believed what I stated to be true. The charge, if any such charge can be gathered from the remarks which I made, was that the Senator had made a threat to vote against this bill unless lumber was kept upon the free list, where it had been put by a previous vote of the Senate. The facts which were the basis of that charge are here directly upon the record. After the vote was taken upon sugar, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] rose and gave notice that his vote must not be taken as an indication of the way he might vote upon the sugar question when the schedules of the bill should be finally completed, which, as it seemed to me, was an entirely legitimate and natural notice for the Senator to give. He was, however, followed by the Senator from Nebraska, who not only stated that it was uncertain how he might vote upon the subject of sugar, but took occasion to say that his vote upon that question, as just given, was no indication whatever what his vote would be upon the passage of the bill itself.

The Senator having thus advertised again to the Senate and the country the fact that his vote was doubtful, retired from the Senate for a few moments, and subsequently came in and moved to insert upon the free list the words "lumber of any sort, planed or finished."

Mr. President, I had understood that there had been agitation in the Senate, that there had been agitation upon the other side of the Chamber with a view to induce the Democratic managers to consent to put a duty upon planed or finished lumber; and when the Senator moved to put lumber upon the free list so soon after he had given notice that his vote was uncertain upon the bill, I inferred, and I charged that he had given that notice in order to force the Democratic side of the Chamber, with which he is in such association, to carry out the arrangement which had been previously made.

I believed it then; I believe it now. I called the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact, and I simply inquired, using no opprobrious language, whether the bargain between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber was fully complete and the Senator's vote upon this bill finally fixed. I made that inquiry. I think I was warranted in making the inquiry; and I do not conceive that anything I said then, or say now, warranted the use of any unparliamentary language proceeding from the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, I can not understand the sensitiveness of the Senator from Nebraska at the charge that the Democratic Senators who are managing this bill are making bargains and arrangements in order to secure its passage. It has been stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], distinctly stated in a written speech upon this floor, that neither the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, nor the bill as it was reported by the Finance Committee could at any time have commanded a majority of the votes of Senators upon this floor, and it has been distinctly stated that in consequence of that inability to pass the bill arrangements have been made, agreements have been made, concessions have been made—call them what you will—not to Republican Senators to induce them to vote for the bill, but to Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to induce them to vote for the bill, and over and over again the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has bemoaned the dreadful state in which he found himself, and equally dolefully the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has told the Senate and the country that he was not in favor of provisions in this bill, but that he was obliged to concede them in order to secure its passage.

What does all this mean? It means simply that concessions and arrangements and bargains are being made upon the other side of the Chamber. This is not an open secret; it is no secret; it is an avowal of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber; and, as the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested to me, it seems very singular that when there is this open avowal that the bill is being carried through by bargains and arrangements made, conducted, and arranged by the Senator from Maryland and other conservative Senators with the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri—it seems very singular that when all this is admitted and goes to the country and is not disputed, yet if you venture to allude to a specific bargain and bring it home to a Senator engaged in it, immediately he resents the insinuation or the charge as implying corruption and dishonor on his part, and forthwith proceeds to reply in terms of indignation and opprobrium to the Senator who ventures to bring home a particular bargain to the particular Senator who made it.

Why is this, Mr. President? Why is it that if this is all innocent, if it is all natural, if it is all legitimate, if it is something which Senators are not afraid to do, and not ashamed to do, and not afraid or ashamed to avow to the country, the Senator from Nebraska becomes inflamed because the inquiry is made whether the arrangement to secure his vote has been fully made, and that he is no longer free to dodge in and to dodge out, and to give notice that he has not agreed to vote for this bill, and to move amendments as a condition of voting for this bill? Why is it that the Senator gets indignant at that?

Mr. President, the whole thing is patent and open to the whole country, and the Senator, instead of getting indignant with me, should have frankly admitted the fact that at last, if this amendment was adopted, he had been landed securely in the Democratic camp to the end of the voyage in connection with this bill.

When the Senator from Nebraska was making his demonstration, the Senator from Maine called attention to the fact that this was not a committee amendment, and that there was no caucus obligation to vote for it. The Senator from Maine took pains to emphasize the fact that the Senators upon the other side, as he understood the method of proceeding, were free to vote as they saw fit, and were not bound by caucus rule upon this particular question.

So, Mr. President, when the vote was taken there was apparently a vote in the negative upon it upon the viva voce vote, although that fact does not appear in the RECORD; but, as I remember it, there was apparently a vote in the negative, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], in order to carry the amendment, was obliged to call for the yeas and nays. Thereupon, as I predicted would be the case, the other side of the Chamber rallied to its support, and under the threat of the Senator from Nebraska consummated the arrangement which, as I believe, was the consideration for the Senator's vote upon this bill—a consideration, Mr. President, which the Senator himself has not hesitated to avow; for, if I mistake not, he has stated upon the floor of this Senate that whether he voted for this bill or did not vote for it would depend upon whether he could obtain amendments which he sought to obtain in connection with the bill before it should be put upon its final passage.

I submit that under these circumstances the Senator was not justified in using the language in reference to me which is to be found in yesterday's RECORD. There was nothing unparliamentary in my language; there was nothing offensive in anything which I said, and whatever of heat I may at any time have shown in debate in this body, I have never knowingly or intentionally used an opprobrious adjective or an opprobrious noun—certainly very seldom—and I challenge Senators to go through the debates in this body in which I have taken part, and show that I have used unparliamentary language, however severe or however pointed have been the remarks which I have made. That has been my rule in the past; it will be my rule in the future.

So far as the Senator from Nebrsaka is concerned, referring to the term which he used, I regret, Mr. President, to say that I have discovered that the surroundings of the Senator from Nebraska before he entered this body were such as not to allow him to observe those courtesies which all gentlemen regard even in the most heated partisan debate. The Senator from Nebraska, Mr. President, is to be pitied, and not censured, for that which he could not help.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think this is probably the fourth time the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has, without any provocation on my part, so far as I can discover, used the unparliamentary and ungentlemanly language of "bargain," charging me with having made a bargain with the Democratic party for my vote. He says that is not unparliamentary. I do not myself know enough about parliamentary law to know whether it is or not. I do know, howhowever, that it is untrue, and I think I know it is ungentlemanly. I think I know also that when the Senator made that charge he made it willfully, deliberately, knowing it to be false.

I have nothing to take back in that respect. The Senator has, all the way through, undertaken to put me in the attitude of a trafficker in my vote. I think I know what is due to an American citizen; I think I know some of the duties of my office, although I have not had the experience he has had; but the insinuation or the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire that I have trafficked in my vote—he says "bargain," but traffic is what it means—that I had agreed to vote for this measure in consideration of any concession which has been made to me or that may be made to me with reference to any particular interest of the West, is untrue.

I have nothing to take back. I reiterate every word I uttered yesterday, and if I were where I could speak plainer I would make it still plainer than I make it now.

Several weeks ago, Mr. President, I made a motion to strike lumber from the dutiable list. If the Senator from New Hampshire will turn back in memory to that event, he will remember it was the subject of discussion at that time. I had a right to make that motion. I propose to have some of the interests of my country taken care of if I can get them taken care of.

I am not in the attitude of being bound here to either the Republican or the Democratic party. I am the humble representative of a new party, and in a certain sense we are skirmishers between the lines here.

I am under no obligation to the Democratic party upon this side of the Chamber, nor am I under any obligation to the Republican party upon the other side; and it is not necessary, Mr. President, for me to recognize Democratic domination upon the one hand, or Republican domination upon the other. Whatever may be to the interest of the people of the section of the country that I represent in part, if I understand that interest I propose to stand for it, and I propose to stand for it in spite of the low, dirty insinuations of the senior Senator from New Hampshire, or any other man.

I reiterate with full force and with renewed energy every word I uttered yesterday upon this subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. The closing remarks of the Senator from Nebraska only emphasize the statement I made, which is that he does not comprehend the courtesies which should characterize debate in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first amendment to the section submitted by the committee.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 7, after the word "ninety-five," insert the words "and until the 1st day of January, 1900."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire at some time not to argue either as a constitutional question or a question of public policy the income-tax provision, but to put upon record, about as I should if I were making the marginal notes to a judicial opinion, a summary of what seem to me the chief objections to it. I suppose it will take a few minutes to do so, and I may as well do it now. I shall have occasion to say something about a few of the details of this scheme as they are reached.

I am opposed to the income tax, first, because it is a class of taxation which, except during the extremity of a great war, always has been and always ought to be left to the States. The States are obliged, through the threefold instrumentality of the State, county, and municipality, to search every kind of property and every faculty of the citizen for earning money, and I hold that this particular method of taxation can be best exercised for public purposes by public officials who are close to the citizens. You can not put into a national tax system proper means of dealing with an income tax.

Take the matter of abatement. A citizen suffers a misfortune. He is apparently earning an income of $50,000. There comes a tempest, and over he goes. He and his household are ruined. He becomes a pauper, and his wife and children are paupers as near as they can be made by such a misfortune. There is nobody on the face of this earth who can remit the income tax, and you could not have it done by an official at Washington. But the neighbor, the assessors of the town, or in my part of the country the town itself, by a vote in town meeting, can do it considerately and fairly.

The matter of exemption, also, is not a matter with which the United States Government can deal. In this very bill, which has reference, I suppose, to the instrumentalities of the Revised Statutes in regard to whisky and tobacco, you have not any exemption for homesteads. I presume that my honorable friend from Missouri, on that being suggested to him, will probably make an amendment, or agree to an amendment if some one else propose it. It is impossible to suppose he would not. But there ought to be, with reference to the different habits and customs of particular States, exemptions regarding the matter of tools of trade, necessary implements of professions, and the like. You do not exempt from the collection of the income tax the bed on which the citizen lies, except it is included in a certain amount of household furniture.

Mr. President, another matter seems to me to be clear. I am not at this moment going into the question whether an income tax is a direct tax. It has been dealt with by the Supreme Court of the United States so far as it affected the Springer case, and it is not profitable for us to enter very profoundly into that discussion now. But so far as the income from real estate is concerned, it is impossible to deny that such a tax is opposed to the principle and purpose and desire of the framers of the Constitution. A tax on real estate is a direct tax. The framers of the Constitution said such a tax shall only be assessed in proportion to population, for the very purpose of preventing a majority, coming from States where real estate is cheap, putting the expenses of the Government on a few States, a minority of the people, where real estate is high and of great value. You could not have secured the adoption of the Constitution either by convention or the people, but for that stipulation.

Now, in principle, how can you distinguish between the tax upon the body of the real estate and the tax upon the income from the real estate, which is everything that gives it its value? You can not tax the $100,000 or the $1,000,000 worth of land, but you come in here and say "we can tax the value of that land." You can not tax my house, but you tax everything the house produces or earns or yields. It is a distinction without a difference, I respectfully submit.

Will my honorable friend from Missouri, who is to defend this tax, tell the Senate, when he comes to do it, whether he can believe for an instant that if any member of the constitutional convention in 1787 had risen in his place and moved to insert in the prohibition of direct taxes, except according to population, "but incomes from real estate, incomes from the subject of the direct tax, may be taxed wherever they are found, without regard to State lines," such an amendment would not have been rejected by unanimous vote, and the idea that that device or distinction would ever have been resorted to scouted as an imputation upon the sincerity and honesty of the American people?

Mr. President, my third objection is that this is a tax in favor of wealth as against industry and frugality. Two men are side by side, one with $100,000 of invested property at 4 per cent, perhaps invested in Government bonds, which would take $133,000, or thereabouts, to yield the exempted income, with a future for himself as certain as anything on earth is certain in the way of investment of property for his old age, for his wife and family. He escapes. Next door to him lives an old bank teller or clerk, or a foreman in a manufacturing establishment, who has not a dollar laid up in the world. He has been promoted as the reward of a lifetime of hard work and frugality and intelligence in his profession or his business, so that he is getting $5,000 a year. You seize upon that poor man's earnings and take from him what you refuse to take from the wealthy or the rich man.

Now, I say, and I do not use the phrase with reference to anybody's motive or purpose, that this is a distinction which can not be defended. It is founded upon a vicious, objectionable, indefensible public policy. It says, in other words, what you have and own and have gathered into your own pockets from the wealth of the community, whether you inherited it, whether you got it by speculation or however, shall be exempt, and your year's wages or earnings shall pay the public burden.

Mr. President, the bill as it stands—I do not know what amendments are to be had—is unjust especially to savings institutions and life insurance policies and to all the little places where the little savings of the honest and frugal poor are found. I hope and believe that the public indignation and remonstrance will extort what was not extorted from the majority in the other House—an amendment to the bill in this respect.

There is another consideration. This is a tax upon moneyed incomes, as is well settled by the definition of the word "income" both in England and in this country. Under this plan a man who consumes all he raises in luxurious living escapes altogether, while the man who earns and is paid wages which he has to expend for the honest and frugal support and education of his family is taxed. Here is a great and palatial estate, upon which hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars have been expended, in which the owner lives luxuriously and gathers his guests in the summer and has music and dancing and feasting, and where woodcock and wine are necessaries of life. That estate escapes altogether, because there is not any money income, while a man living next door, who receives his income, $5,000 or $6,000 a year in a salary which he earns, whose income goes out for the education of his sons and daughters, pays a tax on all over $4,000. A member of this body told me recently that when the Duke of Sutherland was over here a few years ago, the income of whose princely estates in Scotland and England is between one and two million dollars, he said to some gentlemen who were conversing upon that subject that the income tax did not affect him very much, for the produce of his estates was not in money, but in the products of the field and the soil and the hothouse.

Another objection I have is that the bill gives to Government officials the power of inquisition into the business of private citizens. You may talk as you please about publicity, as my distinguished and venerated friend, Mr. Sumner, used to talk about the old Roman who wanted to have his house built of glass, so that every one might see what went on inside, but it is not human nature, and the fact that it is not human nature shows that it is not justice or reason. The business man has a right to have his business faculty, his business methods, his business earnings concealed from the public and from his rival, foreign or domestic.

The competition in most of the transactions of life is keen and close. One of the greatest woolen manufacturing industries in Massachusetts sent its agent, a distinguished manufacturer, to call on me at my residence in Massachusetts a few years ago, and he told me that the only thing which had enabled him to make any profit for his concern for several years, when the other concerns engaged in the great business were losing money, was the savings which his concern made in the pasteboard boxes in which their materials were sold.

Now, Mr. President, it is a universal principle of American nature to keep your transactions concealed from the gaze and scrutiny of other men. I agree that that ought to yield to a public exigency; but in this case what do you do with it? You put this power of inquisition into the hands of public officials. I have no doubt that under the present Democratic Administration you will get on the whole as respectable and as careful and as well principled a class of men as you would get under any other, but would our friends on the other side consent to have put in doubtful political struggles in the New England States or in New York or in any other part of the country the terrible power and weapon and instrumentality into the hands of the agencies of the existing Administration of saying to every business man, if you are active or ambitious or instrumental in seeking the overthrow of the party now in power it is at the risk of having your business affairs inquired into and exposed by the political servants of the Government?

The distinguished and able Senator from New York dropped a curious expression in his argument just now. I wish to speak with great respect of that Senator, because he represents as does nobody else on this floor a class of persons who are peculiar to the New England States, chiefly to the State of Massachusetts, known as the Mugwumps or independents. He is the only Senator on either side of this Chamber who has exactly, precisely, in all respects, represented the doctrines and principles of that class of our fellow-citizens.

I thought from some expressions which have dropped from his lips heretofore that he did not quite agree with them in their great demands of civil-service reform, but Governor Russell, the favorite candidate and darling of the New England Mugwumps, said in an interview the other day that the passage of this tariff bill was an emergency which demanded the application of Democratic party discipline, which, I suppose, in his lips meant simply the power of Democratic appointment to office and removal. So I think the honorable Senator from New York may be set down as the absolute, perfect, and immaculate champion of the New England independents. He said, in commending the petition of his constituents for this legislation, that several gentlemen, whose names he read, had been generous contributors to the Democratic campaign fund.

If that is a motive for legislation which that astute and acute Senator thought might operate on the minds of his associates in this body, it would strike me that the generous contributor to the Democratic campaign fund past or future, or to the Republican campaign fund in the same cases, would be the man who might escape serious and disagreeable inquisition into his private business.

Another reason why I object to it is, it is sectional in its character, and it is so taken by a large part of the country. It will be understood by the people who pay this tax that it has been put on, as has been said freely in the press in some parts of the country, because one part of the country will escape it and another part of the country will wholly have to pay it. There is a good deal of serious truth in the jest attributed to the honorable and gallant Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], that the people of Georgia like this measure, because none of them have any incomes above $4,000, though, of course, nobody will attribute for a moment to that honorable Senator that his own vote would be governed by any such consideration.

In the next case its point of exemption is unjust. The great body of the money-earning people of this country, when you get above the class which you call laborers or wage-earners, are people whose incomes are between one thousand and five thousand dollars; and why should that great body be exempt? Even in aristocratic England, as has been said heretofore, the point of exemption is less than $750—£150.

I shall have occasion to point out hereafter many defects in the details of this measure which I shall not detain the Senate with speaking of now, but there is one I will notice. Here is a premium on the separation of families. The husband and wife who live together get one exemption. The husband and wife who quarrel and separate get two. If there are five minor children who live together, with property enough to support them all, there is only one exemption. If they scatter to different households there are five or six exemptions.

Here is another objection I wish to notice. From the amount of the income you do not make the deductions which on a reasonable principle you ought to make. A loss by fire, storms, or shipwreck of property merely is deducted. The man who has an income of $50,000 a year on a property of $1,500,000, and loses $50,000 by fire, storm, or shipwreck, is entirely exempt from the income tax for that year; but the loss by gas explosion, the loss in any other manner not enumerated here, the loss of the earning power of the man who earns his income, is not counted at all.

Here is a man earning $5,000 a year without a dollar of property in the world, and he gets a blow over the head, has a paralytic shock, and his power of earning is gone, and it is not counted to him. By his side is a man worth a million and a half with his income of $50,000 a year, and the fire which destroys $50,000 worth of his property, never causing him to lose a single luxury, or a single necessity, or a single security for his future life, gets rid of the income tax on that wealth altogether.

Mr. President, there is another very grave and serious objection. We all want if we can to see a time when we can get rid of the internal-revenue system altogether. It is odious, it is a sore, it is an irritation, it is a sting in all parts of the country. The moonshiner does not like to have the revenue officer after him, and the men who is earning an honest living in his shop does not like to have the revenue officer after him. It is the one thing in which the people of the United States are agreed in wanting to get rid of; and the adoption of this policy puts an end to that hope. It is not merely the discomfort to the citizen, it is the most odious form and the most dangerous and injurious form of political patronage that we have in our entire system, and we all have hoped that the time would soon come when we could get rid of it.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has offered an amendment which leaves it extremely doubtful to my mind—I do not suppose that could have been his purpose—whether the American citizens of large wealth dwelling abroad is not to get rid of the income tax, as I think he will by the amendment as it is now framed. The one man who carries with him everything which is valuable to an American citizenship abroad, who can plunge this nation into war if he is insulted in the streets of Callao, Rio Janeiro, or Paris, who goes there to bring up his children in foreign fashions and to indulge himself in foreign luxuries, and carrying abroad the wealth which he or some ancestor of his has acquired, is to escape under this bill as it is now proposed to be left.

Mr. VEST. What amendment is that, if the Senator pleases?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, he will find it a little later. It is an amendment which is found printed here where you strike out the words "American citizen residing abroad," in terms. The Senator will readily find it.

Now, Mr. President, here is another very serious objection to deal with in this matter which might be cured, and perhaps will be hereafter; and that is where there is a failure by accident or illness or some other reason to make and send in the inventory of the taxed property at the time required. In case such a mistake arises from sickness or absence, thirty days more are given, and that is all, and it merely says that the collector may receive the list after that time.

Is everybody who fails to bring in his list by an accident (suppose one of his family dies and he is plunged in grief or he is insane, or suppose he has sent it, has left it to some clerk to forward, or it is miscarried in the mail) to come to Congress for relief? Yet that is what has got to be done under this bill as it stands now.

Mr. President, there is another thing which is perhaps included in what I said a little while ago. There is no homestead or other exemption provided for, no exemption in case of misfortune. The United States is to be a Shylock, demanding its pound of flesh, and without any lawful and constitutional power to relinquish it.

This proposition is a war upon honest industry, honest wages, frugal living, and moderate gains. It is a combination of aristocrat and Populist, of the millionaire and the tramp, which is forcing this policy upon us against which the honest, the simple, frugal American spirit expresses its dissent and its loathing. You put the burden upon these men, upon the savings bank, upon the life policy, upon the foreman in the mill, upon the man with a little saving which you will take off from whisky and tobacco. It is easy to get a sufficient revenue, if that be what you want, though the Senator from New York has well demonstrated that you have plenty without it by a reasonable and moderate addition to the imposition upon whisky and tobacco. The man who earns and saves his little accumulation in the savings bank is to pay a tax from which you are relieving the man who works by his side and spends his earnings in whisky and tobacco or in foreign wines and French brandies.

Mr. President, it shows how recklessly this matter has been framed that you have not even exempted the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court; that you have not even exempted the retiring pensioner, or the President of the United States. I think Chief Justice Taney's letter which has been laid on our tables will show that the bill is faulty in that particular.

Now, I wish to make one other observation and then I shall have finished. It seems to be supposed by some of our friends, notably the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], that in this country there is a great mass of wealth accumulated in a few hands, while at the same time the poor are growing poorer and the number of men with moderate property and moderate savings is decreasing. That is wholly untrue. There never was a time, there never was a country, there never was a generation in which the man of simple living, of honest industry, and of moderate gains has been better off or has been more completely the prevailing type and example of citizenship than in this country at this hour.

It was said here that the census returns showed that 80 per cent of the property of this country was in the hands of 20 per cent of the people; that is, that a fifth of the people own the property of this country. It sounds very plausible at the first statement, but I should like to know if that is not a sign and proof of a healthy condition? Take any American young man who starts in life at 21 and gets married at 23. A year after he starts, as a lawyer, or a physician, or a mechanic, to earn his living. Then he goes on, and by the time he has got to 33 years he has three or four children with his wife, and has accumulated two or three thousand dollars and laid it up. He constitutes a fifth of that family, and yet every dollar of his property is in his hands.

We have women in this country who have inherited large estates. Occasionally the husband conveys some of his earnings to his wife, and it is in her name, but ordinarily the earnings of the family vest legally in the husband, who is the head of the family; and it is said for every wage-earning man on an average there are five persons whom he supports. So the natural and ordinary condition of well-to-do, healthy families moderately well off would be that 80 per cent of the property would stand in the name of 20 per cent of the people.

That statement, which has gone the rounds uncontradicted and unexplained for so many years, is the merest trash. In every family the property stands in the name of its head. The youth, the men who have their money still to make, though earning money, are not counted in the census of property, though I hold that if a census could be fairly taken which would show that out of every hundred persons in this country there are twenty having an amount of property which would meet the want of the taxgatherer or the census taker, and if that appearance in our returns and statistics could be exhibited by statistical science, it is an assured proof of health and wealth and of freedom from poverty and degradation.

I have one other observation to make, and then I shall conclude. In regard to this tax upon railroads, upon gas companies, upon water companies, upon ferry companies, and upon a few turnpike companies, if there are any left—there are, of course, but few of the latter now left in the United States. As the Senator from New York well said, those companies are a part of the State Government; they are the instrumentalities through which the State exerts and exercises its great function of providing public ways of transportation for the people. The stocks, the dividends, the toll, the money paid for freight or fare, are but the modes in which the State provides a salary for the public officer who is performing that public function, which the State can not do so well by itself.

The State has an absolute control over the amount to be charged in all those cases. It delegates and it regulates the exercise of the power of eminent domain for their construction.

I am not sure that I should go, indeed I do not know that the Senator from New York committed himself as going, quite so far as to say that when the State commits to this class of corporation the power or capacity or faculty of doing business, that that business, and its income and its profit may not be taxed by the National Government.

That is a doubtful and a serious question; but whether constitutionally and in strict law we can exercise this power, the relation of these corporations to the State and to the municipality is such, is so intimate, so constant, that it seems clear to me they ought to be left to the State power of taxation. As to street railroads, the city or town gas companies, water boards, or local railroads, going from place to place in the same State, having nothing or little to do with international commerce, the Legislature of the State, the hand of the State, is on them in their every motion. These corporations are State creatures.

The politics of the State turn upon the way they shall be dealt with. The State will tax them, and it must tax them, and by coming in with the assertion of this national power simply because there is a prejudice against this class of corporations, you are embarrassing the State, the town, the county. All this class of corporations pay now in my own State to three separate public demands as large a sum as in reason and in justice they ought to be compelled to pay for public purposes. If you go beyond that, and put a burden upon these corporations, if you make them bankrupt or deprive them of what is a just, fair, and reasonable compensation, you are doing an infinite public mischief.

There is nothing so badly off in a free country as a community which is served by bankrupt or embarrassed railroads or street railways or gas companies. There is no security of compensation for injury to the private citizen; there is no insurance in the solvency of the concern against danger or loss of property; there is no liberality or generosity or enterprise in providing for the convenience of the people. You could not make a worse investment, you could not do a greater injury, especially to the new States which depend so largely upon these instrumentalities, than to cripple or embarrass the railroads.

Let Kansas tax the railroads in Kansas to their full extent, and let her regulate the railroads to the full extent of her constitutional power; and let the United States Government keep off its hands.

Mr. President, I have not been in the habit of speaking of late years in terms of strongest respect of the Democratic party or of Democratic statesmanship; but there is one thing in which I had supposed the people of the United States could depend on the Democratic party and on the statesmanship of the South and West, and that was, that if there was an attempt to interfere by the central authority with the autonomy, the sovereignty, and independence of the States, that party would immediately sound the alarm.

For the first ten or fifteen years in which I had the honor of service in this Capitol there was scarcely a measure proposed in either House in regard to which a Democratic leader did not rise in his place and say, "Mr. President"—or "Mr. Speaker"—my objection to this thing is that I think it ought to be left to the States." Yet this tariff bill and this income-tax scheme is the most conspicuous, far-going, drastic, sweeping assertion of national power against the State power, State interest, and State functions which can be found in our legislative history.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the committee to section 54.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, page 170, line 7, after the date "1895," it is proposed to insert "and until the 1st day of January, 1900."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out "1900" and insert "1897."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. At the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I modify my amendment so as to read "1898."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out "1900" and inserting "1898."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is absent. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I see that he has not voted, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. As I understand he is not present, and as I do not know how he would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CAREY. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Morrill,	Sherman,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senators in charge of the bill whether we may not have an understanding that the various sections of the bill for the purpose of offering amendments may be considered as one section, so that we may subsequently go back to the first section of that portion of the bill relating to the income tax. I desire to submit some remarks on some particular amendments to the first section of that part of the bill, which I do not feel like doing to-day.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that I exactly understand what the Senator desires. The usual mode of proceeding is to read through the sections as originally reported, then to act on the amendments of the committee; and after they are acted upon, to consider such amendments as Senators may offer.

Mr. HILL. But when a section has been once passed we cannot return to it.

Mr. VEST. There is never any difficulty in regard to that. If the Senator wants to move an amendment, he can get leave of the Senate, and that can be done.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. All these sections in relation to the income tax might be considered as a single proposition, it occurs to me, to be read through, and then amendments be submitted.

Mr. HILL. That is what I suggest.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course where an amendment has been inserted by the committee it can not be got out again. If the committee offers an amendment and it is agreed to, that can not be subsequently modified or changed.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that that is the point at all.

Mr. HILL. The simple point of my suggestion is, that all the sections, so far as they relate to the income tax, may be considered as one section for the purpose of offering amendments, so that if, after having passed the first section relating to the income tax, to-morrow I should desire to offer an amendment in regard to it I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HARRIS. Technically the thing suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] I do not think could be done as in Committee of the Whole, but so far as I am concerned, and I imagine so far as the Senate is concerned, there will be no objection to pursuing the course suggested by the Senator, if he desires.

In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that an amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole can not be modified or changed by amendment after it has been decided in Committee of the Whole, I will say it would be amendable in the Senate, but if an amendment offered in the Senate is to be modified, it must be done while that amendment is under consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 7, after the date "1895," it is proposed to amend by inserting "and until the 1st day of January, 1900."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee to the section will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the word "be," it is proposed to insert the word "assessed;" so as to read:

There shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income, etc.

Mr. KYLE. I desire to offer an amendment to section 54.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will wait until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. KYLE. I will withhold the amendment for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment reported by the committee to section 54 will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "income," at the end of line 10, it is proposed to strike out "of every person residing in the United States, or any citizen of the United States residing abroad, derived in each preceding calendar year," and insert "received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, and every person residing therein."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is his purpose to have a citizen of the United States dwelling abroad pay a tax on all his income as he would if he dwelt at home, wherever the property may be located; or whether it is his purpose only to have that citizen pay the tax on so much of his income as comes from investments in this country?

Mr. VEST. He pays upon his income in this country exactly as if he had remained here.

Mr. HOAR. But if he had remained here he would pay tax upon the income derived from property abroad.

Mr. VEST. We have nothing to do with property abroad. It is his income in the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I think we have. The Senator's answer indicates that he did not comprehend my question, or else I am afraid I did not comprehend his answer, because his answer would imply that he does not comprehend what he is doing, which is not to be supposed for a moment.

I understand the bill as it came from the House of Representatives made every person dwelling in the United States, whether a citizen or not, pay an income tax. Then it added to that the incomes of citizens residing abroad. So, if an American citizen went abroad and carried the protection of his country, of his citizenship with him, he did not escape its burdens. There are a great many people, I am sorry to say, who go abroad for that very purpose, and some of them went abroad during the late war. They lived in luxury, at the same time at less cost, in a foreign capital; they had none of the voluntary obligations which rest upon citizens, of charity, or contributions, or supporting churches, or anything of that sort, and they escaped taxation.

That class of persons, in my judgment, ought to pay taxes on all their property at home or abroad, wherever it may be. If they remain American citizens I think the Senator from Missouri and the whole Senate will agree we have something to do with their property abroad. If that Senator has invested in a Mexican railroad or a South American or Cuban mine or in the English funds, he has to report it and pay a tax upon his investment, and he ought to.

If a citizen goes abroad under the circumstances I have stated, he ought to do that exact thing. He is the one human being we ought to tax. If there is any good in an income tax that would be the good thing if it did that. The bill as it came from the House provided for that. It said:

There shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States, or any citizen of the United States residing abroad,

That language made it clear. The committee have struck out that language. It is true, in the language printed here in italics, they say "received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States," etc., which would seem, if it stood alone, to accomplish the same thing. But they go on later to provide that the tax upon persons residing out of the United States shall be only on "property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States," and they have struck out the words "and not citizens thereof." So, taking it altogether, it would seem to be very clear that they meant to exempt the American if dwelling abroad.

Mr. ALLISON. I take it that these clauses taken together meant, first, to provide for citizens of the United States, and, secondly, to provide for persons not citizens, who were engaged in any business, trade, or occupation in the United States. Therefore the words "and not citizens thereof," should be stricken out. If that be done, then it is practically the same provision as contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. No; because they have made a comprehensive expression as to persons residing without the United States; it leaves it exceedingly doubtful. The language is:

A tax of 2 per cent on * * * all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States.

Now, that would seem to be a provision which the committee make for persons residing out of the United States, whether they are citizens or not. It is only what they have in the United States that is to be touched. That is proper as to foreigners.

Mr. ALLISON. But the committee say in substitution, if I understand the clause, "in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, and every person residing therein." Now, a citizen of the United States is a citizen, although residing abroad. Therefore I think they intended to cover that idea.

Mr. HOAR. I presume they may have intended to cover it, but I do not think they do.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that the matter be corrected by inserting the word "by" after the word "and" and before the word "every," in the eighth line of the new print. That will make it clear.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose you put in after the words "United States" in italics the words "whether residing at home or abroad." That makes it absolutely certain. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "United States" the words I suggest.

Mr. GRAY. What print does the Senator from Massachusetts read from? I am a little bit confused.

Mr. HOAR. I am reading from the print ordered yesterday.

Mr. GRAY. There are two prints.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, after the words "United States," insert the words "whether residing at home or abroad."

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt about it. That is what it means and it can not mean anything else.

Mr. HOAR. I think I can satisfy the Senator that it is very doubtful. You have first struck out what made it clear in both places, and then you have one provision that is said to be applicable to persons residing without the United States, and you do not distinguish between citizens and foreigners, so that under this clause here all persons residing without the United States come under one provision.

Mr. VEST. As the provision came from the other House it had two classes. It said "every person residing in the United States." That would cover everybody who resides here. Then it said, "or any citizen of the United States residing abroad." Now, the Finance Committee simply propose to insert in lieu of that provision:

Received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States.

That covers every citizen, whether in this country or abroad.

Mr. HOAR. It would, if you took it alone.

Mr. VEST. Of course. The first classification is "every citizen of the United States." No man divests himself of his citizenship by going abroad. Then it says, "and every person residing therein;" that is, in the United States, and that takes in everybody.

Mr. GRAY. If he shall be a citizen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I rose a moment ago to say that I wish to reserve the right to move to amend section 54, in line 8 of the new print, when the bill comes into the Senate.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in section 54, line 15, after the word "whether," to insert "said gains, profits, or income be;" so as to read:

Whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 54, line 18, after the word "elsewhere," to insert "or from any other source whatever;" so as to read:

Whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee to the section will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 22, after the word "property," insert "owned."

Mr. PEFFER. The amendment which I gave notice I would propose comes in in line 19. I ask leave to offer it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "tax," in line 19, section 54, insert:

On each and all such incomes exceeding $1,000 the tax shall be 1 per cent of the excess; and all incomes exceeding $10,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess; all incomes exceeding $25,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess; all incomes exceeding $50,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess, and all incomes exceeding $100,000 shall pay an additional tax of 1 per cent of the excess.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Kansas just state in figures what the tax will be upon the different incomes?

Mr. PEFFER. I will explain the amendment. The object is to allow what we Populists call a graduated income tax; that is to say, beginning with an exemption of $1,000, to levy a tax of 1 per cent upon the excess above and beyond $1,000, no matter to what extent.

Mr. PLATT. Between one thousand and ten thousand dollars?

Mr. PEFFER. Oh, no; from $1,000 to the end of the income, no matter how large it is. After the income reaches the extent of $10,000, then add 1 per cent on the excess above $10,000 to the end of that income, no matter how far it goes.

Mr. CULLOM. That makes it 2 per cent?

Mr. PEFFER. That will be 2 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. On incomes above $10,000?

Mr. PEFFER. Above $10,000. It is 1 per cent clear through, and after we reach $10,000 then an additional 1 per cent, so that beyond $10,000 it will be 2 per cent. Then when we reach an income of $25,000 we propose to add another 1 per cent on the excess above $25,000, going to the limit of that income, which would be 3 per cent. When we reach $50,000 we propose to add 1 per cent on the excess beyond that sum. That would be 4 per cent on $50,000. After reaching $100,000 we propose to add 1 per cent additional. That would make 5 per cent upon the excess. So it will range from 1 per cent to 5 per cent, grading it at $1,000, $10,000, $25,000, $50,000, and $100,000.

While Senators smile at the idea, it is based upon exact justice. I have no doubt that the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] who addressed us this morning, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who addressed us a few minutes ago, will agree with me upon the starting point, at least, that we ought to begin at $1,000 instead of $4,000.

Mr. President, those of us who favor the graduated system of taxation believe that persons ought to pay for the support of the Government in proportion to their means, that the poor man whose net income does not exceed $1,000 ought not to pay as much in proportion to his income as the man whose income exceeds $100,000 should pay, for the power and the influence of a man whose income is $100,000 is a thousand fold greater than that of the man whose income is $1,000. In the range of human life everywhere, the poorer a man is, as a general rule, the more obscure he is, the less his influence in politics, in religion, in social affairs; and the larger his income, the wider the range of his influence and the greater his power.

One of the great complaints being made among the people now who are taking part in this revolution which is in progress, is that by reason of the concentration of wealth among the people of the great cities of the country their power has increased to such an enormous extent as to become a menace and a continuing danger to the perpetuity of republican institutions, and of course, as a corollary, to the liberties of the people. We argue that in proportion to a man's ability ought he to respond to the demands of the Government. I know that Senators take some delight in insisting that the poor man ought to feel that he is bearing some of the burdens of government.

Oh, Mr. President, every poor man feels that he is doing so, and now you propose to tax him an additional 2 cents a pound upon the sugar which he uses in his family. This reform Congress is proposing to levy a tax of 50 per cent upon this poor man's clothing, a tax of 50 per cent upon women's and children's dress goods. So I suppose we shall not hear any more from the platform or in the press of the Democratic party that the poor man is being robbed by a set of barons who are located in the Eastern part of this country. The other side themselves are doing this thing.

The Senator from New York this morning went a little out of his way, and he hardly ever does that unless there is something to be gained by it, to insist that the income tax is a species of Socialism and Populism, incorporated into the impending bill for the purpose of securing votes. The Senator did not say, and he did not mean to say, that it was for the purpose of securing Populist votes, because he is right when he says it is a Populist measure. It is the offspring of the Populist party. We are the father of it, although it is not what would please us, because what I have given you now in my amendment is our ideal of an income tax.

Personally I do not believe that an income tax is the best way to raise revenue for the National Government. I think it would be much better to have a graduated land tax, that is to say, a tax levied upon large landed estates, and in proportion to their value.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Perhaps if the Senator will give the majority upon this side a little further time for reflection they may conclude to indorse that. I should not be surprised.

Mr. PEFFER. I should be very glad to give them five years, so that when the twentieth century shall come in we should have an improved system of taxation.

The income tax is spoken of as a idea of Populism and Socialism, as if the Senator would cast reproach upon Socialists and Populists. I do not know what a Socialist is. I do not know how the Senator from New York himself would define Socialism. I doubt very much whether he would be willing to stand up in the presence of the Senate and the country and undertake to define what he understands to be meant by Socialism. He understands what is meant by Populism, no doubt. It means an income tax. But it means a good deal more than that, and if there is to be any sort of dishonor attached to it or to anything that the Populists present, either in their platform or in their speeches, I am willing to shoulder it. I am willing to stand before the Senate and the country and say that I am proud of being a Populist.

If there is any great organization of men in the country of whom I think less than I do of the Republican party, it is the Democratic party. We are undertaking to do what the Democrats have promised to do and have failed to do and utterly refuse to do. We have undertaken to reform the processes of government. We have undertaken to restore the Government to the people for whom it was founded and to whom it rightfully belongs. We propose to equalize taxation as far as it is possible to do so, and we propose to make the wealth of the country bear its just and fair proportion of the taxes of the country.

It was said by the Senator from New York, and repeated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that an income tax would bear hardly upon the people of a particular section of the country. Why will it bear hardly upon them? Because they have more of the wealth of the country than the rest of the people. I called attention a few days ago to the fact that the little State of Massachusetts alone, with only 8,000 square miles, one-tenth part as large as the State of Kansas, saved more wealth in ten years than nine of the great agricultural States of the country.

The Senator from New York to-day, referring to the savings banks, took occasion to note that there were but two savings banks in the Southern States. Why is it that there are no savings banks there? Why is it that those people are not saving anything? You ask us to bear the burdens of taxation with you when you are receiving the protection of the Army and the Navy, and your coffers are being filled year by year and day by day with the labor and the profit of the people of other parts of the country.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me a moment?

Mr. PEFFER. With great pleasure.

Mr. HILL. I did not say there are no savings banks in the Southern States. There are only two mutual savings banks. There are a large number of savings banks in the South and West, but they are conducted upon a different principle from those in the East.

Mr. PEFFER. The point to be made is that because wealth is accumulated in New York, and not because those men are more industrious than we are, not because they are wiser or better than we are, but because they trade, because they buy and sell, because they deal in usury, because they reap in what they never earn, because they take in and live off what other men earn, they shall be exempt from taxation, and that we who are hewing wood and carrying water shall continue to bear the burdens of the Government.

The time has come when we propose to stop that kind of work. We are going to make you men of the East bear your burden of taxation. We are going to do it by the ballot. We are going to do it by a change of public officers, a change of administration, a change of laws. We are going to do it peacefully and in accordance with the law, but we are going to do it. It is an outrage. I do not know how else to characterize it. Men will stand here hour after hour and defend the wealth of the Eastern portion of this country, wealth which has been accumulated by the fostering care of the Government and by reaping from the other portions of the country what those men have never earned.

The rate of interest which has been charged to all the people of the West and the South during the last ten years averages at least 8 per cent a year upon the face of the paper, and that does not include the commissions nor any of the little incidental expenses, which amount to over 2 per cent more. We are paying at least 10 per cent annually for interest.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Kansas know how much has been lost through loans in the West?

Mr. PEFFER. I do not know how much has been lost, but I know there has not been half so much lost as that we have been charged more than we ought to have been charged. It is not my business to watch after their interest. The fact that we are being drained; that the flow goes constantly into the coffers of those people, and that they are amassing fabulous wealth is enough for the purposes of my argument. Our people object to this sort of thing because it bears too hardly upon us.

Now, there are some men in my State whose incomes amount to more than $4,000. Poor as we are out in the West, there are many men whose incomes will go over $4,000. If you will come down to the beginning point which I suggest, $1,000, you will find a large number of such incomes there.

I see only one objection to the income tax, and it has appealed to me very strongly, especially from the remarks of the two Senators who have entertained us so eloquently to-day, the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts. That objection is, that the morals of their people are in danger. We are told here upon the floor of the Senate that men in New York and in Massachusetts will lie out of the tax.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know what the Senator from New York may have said, but I have said nothing that comes within a thousand miles of such a statement, and nothing which justifies it. It is absolutely without foundation or excuse. Does the Senator from Kansas think I said it?

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Massachusetts uses language well, and he can conceal his thoughts as well as any other man. The Senator spoke of human nature being very much the same in Massachusetts as it is in other parts of the world, and I know there is a great deal of human nature in Massachusetts. We are told, not in so many words——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kansas pardon me for a moment?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly; for two moments.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator now quotes correctly a part of what I said. What I said was that no man likes to have his private business pried into or exposed to the public or his competitors or business rivals; that that is the universal feeling of men everywhere. I said nothing in regard to any danger of falsehood or fraud. I did not allude to that point. I spoke simply of the ordinary dislike of a man having his business methods exposed to his rivals, and that was all.

Mr. PEFFER. I may possibly have stated it a little stronger than the Senator himself did, but I knew I was quoting the meaning accurately. The Senator means to say that the wealthy people of the country will not submit to the collection of the income tax; that they will evade it one way or another; and then by——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. PEFFER. Wait a moment. And then by way of getting ready to do it and making the approach easy, the Senator says that the private business of individuals may properly be kept from the gaze of public officers. He proposes in advance to shield them if they do lie a little about it.

Mr. HOAR. I thought when I rose that the Senator from Kansas did not desire to deliberately misstate what I said, and I thought, therefore, that it would be worth while to attempt to correct him. I do not continue of that opinion.

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will say in this presence that he believes the people of Massachusetts will come up faithfully in accordance with the provisions of this law if it is enacted, and honestly return every cent they ought to return, and pay every cent they ought to pay, I will take back every word I said.

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt that they will do so. When the income tax was enforced before, the people of New England paid it thoroughly and cheerfully. There may have been individual instances of perjury, as there are individual instances of burglary and theft. But they are a people as honest as any who live, and I am quite willing to subject them to a comparison with the people of Kansas, whether the example be taken from the persons whom Kansas sends to this or the other House, or in any way in which it can be got at.

Mr. PEFFER. We are ready, Mr. President; Kansas is always ready. If we have ever shrunk from comparison with any other portion of the world, it was when we were asleep, and we are not often asleep.

But, Mr. President, I simply make the one point. We believe that the wealth of the country ought to pay its just proportion of the taxes, and if the wealthy are not willing to do it in accordance with the law then there ought to be some means devised to compel them to do it. To undertake to shield men from this burden because they are wealthy to my mind is unmanly. For the man of wealth to stand up in the face of the poor, of the 80 per cent the Senator from New York talks about who own no property, while the 20 per cent own the wealth, for the man of wealth to stand up in the face of the great mass of working people of the country and say to them, "I am worth a hundred times as much as you, I ought not to pay any more taxes than you," I say is unmanly, and it comes from a disposition to aggrandize and concentrate wealth, and to gather means at the expense of the labor of other men.

Mr. President, I have said several times in this presence that no man ever earned a million dollars a year, and I will say no man ever earned a million dollars in a lifetime. Whenever men begin to grow rich rapidly they are doing it because they are using the wealth other men create. This sounds harsh, it sounds wild, and it sounds visionary. Take the most prosperous merchant in the country, to use him as an illustration, and see how much he can earn every year. He earns $10,000 every year. No, he does not; he makes that much; he saves that much; he gains that much; but he gains it off of the profits over and above those which are fair and just between man and man. That is where his gains come from. The man himself did not earn that.

Now, I say that no man can honestly claim that which he has not earned, and if he does no more than that, riches will come to him slowly.

The only object we have in view in presenting this amendment is to rake in where there is something to rake in, not to throw out the drag net where there is nothing to catch, but to go where there is something to catch. The West and the South have made your people rich. We have opened your harbors. We have opened your rivers. We have given you a flood tide of commerce backward and forward through your great cities, and now because you are well to do, because you have amassed fabulous fortunes and have immense wealth in store, you claim exemption from taxation, and we are treated as if we were insolent and impertinent when we ask that they bear their proper proportion.

This is all, Mr. President, that I care to say at the present time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kansas takes his seat I desire to ask him a question in relation to the graduated income amendment which he proposes to offer, and which I understand is in the interest of the plain people of the country in moderate circumstances.

In San Francisco alone, in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, we have one hundred and twenty-odd thousand depositors in the savings banks. Some of those banks have as much as $30,000,000. We will suppose that in one of those savings banks there are $25,000,000. Four per cent upon $25,000,000 is $100,000. Under this proposed amendment, if I understand it correctly, the bank would be compelled to pay 5 per cent upon that income.

The question which occurs to me is how are these wage-earners, these mechanics, these poor servant girls who have from week to week and month to month made their deposits in the bank as a profitable investment, to pay the income tax of 5 per cent, and is it not discriminating against the very class of people whom my friend wants to benefit?

Mr. PEFFER. In the first place, the object of the amendment is not specially to benefit any class of people, but it is to procure revenue for the Government from sources that are amply able to supply it.

In the second place, answering the other part of the Senator's question, if the Senator will examine the bill further along he will find that the details classifying the different grades of incomes and for the purpose of exempting the classes of savings and investments to which he refers and others are quite amply arranged; and we will come to those provisions as we go along with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I congratulate the majority of the Senate upon its new leadership. The Senator from Kansas has taken pains to inform the Senate and the country that the income-tax provision which we are discussing now is a doctrine which belongs peculiarly and almost exclusively to his party. There are some upon this side of the Chamber who, until that statement was made, labored under the delusion that in some form or other this is a Democratic doctrine. The Senator from Kansas insists that the majority must not take the wind out of the sails of the Populist party by adopting the doctrine. The Senator from Kansas is right. This is one of the first principles ever enunciated by the Populist party. They have adhered to that principle in season and out of season for a number of years. They have been constant in its advocacy, and I suppose they are now about to witness the triumph of that principle in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, in what I said in explaining my position to-day I intended to cast no improper reflection upon the Populists or Socialists as citizens of our country. The Senator says that I have not defined what constitutes a Socialist or a Populist. There are differences of opinion in the public mind as to what the Socialists believe in. If I understand it correctly, they believe in a paternal government; they believe in the redistribution of property; they believe——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I am speaking of the Socialists now, not the Populists.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question at this point. I understood him to say that the Populist party believes in a redistribution of property.

Mr. HILL. I said I was speaking of the Socialist party. I shall come to the Populist party in a few moments.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply wish to say to the Senator from New York——

Mr. HILL. The Senator need not reply to a suggestion I have not made.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope he will treat it with all candor. There is no more alliance between the Socialist organization of the United States and the Populist party than there is between the Democratic party or the Republican party and the Socialist party.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator oblige the Senate and myself by giving us his idea of what the Socialist party believe in?

Mr. ALLEN. I can only state in a general way that I understand they believe in a community of interests. I know nothing about the ramifications of their doctrine. I hope the Senator from New York will be candid—I believe him to be a candid man—and frankly state to the country, if he has not known until this time that the Populist party is a distinct organization, with not the slightest connection with socialism as it is commonly understood, and that Populism simply means that this Government is a government of the people and shall be administered by the people of this country in their interest.

Mr. HILL. The Senator's illustration of what the Populist party believe in is a pretty general statement. I suppose all good citizens might indorse that portion of the doctrine.

Mr. ALLEN. I may say to the Senator from New York that I do not live among Socialists. There is not a Socialist in the State of Nebraska that I know of, and there never was. Hailing from the State of New York, where Socialism reigns to a considerable extent, the Senator from New York ought to be somewhat familiar with it. I know nothing about it myself except in a general way.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has not given us a very clear idea of what the Populist party believe in. I know something about the Socialists. I started to say that they believe in a paternal government. They believe in the limitation of the property which men may acquire. They believe in the regulation of wages. They believe in a redistribution of property. They believe in sharing property alike, as one family. They are like the Populist party in the fact that they both believe in an income tax. I do not know that I can tell the precise difference.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to say, if the Senator will permit me, that if the Socialists believe in an income tax, in that respect they agree with the Populist party, and that is the only particular in which there is any similitude between the two organizations.

Mr. HILL. Are you entirely sure of that?

Mr. ALLEN. I am, sir.

Mr. HILL. Do not the Populist party believe in the governmental control and management and ownership of the railroads, the telegraphs, the banks, and other institutions of the country?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; not in that sense.

Mr. HILL. In what sense, then?

Mr. ALLEN. The Populist party does believe in the gradual reduction of the railroads and telegraphs of this country to Government ownership in the interest of the Government——

Mr. HILL. No matter in whose interest.

Mr. ALLEN. But it does not believe—and the Senator oversteps himself when he says so, no Populist on the face of the earth ever said it—that the Government should own the banks of the country or institutions of that kind. The Senator from New York simply shows that he knows nothing at all about the Populist party when he makes that statement.

Mr. HILL. We are finding out a good deal about it.

Mr. ALLEN. You will find out about it after awhile.

Mr. HILL. Do I understand that the Senator believes, like the Socialists in that respect, that the Government should control and manage and own the telegraphs of the country and the railroads of the country?

Mr. ALLEN. I have said to the Senator from New York——

Mr. HILL. Can not the Senator answer the question directly?

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will be candid enough to accept my statement. I do not know what the Socialists believe.

Mr. HILL. I have informed you to some extent.

Mr. ALLEN. I know you have informed me, but if you have informed me as correctly what the Socialists believe as you have what the Populists believe, then I am betrayed into believing that you know nothing about either one of them.

Mr. HILL. I think I have described both nearly accurately. I have shown that in a general way both believe in paternal government. I have shown in a general way that both propose to control some of the most important institutions of the country. I have shown that both agree in an income tax. You may differ in some small details, and undoubtedly you do. So do all parties. I might define the difference in this way: The Populist party is the Socialist party. The Socialist party is the Populist party, only a little more so. Once a man was asked to define the difference between rheumatism and gout, and he said "The gout is the rheumatism, only a little more so." And so I say the Socialist party is the Populist party, only a little more so. They are simply in advance of your propositions, just as undoubtedly this income-tax principle is ahead of the views of some of the people.

I have no doubt that very soon we shall have some Democrats advocating these principles. Where you once make a false step it is not easy to stop. I saw in the other House the other day, ten or twelve Democratic Representives, elected by Democratic votes, stand up in that House and seemed to be proud of the fact that they are advocates of the Henry George single-tax theory, and the next thing we shall hear will be that doctrine crowded down our throats upon some sort of an appropriation bill or tariff bill. They are simply a little ahead of us. We are coming up to them rather slowly on some principles of tariff——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does he not understand that the income tax is supported by the Socialist party, by the Populist party, and by the Democratic party with a few honorable exceptions, simply as a means for the redistribution of wealth? I have heard no other argument advanced on the part of any advocate of this scheme except that it is in part a proper redistribution of the wealth of the country.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator——

Mr. VEST. Did not the party of the Senator from Rhode Island originate it in this country? Did you not propose the first income-tax law?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from New York will yield to me, I should like to challenge the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island. I never heard that statement made by either party as to the income tax—never.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. HILL. I had.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New York permit me a question, or a suggestion?

Mr. HILL. Yes; a single question.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a suggestion. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that both the Republican and Democratic parties have committed themselves to an income tax. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], whom I do not see in his seat at this time, in a speech delivered in this Chamber a few years ago, defended it as the most equitable and just tax that was ever laid by the Government. It has been defended by the Supreme Court of the United States as a just and equitable tax. So both the Republican and Democratic parties have been guilty of this——

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Nebraska wants to make a speech he will have ample opportunity when I get through. If he wants to ask a question I am always glad to hear him, and will answer as best I can.

Mr. President, as there seem to be no advocates of an income tax upon this side of the Chamber who are willing to defend it, of course it is proper——

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not need any defense.

Mr. HILL. It is proper, of course, that the Senator from Kansas should assume the advocacy of it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly the Senator from New York does not want to make a statement of that kind. I fairly and squarely and openly defended the income tax when this debate was opened.

Mr. COCKRELL. And nineteen out of every twenty Democrats are in favor of it.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator does not mean to say that nobody on this side of the Chamber is ready to defend the tax?

Mr. HILL. The Senator will understand, I suppose, that I was referring to the debate to-day.

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, well, I did not so understand.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that he did, in his first speech made in defense of this bill, advocate the income tax. I will go further, and state that I have looked up the Senator's record, and that years ago he advocated an income tax in a speech in the other House. I will say, however, that the income tax was dropped substantially by the common consent of nearly all of both parties.

The Senator from Kansas has referred to the fact (I do not know what relevancy it has to this discussion) that the people in Massachusetts are richer than the people of Kansas. Sir, Massachusetts is an old settled country. It would be strange, indeed, if in the short time Kansas has been in the Union, Kansas should have acquired the wealth existing in the State of Massachusetts. I do not understand from his remarks that he intends to say that Massachusetts people have acquired their wealth except under the laws of the land, honestly and fairly. He does not make any such charge.

The Senator also speaks of the high rate of interest the citizens of Kansas are compelled to pay for money. Who fixes that rate of interest? Is not that rate of interest fixed by your State government; or, if it is not fixed by your State government, has not your State government the right to fix the rate of interest, and fix it at any rate it pleases. If the people of Kansas are obliged to pay 10 per cent for money they can regulate it by the laws of their own State.

The Senator says that the West and South have made the East. He says, "We have opened up your harbors." Our harbors were opened up before your part of the country was in a state of civilization.

Sir, I am not here to cast any reflection upon any portion of our country. I am simply here to suggest that our interests are in common.

A man said to me the other day; "I do not know that I blame you, Senator, for opposing the income tax. Of course it taxes the great State of New York; you will probably have to pay at least a third of the entire taxes of the country; but it is not specially aimed at New York. That is a mere circumstance. It is aimed at the wealth of the country, and you happen to have the wealth of the country." The suggestion which I made, and suggest now, is that then we might prepare a bill here for the purpose of taxing the prairies of the West and the plantations of the South; the tax would not be aimed at the West and South; it would tax you simply because of the fact that you have all the prairies and all the plantations.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator knows that would be regarded as direct taxation and we could not levy such a tax except in proportion to population. We would get it then.

Mr. HILL. I am not so certain what this Government can do in the light of legislation which is now taking place. I am not so certain that some one will not come in here from Kansas or somewhere else and claim that it is constitutional. I think it would be just as constitutional, just as proper as this income tax.

I have hoped that with the Supreme Court as now constituted this income tax will be declared unconstitutional. I have never talked with a lawyer or the bench of a court who has not stated that he believes this is a direct tax, and therefore unconstitutional.

I am not talking in the face of the former decision, but when you speak of the decision made by the Supreme Court and say that it was a proper decision and really comprehends the whole situation of the time, I have only to refer you to the numerous other decisions made in those war times, at least when we Democrats did not believe in the propriety of the decisions. Sir, the times are changing; the courts are changing, and I believe that this tax will be declared unconstitutional. At least I hope so.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say that I hold in my hand the 102d of the United States Supreme Court Reports, the case of Springer vs. The United States, page 586, which cites the previous cases upon the subject of direct taxation; and I wish to say to the Senator from New York that I believe——

Mr. HILL. I am entirely aware of that decision, and referred to it in my previous address. The Senator can give me no information on that subject.

Mr. ALLEN. I can give you some information you have not given the Senate, and that is, that for seventy-five years the Supreme Court of the United States have held that nothing is a direct tax under the Constitution of the United States except a capitation tax and a tax upon land; and they have held that this was a capitation tax.

Mr. HILL. They have never held that doctrine, except in that Springer case.

Mr. ALLEN. They held it in——

Mr. HILL. They referred, of course, to other decisions from which they were disposed to make that decision.

Mr. ALLEN. They held——

Mr. HILL. Wait a moment; I can not yield to the Senator. You can make a speech afterwards. I yield if you desire to ask me a particular question, but I must object to the Senator, every time I take the floor, seeking to inject a speech into my remarks. I decline to yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to say that that was held in the Hilton case nearly seventy-five years ago.

Mr. HILL. They have not decided that particular question.

Now, Mr. President, we stand confronted with the fact that this is a tax advocated by both the Populist and the Socialist parties. That is conceded. It was suggested here in the discussion which was going on that both parties were responsible for an income tax in its original enactment. Sir, it was enacted during the war. It was enacted by both parties. It was enacted as a war tax, defended as a war tax, defended because it was necessary, and, like all war taxes, it did not proceed upon any principle; it proceeded upon the ground of absolute necessity. And yet we are told now that both parties must be regarded as having been committed as to its propriety. It was repealed by both parties and enacted by both parties. There is no reason for its enactment now.

The Senator from Indiana interrupted me to say that this income tax had advocates upon this side of the Chamber. That is true, and the last man who advocated it was the Senator himself, who showed conclusively that the tax is not necessary for the revenues of the Government. According to his own figures such a tax need not be imposed.

Mr. President, this discussion started upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. In so far as that amendment proposes to make the exemption $1,000 instead of $4,000 I agree with him. If we are to have an income tax, let it be a consistent one. Let it be based upon principle. Let it be something that we can defend. Let us have some precedent for it in some country somewhere on the face of the globe.

Where is your precedent for this? Has anybody cited it? Where can it be found? If you are adopting English customs and English laws, then take English exemptions. It has been shown here in the debate that $750 is the only exemption allowed in England. Here the exemption is $4,000. Why was it placed at this large amount? Has anybody explained? The Senator from Indiana did not explain in his speech.

So far as a graduated income tax is concerned, the Senator from Kansas is consistent in it. It is approved in the Populist platform. He is right in advocating it here. I do not believe in it. I believe that if incomes are to be taxed, substantially all the incomes should be taxed.

I believe that the exemption should be a small amount corresponding with exemptions as to similar matters. The property of a man is liable to execution, but a small amount, of course, is exempted for the benefit of himself and family, though never a large amount; homestead exemptions are simply for a small amount. The whole theory of exemptions is that they are matters of charity and governmental favor. To talk about exemptions below $4,000 is ridiculous and absurd, and it brings the party into public contempt that enacts it.

I can not vote for the full proposition of the Senator from Kansas. A separate amendment unquestionably will be offered for $1,000; and I shall vote for that, though not because I favor an income tax at all. Then I think it will be proper to offer another one for $2,000 and another one for $3,000. Let us line up on this question. Do Senators know who first started this proposition of $4,000? Does it meet your approval? I do not believe it. Do you think you can defend it? I do not believe Senators around me think they can.

I explained in my remarks made in April last just how much property $4,000 of income would represent. I do not care to repeat what I then said upon that question. Four thousand dollars' exemption is not for the benefit of the poor man, because a man who has $4,000 income derived from an investment in property is a man fairly well off.

The point to which I desire also to call attention (and I might as well speak of that now as any other time) is the tax of 2 per cent. I desire to move an amendment at the proper time reducing that rate to 1 per cent.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report (in which not this tax was recommended, but simply a limited and restricted tax upon corporations) recommended a tax of 1 per cent. The President of the United States in his annual message, in which that same kind of a tax was recommended, did not recommend 2 per cent or even 1 per cent. He simply says "a small tax." I think 2 per cent is unnecessarily large, unless there can be produced from the Treasury Department or some expert some carefully prepared statistics showing that this amount is necessary for the Government.

One per cent, in my judgment, will produce adequate revenue. I regret to differ with my friend from Kansas upon this subject. I have agreed with him frequently when I thought he was right, but I disagree with him now when I think he is wrong.

Mr. President, a graduated income tax is not necessary in this country. It is not demanded by business interests. If you are to have an income tax at all in this bill, let it be a certain rate of percentage fixed upon a given amount of income.

So far as that is concerned, I agree with the committee.

Mr. President, I did not vote upon the question as to when the income tax should go in operation. As I do not believe in a permanent income tax and I do not believe in a temporary income tax, of course I should prefer it for a shorter time than for a longer time, as Gen. Grant once said he preferred to pay a large sum to a larger sum, and so I should be in favor of the shorter term. But why is the limit fixed here that the income tax shall exist until 1900? I have already called the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that no political party which has been approved by the people has advocated this tax. I have called your attention to the fact that the Representatives in the other House who were the first to vote for the imposition of this tax were not elected upon any such issue.

Why adopt this provision now? Why insert it in this tariff-reform bill, so called? There was no necessity for it. Why not wait until the people next fall can have a chance to pass upon the question; and if in the elections this fall it is discovered that they approve of this measure, it can then be enacted in due time.

The object is to place this tax beyond the control of the next Congress. Of course, the President, if he approves the bill, will stand committed to this tax for five years, and the members of Congress who may be returned in response to the voice of the people will be powerless to carry into effect the demands of the people, because you have put it out of the power of the people to secure a remedy.

That is the object. You propose to extend its existence until after three Congressional elections have been held; and you do it for the very purpose of thwarting the will of the people. Therefore, I say a proper amendment would be to limit its operation for one year, and if the people next fall see fit to repudiate this income tax, then it would stand more of a chance of being repealed than if the time for its expiration had been put off for a long period.

But I am not here simply to quibble upon details of time. I am opposed to this as a system; I am opposed to it because it is un-Democratic; I am opposed to it because it is a war tax which our people did not vote for; I am opposed to it because I am opposed to the procedure of inserting such a tax in a tariff-reform bill.

As I said to-day, I repeat now, could you not pass a tariff-reform bill without this tax? Is this the sine qua non? Will you have nothing else? Do you mean to say that tariff reform can go to the dogs, but you must have this income tax? That is the spirit which seems to actuate those who urge this tax upon the people.

Mr. HARRIS. My anxiety to get on with the bill induces me to move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. PEFFER. On that I should like to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I have every disposition not to thwart the fullest debate that may be desired by Senators; but after three months of constant discussion—and the income tax has had a very large amount of it—I regret the appeal and the necessity of yielding to it, but I must yield to it, if Senators insist upon debating this amendment. Does the Senator insist upon it?

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the honorable Senator from Tennessee that this is a great, far-reaching, and very difficult question of public law and constitutional law. It has only been discussed incidentally, with the exception of speeches by one or two Senators, when the other provisions of this tariff bill were up. It does not seem to me, therefore, that the fact that the tariff has been pending since the 7th of May, or whenever the modified tariff scheme was finally agreed upon, now not less than five weeks, is a reason for pressing it forward.

Of course the Senator from Tennessee knows very well that if any one desires to engage with him in a contest of parliamentary tactics, there are ways enough to secure all the debate which any Senator should desire; as, for instance, suppose when a Senator moves an amendment, he accompanies it by a motion to indefinitely postpone the bill, then debate is unlimited debate, and that can not be laid on the table. But nobody wants to go into that.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not complain of the promptitude with which I withdrew the motion at his request.

Mr. HOAR. No; I only complain of the promptitude with which the Senator rose——

Mr. HARRIS. I am anxious to reach an end of the consideration of this bill. Of course, as the Senator from Massachusetts desired to debate the amendment, I withdrew the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I was speaking of a general policy. The Senator very courteously has withdrawn the motion.

Mr. President, I was somewhat surprised that the usually courteous Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] not only misunderstood so entirely something which I said, but that he adhered to his statement resting upon that misunderstanding after I had disclaimed the argument to which he undertook to reply.

I never said as a reason for objecting to the income tax that the men whom it reached would commit frauds to get rid of it. I never thought so. On the contrary, I am in favor of a high protective tariff, and I concede that raising money in that way presents a hundred temptations and a hundred opportunities for fraud where an income tax would present ten.

What I said very briefly was that human nature everywhere was such that men disliked to have the details of their private affairs made public, especially to their rivals and competitors, and I illustrated it by the case of a man who was engaged in a very large textile industry, and who made all his profits when his competitors were losing by the saving which he made in the cost of pasteboard boxes in which his material was delivered. That is all I said on that subject.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas says that the people of Massachusetts and of the East seem to be plundering his people, charging them great rates of interest, and are getting rich, while his people are getting poor. The census settles all that. The reports of the census show that during the last ten years the population of Kansas has been growing marvelously, as compared with ours, and they have gained at the rate of $148 per capita in their accumulated wealth, while we have gained only at the rate of $23 per capita—over seven times as much. They have been piling up money out in the excellent, honest State of Kansas seven times as much as we, and increasing very much faster than we have in the number of men. Where does the plunder come in if that census is to be trusted?

It is true that the rates of interest in new States are greater than in old States, and that you have to pay 6 or 8 per cent in Kansas, where you pay 4½ and 5 per cent in New England and New York. The reason of that is obvious. In the first place, the investment is at a distance, and not next door; and in the next place, the rate of interest depends on the sense of obligation of the debtor. It is a question solely of security, and the rate depends upon the condition of the laws for the collection of debts and the condition of public sentiment, which treats an obligation to pay them as an obligation of honor. Wherever in the United States the rate of interest is high, except in fairly new communities where the soil is just being broken, it is owing to some condition of the law or of public opinion.

Do you suppose any man in Wall street or in State street prefers to have his money lie idle in the bank to getting 5 or 6 per cent in Kansas? Do you suppose that any man in Wall street prefers his money to lie idle to loaning it to a town in Massachusetts or a town in Connecticut at 3 per cent? One of the Connecticut towns borrowed for thirty years at a rate averaging 2.7 per cent. I suppose those sharks in Boston or in New York would have been very willing to lend their money at 5 per cent, if there was an equal certainty of its return.

Mr. President, I do not like to be called upon to answer an attack on the State of Massachusetts from the State of Kansas. There is not a profounder feeling of affection on the part of one political community on this earth for another than that which prevails universally in the bosoms of the people of the State I and my colleague represent towards those from the State of Kansas. The history of her freedom, the history of her struggle for life, the history of the brave deeds of the men who went upon her virgin soil is a Massachusetts story.

> Who crossed the prairies, as of old
> Their fathers crossed the sea,
> To make the East, as they the West,
> The homestead of the free.

The men of Massachusetts and of other New England States helped do that thing, which is one of the noblest and proudest exploits in the history of human liberty; and nothing which the Senator from Kansas can say, whether in the heat of debate or in the coolness of reflection, can extort from me any sarcasm or gibe for the people of that glorious State, or can excite in the breast of any true son of Massachusetts anything but a feeling of affection and pride for the people of that noble Commonwealth.

I wish to say in regard to what the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] said about the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Springer vs. the United States, 102 United States Reports, that that decision was made by six judges; only two, Mr. Justice Hunt and Mr. Justice Clifford, then one of the two Democratic representatives upon that bench, taking no part whatever in the decision. It was a conclusion in regard to which the profession in this country was divided; and the one essential consideration in regard to that decision is that it did not appear that any part of the income tax assessed upon Mr. Springer, the plaintiff in that case, was assessed on the income from real estate. He returned an income of $50,000, but it does not appear from what source it came.

So, the great question—it being conceded that a tax upon real estate is unconstitutional, except when made in proportion to population (and whatever else a direct tax means it means that)—is still unsettled by judicial decision in this country whether, being prohibited to tax real estate as a principle, you can get around it by taxing the income of real estate, by taxing everything which gives it its value. Real estate from which an income can not be obtained is valueless, and untaxable on that account.

There being a constitutional provision adapted and designed to prohibit a tax on real estate by the General Government, except in a certain way which nobody would resort to, I hold it preposterous to say that you may say to the owners of that real estate, "we will tax you in proportion to the income which it yields." It is the same thing, not universally, but generally and in substance, and that is an open question in this country as a judicial question. I should advise a client to test it if I were consulted as counsel; and I warn gentleman in this body who are voting for this thing in obedience to a supposed party exigency, in opposition to their individual judgment, that they are very likely to imperil the entire provision if they leave this matter of the income from real estate to be included in it.

Mr. President, whatever speech or whatever silence may prevail in this Chamber, I know too well the able lawyers on the other side of this aisle not to be sure that they agree, I do not mean in the final conclusion, but in the gravity, in the importance of every suggestion I have made. Will my honored friend from Alabama, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. PUGH], or my honored friend from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], one of the most eminent lawyers of the always able bar of that great State, or my honorable friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], whom his countrymen have thought of as fitted for the very highest judicial position in this country, or my honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], with his long experience, rise in his seat and say here that he thinks that it is not a question of the gravest doubt whether, the Constitution prohibiting you to tax real estate, you can turn around and tax the income from real estate? The courts have said nothing about it; the question has not yet been decided, and you have either to modify this bill or to encounter the question.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator withdraw that motion?

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GRAY. No; I beg the Senator's pardon; I shall not ask it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], who has been called from the Chamber. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and make this announcement for the day.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. BATE (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). I desire to say that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has just received a telegram announcing the death of his brother, Irby Morgan, at Nashville, Tenn., and will not be in the Senate Chamber this evening.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], but I have received a message from him that he favors the income tax, and therefore I take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], who has been called away on account of sickness in his family, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but I desire to state that he agrees with me on this vote, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and voted supposing that he was in the Chamber. I understand he has not voted, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I inquire if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has not voted.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 5; as follows:

CONTUMACIOUS WITNESSES.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to make two reports from the special committee to investigate the charges of bribery, one in relation to the refusal to answer of Henry O. Havemeyer, and the other in relation to the refusal of Mr. Searles. To these reports are appended the views personally entertained by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I move that the reports be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The reports referred to are as follows:

[Senate Report No. 485, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

June 21, 1894.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Special Committee to Investigate Attempts at Bribery, etc., submitted the following report:

The special committee, under and in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of May 17, A. D. 1894, as follows:

"Whereas it has been stated in the Sun, a newspaper published in New York, that bribes have been offered to certain Senators to induce them to vote against the pending tariff bill; and

"Whereas it has also been stated in a signed article in The Press, a newspaper published in Philadelphia, that the sugar schedule has been made up as it now stands in the proposed amendment in consideration of large sums of money paid for campaign purposes of the Democratic party: Therefore,

"Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate these charges and to inquire further whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes or to secure or defeat legislation, and whether any Senator has been or is speculating in what are known as sugar stocks during the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate, and with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

"Resolved further, That said committee be authorized to investigate and report upon any charge or charges which may be filed before it alleging that the act on of any Senator has been corruptly or improperly influenced in the consideration of said bill, or that any attempt has been made to so influence legislation"— have attended to their duties so far as they have been able, but in certain respects have been prevented by reason of the matters hereinafter stated, and ask leave to report in part as follows:

In pursuance of said resolution the said committee met in the Capitol on the 21st day of May, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., and after the examination of certain matters embraced in the first paragraph of the said resolution, the committee proceeded to investigate further the matters submitted to them by the said resolution, and on the 12th day of June, A. D. 1894, the committee being duly assembled, one Henry O. Havemeyer, who had been duly subpœnaed and sunmoned as a witness to appear before said committee, then and there appeared and submitted to be examined as a witness. The witness was duly sworn by the chairman of said committee.

After certain testimony had been given by him his examination was, at his request, continued until the 13th day of June, A. D. 1894, at which date he appeared, and the testimony of the said Henry O. Havemeyer having been resumed, further proceedings were had before the committee and the following testimony was taken, in the course of which he was asked certain questions, to which questions he made the following answers and refusals to answer:

Senator ALLEN. Had you or the sugar-refining company contributed any to the campaign fund in New York last year?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. The Democratic campaign fund?

Senator ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Do you mean the national campaign fund?

Senator ALLEN. The Democratic State campaign fund of last year?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I will have to answer that in the affirmative.

Senator ALLEN. Relatively, to what amount?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. To a moderate amount.

Senator ALLEN. Have you any objection to stating what it was?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I will have to look that up. I have not charged my mind with it.

Senator ALLEN. Did you also contribute something to the Republican campaign fund?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I will have to look that up.

Senator ALLEN. What is your recollection as to the fact?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. The local fund?

Senator ALLEN. Yes; the State fund; that is, for the State campaign.

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We always do that. I have not the amount in my mind.

Senator ALLEN. So you contributed as a matter of fact to both parti s?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I will not say I contributed to the Republican party without refreshing my memory.

Senator ALLEN. Is it to your best recollection that you did contribute to both the Republican and Democratic campaign funds in New York?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I do not think we did contribute to the Republican.

Senator ALLEN. In 1892 did you contribute to either party?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. The local parties?

Senator ALLEN. The national parties?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir; but always to the local parties. Let that be distinct.

Senator ALLEN. You contributed to the local party, that is, the State party, in 1892?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I would have to refresh my memory on that. I do not think we did.

Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute to either party or both parties in the State of New York in the election of 1892?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I do not think we did.

Senator ALLEN. You do not think you did?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Have you a distinct recollection that you did not?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. My recollection of it is that we made no contributions during the year 1892.

Senator ALLEN. Did any member of the American Sugar Refining Company contribute to the campaign in New York in 1892?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Not that I am aware of.

Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute individually?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. To neither party?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. And you know of no one who did contribute?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir. Contributions to local political organizations have always been made by corporations, before the trust and by the trust and the American Sugar Refining Company, and no doubt will continue to be. It is a very suitable and proper thing to do.

Senator ALLEN. You say it is a suitable and proper thing to do?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Why should the American Sugar Refining Company contribute to either of the political parties in the State of New York?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We have large interests in this State; police protection and fire protection. They need everything that the city furnishes and gives, and they have to support these things. Every individual and corporation and firm, trust, or whatever you call it, do these things, and we do them.

Senator ALLEN. And you contribute to both parties with the expectation of whichever party succeeds your interests will be guarded?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We have a good deal of protection for our contribution.

Senator ALLEN. You expect protection from whichever party succeeds?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Do you expect that simply from the Democratic party?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We expect protection from the police and fire department, and anything that the State local organization can give.

Senator ALLEN. Therefore you feel at liberty to contribute to both parties?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It depends. In the State of New York, where the Democratic majority is between 40,000 and 50,000, we throw it their way. In the State of Massachusetts where the Republican party is doubtful, they probably have the call.

Senator ALLEN. In the State of Massachusetts do you contribute anything?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Very likely.

Senator ALLEN. What is your best recollection as to contributions made by your company in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I could not name the amount.

Senator ALLEN. However, in the State of New York you contribute to the Democratic party, and in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts you contribute to the Republican party?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It is my impression that wherever there is a dominant party, wherever the majority is very large, that is the party that gets the contribution, because that is the party which controls the local matters.

Senator ALLEN. Then, the sugar trust is a Democrat in a Democratic State and a Republican in a Republican State?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. As far as local matters are concerned, I think that is about it.

Senator ALLEN. In the State of Maine you control the refinery at Portland, do you not?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. That is defunct. We would not give anything to the State of Maine.

Senator ALLEN. In the State of Pennsylvania where do your contributions go?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I will have to look that up.

Senator ALLEN. Pennsylvania is a Republican State, and your contributions probably go to the Republican party, do they not?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It would be a local matter. If Philadelphia was——

Senator ALLEN. In the State of your nativity, or the nativity of your corporation, New Jersey, where do your contributions go?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I will have to look that up.

Senator ALLEN. I understand New Jersey is invariably a Democratic State. It would naturally go the Democratic party.

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Under the theory I have suggested if they were there it would naturally go to them.

Senator ALLEN. What, in round numbers, is the amount annually contributed by the American Sugar Refining Company to the different political parties for campaign purposes?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. There is no fixed amount. I could not guess at it.

Senator ALLEN. Does it amount to $100,000?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Oh, no.

Senator ALLEN. Did the American Sugar Refining Company contribute anything in 1892 towards securing the nomination of any particular individual to the office of President of the United States?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Nothing in a national shape in any manner, shape, or form.

Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute to what is known as the "Anti-Snapper fund?"

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. You did not contribute to that at all?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. There is no doubt about positiveness on that point.

Senator ALLEN. In the State of California, did you contribute to the campaign fund of the Democratic or Republican party there?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I know nothing about that.

Senator ALLEN. That is the Western Refining Company, in which you have a half-interest. Does that contribute anything?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I know nothing about that.

Senator ALLEN. In the State of Louisiana you contribute, however, do you not?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I know nothing about that.

Senator ALLEN. Who would know about Louisiana and California?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I believe Mr. Spreckels is the president of the Western refinery.

Senator ALLEN. And this money that you contribute to these different parties for campaign purposes——

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Local campaign purposes.

Senator ALLEN. Certainly; local campaign purposes—that money comes out of the corporation of the sugar refining company?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. And is a part of the expenses of the company?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Charged up on your books as expenses?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. And the books of your refining company would show the amount of money which you have annually contributed to the respective political parties and the State in which it was contributed, and the party to which it was contributed, would they not?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I don't think it shows in that form.

Senator ALLEN. How would it show—as so much money?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It would show that a payment was made, and that payment would have to be explained by the party who made it.

Senator ALLEN. Made to some particular individual?

Mr. HEVEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. He would have to render an account, which would not go upon the books, as to the manner in which that money was expended?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. He would have to expend it in conformity with the instructions of the board.

Senator ALLEN. The manner in which he did expend it actually would not appear upon your books?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Have you been in the habit of expending any money in connection with State Legislatures?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. You mean in the campaign of the State? You do not mean in the Legislature itself?

Senator ALLEN. I mean in influencing State legislation.

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Oh, never. We have contributed to local campaign parties, but never in the way of influencing legislation, and we never contribute with any obligation.

Senator LODGE. I will ask you whether any money has been contributed by the sugar trust or any member of the sugar trust toward securing or aiding the election of any United States Senator?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. None whatever.

Senator ALLEN. Can you ascertain the amount?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I can if I apply to the books.

Senator ALLEN. Will you do it?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. If it is the order of this committee, I will do anything.

Senator ALLEN. That is, as to each of the different States in which money has been contributed?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. If that is the order of the committee, I will get it.

Senator ALLEN. So far as I am concerned, I request of the witness, Mr. Havemeyer, to produce full data as to all money contributed by the American Sugar Refining Company, or any of its officers on its account or in its interest, in the different States of the Union, in 1892 and 1893, for political purposes of any political party, whether national, State, or local

Mr. HAVEMEYER. As to national, I will answer now, no; there is none. As to others, there is.

(The request of Senator ALLEN was granted by the committee, and Mr. Havemeyer asked an opportunity to consult his counsel before furnishing the data called for.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13, 1894.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

Present: Senator GRAY (the chairman), and Senators LINDSAY, DAVIS, LODGE, and ALLEN.

SWORN STATEMENT OF H. O. HAVEMEYER—CONTINUED.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Havemeyer, you have stated that you wish to make a statement of some kind.

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It is in relation to the answer that I am to make to that last interrogatory.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you a copy of it with you?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes, sir [handing a paper to the chairman].

The CHAIRMAN. The interrogatory is as follows:

"Senator ALLEN. So far as I am concerned, I request of the witness, Mr. Havemeyer, to produce full data as to all money contributed by the American Sugar Refining Company, or any of its officers, on its account or in its interest, in the different States of the Union in 1892 or 1893, for political purposes, to any political party, whether national, State, or local."

Mr. HAVEMEYER. While I am perfectly willing to answer any material matters, under advice of counsel I decline to answer about outside matters. I decline to answer about local contributions. I know of nothing given to the national campaign. There exists no bargain of any nature, and never claimed that the company was entitled to anything except what its merits required.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the answer you desire to make to this question?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. That is the answer.

* * * * * * * * *

Senator ALLEN. Since your examination yesterday you have consulted counsel as to the propriety of answering questions with reference to divulging the amount of money that you paid for election purposes in the different States?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. As to making any answer.

Senator ALLEN. And in declining to answer the question put to you I observed that you read your answer from a piece of paper?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Was that answer prepared by you or by your counsel?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. By me.

Senator ALLEN. Under the direction of your counsel?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. No, sir; under the advice of counsel.

Senator ALLEN. I do understand you, however, to say and repeat, that in States where you have a financial interest, at least where the sugar refining company has an interest as refiners, you do contribute to either the Democratic or Republican party, as one or the other may be in the ascendency in that State?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We do for local and State purposes, but not national.

Senator ALLEN. You never contribute to the campaign fund of a party in the minority?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We may; I will not say we do not.

Senator ALLEN. Your policy, however, is to stand in with the ruling power?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Not to "stand in," but to contribute to the campaign expenses of that party, for the reason that they, being in power and control, it could give us the protection we should have.

Senator ALLEN. And by that means you placate——

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Oh, no; there is no placation or obligation at all; nothing more than we consider the proper thing to do; everybody does it.

Senator ALLEN. Does any other corporation in these same States do the same thing that you know?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I understand every individual, corporation, and firm in existence do it in their respective States.

Senator ALLEN. So the American Sugar Refining Company's politics, so far as its contributions to the campaign fund is concerned, is controlled by the political complexion of the State in which it happens to have a particular refinery?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. The American Sugar Refining Company has no politics of any kind.

Senator ALLEN. Only the politics of business?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. Only the politics of business.

Senator LINDSAY. You say the company is separate and distinct from the officers and stockholders; each man has his own politics?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We have nothing to do with politics in any shape or manner. Our business is the refining of sugar at a slight profit that is consistent with a reasonable return on the industry.

A copy of the subpœna by which said witness was commanded to appear and testify before the committee at the time and place aforesaid, together with a copy of the certificate of service thereof is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A.

EXHIBIT A.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Congress of the United States:

To Henry O. Havemeyer, greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear before the special committee, appointed May 17, 1894, of the Senate of the United States forthwith, at the committee room Privileges and Elections, United States Senate, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject-matter under consideration by said committee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To Richard J. Bright, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 6th day of June in the year of our Lord 1894.

GEO. GRAY,
Chairman Special Committee.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I do appoint and hereby empower B. W. Layton to serve this subpœna, and to exercise all the authority in relation thereto with which I am vested by the within order.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1894.

I made service of the within subpœna through my deputy, B. W. Layton, by the within-named Henry O. Havemeyer at No. 117 Wall street, New York City, at 11:30 o'clock a. m., on the 7th day of June, 1894.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, Senate of the United States.

In the opinion of the committee each of the questions put to said witness was a proper question, and pertinent to the question under inquiry before the committee, and was necessary to make the examination ordered by said resolution of the Senate, and that said witness is in contempt of the Senate, and merits to be dealt with for his misconduct; and that said witness, by his various refusals to answer the questions as herein set forth, has violated the provisions of that certain act of Congress in such cases made and provided, being chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which chapter is as follows:

"SEC. 102, Revised Statutes. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

"SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to digrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

"SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned, as mentioned in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action."

Wherefore, the committee report to the Senate to the end that the President of the Senate may certify as to said witness his aforesaid failure to testify and his aforesaid refusals to answer, and all the facts herein, under the seal of the Senate, to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, in order that said witness may be proceeded against in manner and form provided by law.

C. K. DAVIS.
H. C. LODGE.
WM. V. ALLEN.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF MR. ALLEN, OF THE COMMITTEE.

In addition to the above recommendation of the committee regarding the witness, Henry O. Havemeyer, I have to say that I think he ought to be brought to the bar of the Senate and be required to there purge himself of the contempt of which he is guilty, or be summarily punished for refusing to do so.

I, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution by the Senate:

"Whereas Henry O. Havemeyer, a witness, was heretofore duly summoned by a select committee of the Senate, and being lawfully required to testify before said committee has, as appears by the report of said committee, refused to answer pertinent and material questions propounded to him by said committee: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant in due form under his hand and the seal of the Senate, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate the body of said Henry O. Havemeyer, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time to keep the said Havemeyer in custody to await the further order of the Senate."

Respectfully submitted.

WM. V. ALLEN.

[Senate Report No. 486, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

June 21, 1894.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Special Committee to Investigate Attempts at Bribery etc., submitted the following report:

The special committee, under and in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of May 17, A. D. 1894, as follows:

"Whereas it has been stated in the Sun, a newspaper published in New York, that bribes have been offered to certain Senators to induce them to vote against the pending tariff bill; and

"Whereas it has also been stated in a signed article in The Press, a newspaper published in Philadelphia, that the sugar schedule has been made up as it now stands in the proposed amendment in consideration of large sums of money paid for campaign purposes of the Democratic party: Therefore,

"Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate these charges and to inquire further whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes or to secure or defeat legislation, and whether any Senator has been or is speculating in what are known as sugar stocks during the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate and with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

"Resolved further, That said committee be authorized to investigate and report upon any charge or charges which may be filed before it alleging that the action of any Senator has been corruptly or improperly influenced in the consideration of said bill, or that any attempt has been made to so influence legislation"— have attended to their duties so far as they have been able, but in certain respects have been prevented by reason of the matters hereinafter stated, and ask leave to report in part, as follows:

In pursuance of said resolution the said committee met in the Capitol on the 21st day of May, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., and, after the examination of certain matters embraced in the first paragraph of the said resolution, the committee proceeded to investigate further the matters submitted to them by the said resolution, and on the 13th day of June, A. D. 1894, the committee being duly assembled, one John E. Searles, who had been duly subpœnaed and summoned as a witness to appear before said committee, then and there appeared and submitted to be examined as a witness. The witness was duly sworn by the chairman of said committee.

In the course of his testimony the said witness was asked certain questions and refused to answer the same. The testimony in the course of which such questions were asked him and such refusals by him made is as follows:

Senator ALLEN. I will pass that question. I see you and I radically disagree upon that, and probably always will. The American Sugar Refining Company is in the habit of contributing money for campaign purposes to the different political parties, is it not?

Mr. SEARLES. It has done so; yes, sir.

Senator ALLEN. Has it done so each year of its existence?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not know that it has done so each year, but it has done so from time to time.

Senator ALLEN. Did it do so in 1892?

Mr. SEARLES. It did.

Senator ALLEN. In what States?

Mr. SEARLES. I can not enumerate the States.

Senator ALLEN. According to your best recollection, in what States?

Mr. SEARLES. I should not care to testify directly on that point, unless——

Senator ALLEN. The resolution embraces that inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. SEARLES). Unless what? Finish your sentence.

Mr. SEARLES. Unless it does come within the province of this inquiry. I do not understand that it does.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. SEARLES. Kindly show me how it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution under which we are acting reads in this way:

"Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate these charges, and to inquire further whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes, or to secure or defeat legislation."

Mr. SEARLES. In answer to that question with reference to any contributions to secure or defeat legislation, I answer emphatically, no.

Senator ALLEN. You misapprehend the scope of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we want to get at, whether there has been any.

Senator ALLEN. Let me show you where you misapprehend it:

"Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate these charges and to inquire further whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes, or to secure or defeat legislation."

There are several distinct propositions embraced in that.

Mr. SEARLES. There have been no contributions made by the company, to my knowledge, with any view to pending legislation on the sugar question.

The CHAIRMAN. Or to secure or defeat legislation?

Mr. SEARLES. Nor to secure or defeat legislation.

Senator ALLEN. I will ask you, in the language of this resolution, whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust or any person connected therewith to any political party for campaign purposes?

Mr. SEARLES. Such contributions have been made locally, but with no application, or with no purpose to influence legislation.

Senator ALLEN. In what States have contributions of that kind been made?

Mr. SEARLES. I can not answer definitely on that point.

Senator ALLEN. Have they been made in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. SEARLES. I am not certain as to that.

Senator ALLEN. Have they been made in the State of New York?

Mr. SEARLES. I think they have.

Senator ALLEN. Have they been made in the State of New Jersey?

Mr. SEARLES. I am not certain as to that.

Senator ALLEN. Have they been made in the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. SEARLES. Nor am I certain as to that.

Senator ALLEN. In the State of Ohio?

Mr. SEARLES. I have no knowledge of any such.

Senator ALLEN. How are these contributions made? That is, are they made and charged up to the company, or made by some officer or member of the company on behalf of the company?

Mr. SEARLES. They have been made by some officer of the company, usually, I think, by its president.

Senator ALLEN. And are charged to the expense account of the company, are they not?

Mr. SEARLES. I think they are.

Senator ALLEN. Would your books show a contribution to the campaign fund of any party?

Mr. SEARLES. No, sir.

Senator ALLEN. How is the entry made upon the books of the company?
Mr. SEARLES. I am not certain as to that. It has been made, I think, an individual matter.
Senator ALLEN. It would be charged to some member of the company.
Mr. SEARLES. I am not certain as to these entries, how they are made.
Senator ALLEN. What officer or member of the company usually disburses the money that is appropriated to campaign purposes?
Mr. SEARLES. I think that what has been done in that direction has usually been done through the president.
Senator ALLEN. Mr. H. O. Havemeyer?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. Does he make an account to the board of directors?
Mr. SEARLES. He does.
Senator ALLEN. Is it explained?
Mr. SEARLES. No, sir; there is no explanation.
Senator ALLEN. Just a verbal explanation?
Mr. SEARLES. That is all.
Senator ALLEN. There is no account of that that is carried back on the books after the expenditure of the money, is there?
Mr. SEARLES. I could not say as to how that is.
Senator ALLEN. If Mr. Havemeyer was charged with $100,000, to be expended in donations to political parties for campaign purposes, how would that item be balanced on the books?
Mr. SEARLES. I could not answer that question.
Senator ALLEN. You have access to the books, have you not?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. You have noticed these items, have you not?
Mr. SEARLES. I am aware that there are such entries?
Senator ALLEN. You are a member of the board of directors, are you not?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. And these matters have come before the board of directors for adjustment, have they not?
Mr. SEARLES. My impression is that they have been reported to the board.
Senator ALLEN. Do you know as a matter of fact that they have?
Mr. SEARLES. I think they have.
Senator ALLEN. What amount was expended by your company in the campaign of 1892?
Mr. SEARLES. I must decline to answer that question.
Senator ALLEN. On what grounds do you decline?
Mr. SEARLES. On the ground that it is not within the province of this inquiry.
Senator ALLEN. Do you decline because it would lead to further inquiries that would criminate you or anybody belonging to your organization?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline simply because I am advised that inquiries as to local contributions are not within the province of the committee.
Senator ALLEN. If you contributed to the campaign fund of 1892, when there was a Presidential election, members of Congress, and members of the Legislature, whose duty it was after being elected to select Senators and that selected Senators, one in the State of New York and the State of New Jersey, and these contributions were used for general election purposes there, you would not claim, then, it was donated for merely local purposes, municipal purposes, would you?
Mr. SEARLES. I have no knowledge of any such contributions.
Senator ALLEN. You are the treasurer of the company?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. And have been for the last two or three years or more?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. All money paid out by that company is paid out by you, is it not?
Mr. SEARLES. No, sir; not necessarily. It is paid only on my order or that of the president.
Senator ALLEN. Only on your order or that of the president?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. Have you paid out any money for campaign purposes during the years 1892 and 1893 as treasurer of the American Sugar Refining Company?
Mr. SEARLES. Only for such as I have spoken of.
Senator ALLEN. Local purposes?
Mr. SEARLES. That is all.
Senator ALLEN. When you say local purposes, you mean contributions to the State campaign fund?
Mr. SEARLES. I think that would be included.
Senator ALLEN. And that was in 1892?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. When Harrison and Cleveland were candidates for the Presidency?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. And it was to be used in the same election where these men were candidates, was it not?
Mr. SEARLES. I should think it was to be used at that time.
Senator ALLEN. You know as a matter of fact it was. Do you not know as a matter of fact it was to be used by the political party to whom it was contributed for all general purposes connected with the election that fall?
Mr. SEARLES. I do not know that.
Senator ALLEN. You supposed at the time it was to be used that way?
Mr. SEARLES. I have no knowledge of the way it was used—as to whether it was used for general purposes or not.
Senator ALLEN. Upon the question as to how it was used, or for whom it was used, or for what purpose it was used, you know nothing?
Mr. SEARLES, Precisely.
Senator ALLEN. And did not want to know anything at the time?
Mr. SEARLES. I made no inquiry, if that is what you mean.
Senator ALLEN. What sum did you contribute to the Democratic campaign fund in the State of New York in 1892 that was used for the purpose of conducting the campaign in that State, at which time Cleveland and Harrison were candidates for President of the United States?
Mr. SEARLES. I must decline to answer that question for the reasons stated.
Senator ALLEN. You did contribute some money, did you not?
Mr. SEARLES. I think an amount was contributed. Personally, I have no knowledge what it was now.
Senator ALLEN. And it was charged to the account of the American Sugar Refining Company?
Mr. SEARLES. Charged to the account of the American Sugar Refining Company,
Senator ALLEN. And you decline now to state the amount?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. Was it $100,000?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to state the amount.
Senator ALLEN. Was it over $100,000?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to say.
Senator ALLEN. Was it less than $100,000?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to state.
Senator ALLEN. Why do you decline to state?
Mr. SEARLES. Because I do not understand that is within the province of your inquiry.
Senator ALLEN. Do you not decline to state simply because you know it was disreputable and unlawful to contribute this money?
Mr. SEARLES. No, sir; I do not admit anything of the kind.
Senator ALLEN. You think it is perfectly laudable for the American Sugar Refining Company to contribute large sums of money, by the thousands of dollars, for the purpose of influencing elections in this country, do you?
Mr. SEARLES. I have always understood for many years that it is the custom of both parties to solicit from corporations and individuals contributions for the carrying on of their political campaigns, and that it is the custom of corporations and individuals to respond to such invitations. And with that understanding, and what I believe to be a general custom, the American Sugar Refining Company has made such contributions at times.
Senator ALLEN. Do you believe it is perfectly proper for a corporation, the value of whose stocks may be affected by national legislation, to contribute its funds to the success or defeat of one political party or the other?
Mr. SEARLES. I think as parties are now managed that is proper.
Senator ALLEN. And the American Sugar Refining Company, as a company, was actuated by a high sense of patriotic duty in contributing this money, I suppose?
Mr. SEARLES. That is a pleasant way of putting it.
Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute to the Democratic fund of New York?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to answer that question.
Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute to the Republican fund of New York?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to answer that also.
Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute to both of them?
Mr. SEARLES. I also decline to answer that.
Senator ALLEN. Did you contribute to the Populist fund of New York?
Mr. SEARLES. I also decline to answer that.
Senator ALLEN. Or the Prohibition fund, or any other fund?
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to answer as to any fund.
Senator ALLEN. What return did you expect the American Sugar Refining Company to receive for the immense sum of money you put into the campaign fund of 1892 in New York?
Mr. SEARLES. I am not aware of any expectation in that regard.
Senator ALLEN. You do not mean to say that you are in the habit of contributing large sums of money to any enterprise without expecting some pecuniary return, do you?
Mr. SEARLES. I have learned long since the truth of the colored man's version on that—"Blessed am dose who expect nuffin, and dey doan't get nuffin."
Senator ALLEN. I appreciate that; but you do not mean to say as a business man and as a business proposition that your corporation would contribute to either the Democratic or Republican party in the State of New York, or any other State, without expecting any return, either directly or indirectly, some pecuniary benefit, do you?
Mr. SEARLES. I mean to say this, that under the existing custom, our corporation, being a corporation which has large property interests, has been called upon to contribute by the political parties and has done so without any definite understanding as to any benefits to be received thereby, but by reason of the property interests of the corporation and of its large representation of capital——
Senator ALLEN. Now, while you had no definite contract or understanding with the managers of the political parties to whom you have contributed, is it not true that you expected favorable consideration from the party that succeeded in getting the control of the national legislation or national affairs—what you call "fair treatment" of your interest?
Mr. SEARLES. I have always believed that we would get for a proper presentation of our business industry and it needs fair protection from either party aside from any contributions or anything else.
Senator ALLEN. You realize, I suppose, as I do, that every sane man acts from some motive?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
Senator ALLEN. The American Sugar Company's contribution to the campaign fund of 1892 must have been actuated by one of two things, either a high sense of patriotic duty to some political party or the expectation of acquiring some benefit from the contribution when it was made, some pecuniary benefit. Now, which was the motive that inspired you in making that contribution?
Mr. SEARLES. I should say the patriotic duty.
Senator ALLEN. I think that is all I want to ask you, Mr. Searles.
The CHAIRMAN. You were asked whether the contributions that were made by the sugar trust in the campaign of 1892 were actuated by certain motives?
Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Assuming that such contributions were made, are you referring now to the contributions which you have said were made locally?
Mr. SEARLES. Those are the only contributions made by the company.
The CHAIRMAN. In what States were they made?
Mr. SEARLES. I can not state that definitely.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you make a personal contribution?
Mr. SEARLES. I did.
The CHAIRMAN. To what party?
Mr. SEARLES. In the State of New York.
The CHAIRMAN. To what party?
Mr. SEARLES. Is it within the province of the committee to inquire into my private contributions?
The CHAIRMAN. I simply ask the question, and am not called upon to pass upon it.
Mr. SEARLES. I decline to answer, it being a private matter.
Senator LODGE. Mr. Havemeyer stated yesterday that the Sugar Refining Company contributed money in New York and in Massachusetts. Do you remember any other State in which they contributed?
Mr. SEARLES. I should not attempt to state the States in which contributions were made.
Senator ALLEN. And in New Jersey?
The CHAIRMAN. Have these contributions been made in campaigns prior to 1892, to your knowledge?
Mr. SEARLES. I think so.
Senator LODGE. Do you know whether contributions were made in any Western States?
Mr. SEARLES. I have no knowledge on that point.
The CHAIRMAN. There is a statement here in an article published in the Philadelphia Press, which article was part of the occasion for the formation of this committee, that an appeal was made to these men, meaning the sugar men, for money:
"The subscriptions may have been given as individual contributions, but such gift was a pure fiction if it was made in that way. It was a sugar-trust subscription to the national campaign committee in return for pledges which were afterwards insistently demanded to be redeemed."
Is that true, to your knowledge?
Mr. SEARLES. I know of no such subscription.
The CHAIRMAN—

"The subscription was the magnificent sum of $500,000. And at another place in this article there will be reported a distinct and emphatic admission of this subscription and pledge from one of the highest officers of the Government of the United States."

Do you know of any such subscription to the national campaign committee of either party?

Mr. SEARLES. I know of no such contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. "A part of this money bought Colorado for the Populists." Do you know of any such purchase as that?

Mr. SEARLES. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. "A part of it brought about Populist alliances elsewhere."

Mr. SEARLES. I know of no such.

The CHAIRMAN. "A part of it was used in Illinois." Do you know of any such purchase?

Mr. SEARLES. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. "There was no doubt that this great fortune was mainly instrumental in securing those alliances and influencing those purchasable or discontented elements whose action upon election day caused such astounding results in the West."

Mr. SEARLES. I have no knowledge of any such transaction as those referred to in the article read.

Senator LODGE. Do you know of any money being given for the local campaign in Colorado?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not.

Senator LODGE. Or Nebraska?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not.

* * * * * * *

Senator ALLEN. Were you approached by any person on behalf of the national Democratic or Republican central committees in 1892 to contribute to the campaign fund of that year, either individually or in behalf of the company?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not remember to have been solicited in that way.

Senator ALLEN. No one asked you as an individual to contribute, or asked you as an officer to have the company contribute?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not remember any such request.

Senator ALLEN. All the way through when you speak of local contributions I understand you to mean contributions to the State organizations of the party, whichever party it may be. For instance, if you speak of local contributions in the State of New York to the Democratic party, you mean to the Democratic organization in the State, do you not?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not know as to the organization, but for State purposes, whatever that may have been.

Senator ALLEN. Were your contributions larger in 1892 than they were in 1893?

Mr. SEARLES. I could not say as to that.

Senator ALLEN. What is your best recollection?

Mr. SEARLES. I do not remember.

* * * * * * *

Senator ALLEN. Have you any objection to producing your books, showing by that means the contributions that were made by the sugar trust for political purposes in the last few years, in 1892 and 1893?

Mr. SEARLES. I shall decline to do anything of that kind.

Senator ALLEN. You should decline to do it?

Mr. SEARLES. Yes, sir.

A copy of the subpœna by which said witness was commanded to appear and testify before the committee at the time and place aforesaid, together with a copy of the certificate of service thereof, is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A.

EXHIBIT A.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Congress of the United States:

To Hon. J. E. Searles, greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear forthwith before the special committee of the Senate of the United States to investigate attempts at bribery, etc., at the room of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject-matter under consideration by said committee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To Richard J. Bright, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 13th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1894.

GEO. GRAY,
Chairman Special Committee.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I do appoint and hereby empower B. W. Layton to serve this subpœna, and to exercise all the authority in relation thereto with which I am vested by the within order.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

WASHINGTON, D C., June 13, 1894.

I made service of the within subpœna through my deputy, B. W. Layton, by the within-named J. E. Searles at Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C., at 1 o'clock p. m. on the 13th day of June, 1894.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, Senate of the United States.

In the opinion of the committee each of the questions put to said witness was a proper question and pertinent to the question under inquiry before the committee, and was necessary to make the examination ordered by said resolution of the Senate, and that said witness is in contempt of the Senate and merits to be dealt with for his misconduct; and that said witness, by his various refusals to answer the questions as herein set forth, has violated the provisions of that certain act of Congress in such cases made and provided, being chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which chapter is as follows:

"SEC. 102, Revised Statutes. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

"SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

"SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned, as mentioned in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action."

Wherefore, the committee report to the Senate, to the end that the President of the Senate may certify as to said witness his aforesaid failure to testify and his aforesaid refusals to answer, and all the facts herein, under the seal of the Senate, to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, in order that said witness may be proceeded against in manner and form provided by law.

C. K. DAVIS,
H. C. LODGE,
WM. V. ALLEN.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF MR. ALLEN, OF THE COMMITTEE.

In addition to the above recommendation of the committee regarding the witness, John E. Searles, I have to say that I think he ought to be brought to the bar of the Senate and be required to there purge himself of the contempt of which he is guilty, or be summarily punished for refusing to do so.

I therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution by the Senate:

"Whereas, John E. Searles, a witness, was heretofore duly summoned by a select committee of the Senate, and being lawfully required to testify before said committee, has, as appears by the report of said committee, refused to answer pertinent and material questions propounded to him by said committee: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant in due form under his hand and the seal of the Senate, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate the body of said John E. Searles, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time to keep the said Searles in custody to await the further order of the Senate."

Respectfully submitted,

WM. V. ALLEN.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, members of the committee, being unable to agree with the majority in the report made by them to the Senate in the case of the witness John E. Searles, deem it proper to state that the ground of their dissent is that set forth by the undersigned in the case of the witness Henry O. Havemeyer.

GEO. GRAY,
WILLIAM LINDSAY.

Mr. GRAY subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent at this time to present, on behalf of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] and myself, as members of the special investigating committee, a report dissenting from the majority report just presented by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] in the two cases of the witnesses Havemeyer and Searles.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the views of the minority be printed in connection with the other report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the committee, being unable to agree with the majority in the report made by them to the Senate in the case of the witness Henry O. Havemeyer, deem it proper to state the ground of their dissent.

The resolution of the Senate under which the committee has been prosecuting this investigation directs it to inquire, among other things, "whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes or to secure or defeat legislation."

The undersigned do not believe that in our system of government unlimited power is deposited by the people anywhere; but, on the other hand, that limitation of power was conspicuously kept in view by the framers of that Government. They do not feel at liberty, therefore, to impute to the Senate a purpose to pursue ends clearly beyond the scope of its power. Admitting that an inquiry as to whether certain persons have made contributions to any political party to secure or defeat Federal legislation is within the competence of the Senate to make, they deny that it is within such competence to direct an inquiry as to who has contributed to the campaign fund of any political party, without reference to the purpose for which the contribution was made.

The undersigned, therefore, in obedience to the principle of the well-established rule that where a construction is possible which brings a law within the enacting power of the Legislature, such construction shall obtain, have felt compelled to construe the resolution so as to make the instruction of the Senate to the committee one commanding it to inquire whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes to secure or defeat Federal legislation. As will appear from the evidence of Mr. Havemeyer submitted to the Senate, the question was in substance thus put to him and answered in the negative.

It will be observed, from the extracts from the testimony submitted by the majority of the committee, that the witness Havemeyer, answered freely and fully all questions as to whether or not contributions had been made by the sugar trust to the national campaign fund of any party, and that the charge of contumacy rests solely upon questions put to him as to the amounts and particulars of contributions which he had testified had been made by the trust for local and State purposes. Therefore the question presented by this report is whether or not the Senate of the United States directed this committee, or had power to direct this committee, to inquire as to what contributions a particular individual or corporation may have made to campaign funds for the conduct of elections, strictly State or local in the years 1892 and 1893.

It is the opinion of the undersigned that the resolution under which this committee is acting will not admit of the interpretation necessary to support the report of the majority of the committee, and that the said witness has not refused to answer any question that was pertinent to the inquiry with which the committee was, or could have been, properly charged.

GEO. GRAY,
WILLIAM LINDSAY.

Mr. GRAY. By the same committee, I am also directed to submit a report in the case of Mr. John Macartney, a witness who refused to answer certain questions propounded by the committee.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 487, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

June 21, 1894.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY, from the special committee to investigate attempts at bribery, etc., submitted the following report:

The special committee, under and in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of May 17, A. D. 1894, as follows:

"Whereas it has been stated in the Sun, a newspaper published in New York, that bribes have been offered to certain Senators to induce them to vote against the pending tariff bill; and

"Whereas it has also been stated in a signed article in the Press, a newspaper published in Philadelphia, that the sugar schedule has been made up as it now stands in the proposed amendment in consideration of large sums of money paid for campaign purposes of the Democratic party: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate these charges, and to inquire further whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes or to secure or defeat legislation, and whether any Senator has been or is speculating in what are known as sugar stocks during the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate, and with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

"Resolved further, That said committee be authorized to investigate and report upon any charge or charges which may be filed before it alleging that the action of any Senator has been corruptly or improperly influenced in the consideration of said bill, or that any attempt has been made to so influence legislation"— have attended to their duties so far as they have been able, but in certain respects have been prevented by reason of the matters hereinafter stated, and ask leave to report in part as follows:

In pursuance of said resolution the said committee met in the Capitol on the 21st day of May, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., and, after the examination of certain matters embraced in the first paragraph of the said resolution, the committe proceeded to investigate further the maters submitted to them by the said resolution, and on the 19th day of June, A. D. 1894, the committee being duly assembled, one John W. Macartney, who had been duly subpœnaed and summoned as a witness to appear before said committee, then and there appeared and submitted to be examined as a witness. The witness was duly sworn by the chairman of said committee.

In the course of his testimony the said witness was asked certain questions and refused to answer the same, as will more fully appear by the following copy of his testimony, viz:

SWORN TESTIMONY OF JOHN W. MACARTNEY.

Senator ALLEN. Mr. Macartney, where do you reside?

Mr. MACARTNEY. My house address?

Senator ALLEN. No. The city in which you reside.

Mr. MACARTNEY. Washington.

Senator ALLEN. What is your occupation?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I am in the banking and brokerage business in this city, and am a member of the New York Stock Exchange.

Senator ALLEN. Are you in partnership with any other gentlemen?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No one has any interest in my business except myself.

Senator ALLEN. What is the name, or has been the name, of your firm?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Corson & Macartney. My partner died about two years ago, and I bought his interest from his estate.

Senator ALLEN. Is the business conducted in your name?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I have never changed the firm name.

Senator ALLEN. It is just Corson & Macartney, of which you are sole owner?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I am sole owner.

Senator ALLEN. Do you know Mr. E. R. Chapman, of the firm of Moore & Schley, of New York City?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Yes.

Senator ALLEN. Have you seen him here within ten days?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Recently; I can not say whether within ten days or not.

Senator ALLEN. Did you see him after he was subpœnaed to testify before this committee?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Yes.

Senator ALLEN. After he had been on the stand and testified and been excused here, did you see him?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I did.

Senator ALLEN. At your office?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Yes.

Senator ALLEN. You are the agent of his firm?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No, sir; not agent. We are only the correspondents of Moore & Schley here. They have no interest in my business, and I have no interest in theirs.

Senator ALLEN. But you transact business on the stock exchange through them?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Through them; that is it.

Senator ALLEN. How many conversations did you have with Mr. Chapmen at that time, or about that time?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not recollect. He was at my office, because it was the natural place for him to go when he was in Washington, but I do not know how many times I talked with him.

Senator ALLEN. After he had first been examined and excused until the next day, did you see him that evening?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I did.

Senator ALLEN. At your office?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No; not at my office.

Senator ALLEN. At what place?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I think I saw him at the Arlington Hotel.

Senator ALLEN. And who was in company with him?

Mr. MACARTNEY. There wasn't anyone when I saw him.

Senator ALLEN. No one but you two?

Mr. MACARTNEY. That is all.

Senator ALLEN. You did, however, at that time, or about that time, have a conversation with him at your office?

Mr. MACARTNEY. He was in my office that day.

Senator ALLEN. Was any United States Senator there with him?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No.

Senator ALLEN. Did you have any conversation in the presence of any United States Senator?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No.

Senator ALLEN. Did he converse with any United States Senator in your presence?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No; not in my office nor elsewhere.

Senator ALLEN. Has any United States Senator since the 1st day of February, 1894, transacted any business on the Stock Exchange of New York through your house in purchasing or selling sugar stocks or certificates?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Now, I want to treat this committee with all respect, but I must decline to answer that question.

Senator ALLEN. On what ground do you decline, Mr. Macartney?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Because in my own opinion this committee has no right to ask such a question, and I am advised by counsel they have no such right; and by saying that I do not mean to convey inferentially to any member of the committee that any Senator has speculated in my office. I simply refuse to answer as a matter of principle, and question the right of even this honorable committee to inquire into a private business.

Senator ALLEN. Do you not think that your refusal to answer implies that a United States Senator has operated or speculated through your firm?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not think that is so. I would not assume to answer the question if you asked if any Government clerk had dealt through my firm.

Senator ALLEN. Has any Senator's clerk, since the 1st day of February, 1894, dealt in sugar stocks or certificates through your firm?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I decline to answer that question, not because they ever did, but simply upon the principle involved.

Senator ALLEN. You mean to say that you decline to give any information upon this subject?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I mean that I can not tell the committee who are or are not the customers of Corson & Macartney.

Senator ALLEN. Notwithstanding it may involve the integrity of men who are legislating in national affairs?

Mr. MACARTNEY. No matter who it involves, or who it does not, that is the decision I must adhere to.

Senator ALLEN. You regard your duty to your own financial interest as superior to your duty as a citizen to the country at large?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not quite regard it in that light.

Senator ALLEN. Do you put your refusal to answer this question or these questions, and to disclose the names of Senators and their clerks who have speculated in sugar stocks during the last ninety days through your firm, upon the ground that it will criminate you or expose you to ignominy?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not understand that any crime is charged against anybody.

Senator ALLEN. Upon what precise ground, and upon what ground alone, do you base your refusal to answer these questions?

Mr. MACARTNEY. On the ground that a committee such as this has not the right to inquire who are or who are not my customers in a private business such as mine is.

Senator ALLEN. Notwithstanding those customers may be United States Senators and their clerks?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Notwithstanding who they may be.

Senator DAVIS. Mr. Macartney, did I understand you to say that from your refusal to answer, no inference was to be drawn as to whether any Senator or his clerk had or had not speculated through your office?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not wish to create an inference in any direction by refusing to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Whether you wish to create one or not, do you mean that your answer is justly susceptible of the inference that any Senator or his clerk has speculated through your office?

Mr. MACARTNEY. It might be susceptible of any view of mind. At the same time I would not wish to convey that inference.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you decline to answer the question put to you by Senator ALLEN just the same whether a Senator had speculated or had not speculated?

Mr. MACARTNEY. It would be just the same; I would refuse to answer, as a matter of principle.

The CHAIRMAN. You would refuse, even if no Senator had ever bought or sold sugar stock through you?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I would refuse to answer.

Senator LINDSAY. You put it upon the ground that your business is a private business, and the public has no interest in it?

Mr. MACARTNEY. That is it exactly.

Senator LINDSAY. You would have no objection to saying in an ordinary conversation, if asked, if such or such a person was or was not a customer of yours?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I would.

Senator LINDSAY. In a letter published in the Philadelphia Press of May 14, 1894, it is stated in substance that after the formulation of the present amendments to the tariff bill, which is now pending before the Senate, a copy of them was placed in the hands of the agent of Moore & Schley, at Washington, in the morning before he was out of bed. You may state if a copy of that schedule was presented to you?

Mr. MACARTNEY. It was not.

Senator LINDSAY. When did you first see that schedule?

Mr. MACARTNEY. The first accurate knowledge I had of the schedule was when it was given to the press.

Senator LINDSAY. You saw it in the press?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Yes; not in the Philadelphia Press, but in the newspapers generally.

Senator LINDSAY. And you never knew of its existence before that time?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I never did.

Senator LINDSAY. Do you know of any employé in your establishment to whom it was given before that?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not. I will state for the information of the committee that in an office like mine there are a great many speculators around, and a great many newspaper people come in. We hear a vast number of rumors and gossip upon a great many subjects. As pertinent to my business I talked sugar with anybody. We heard a great deal of rumor, but we had no real accurate information in regard to the amendments until everybody had it, and no employé of mine had, so far as I know.

Senator ALLEN. Along about the 15th of February, 1894, were orders sent by you or by anybody in your employment to the New York Stock Exchange for United States Senators, or any United States Senator, for the purchase of sugar stocks or certificates?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I must decline to answer that, upon the same principle involved in the other question.

Senator ALLEN. Were any such orders sent by any United States Senator's clerk or person in his employment?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I decline to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. For the same reason?

Mr. MACARTNEY. For the same reason.

Senator ALLEN. You are aware of the statute which makes it your duty to answer, are you?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I think so.

Senator ALLEN. You prefer to take your chances of indictment and punishment here in the district?

Mr. MACARTNEY. Yes; the ordinary consequences.

Senator ALLEN. To answering the truth?

Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not say that.
Senator ALLEN. Well, you refuse to disclose the truth, do you not, by refusing to answer?
Mr. MACARTNEY. I only refuse to answer the question.
Senator ALLEN. Don't you conceal the truth in refusing to answer?
Mr. MACARTNEY. I refuse to answer the question as to who are or who are not customers of my firm.
Senator ALLEN. And you refuse to say whether you do or do not secrete the truth by your refusal to answer?
Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not think that is a fair question.
Senator ALLEN. I desire you to answer the question. If you see fit, do so. You seem to be master of the situation.
Mr. MACARTNEY. I decline to answer that.
Senator ALLEN. Mr. Macartney, do you not know that your refusal is based upon your purpose to secrete the names of Senators who have speculated through your firm?
Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not.
Senator ALLEN. Or their clerks?
Mr. MACARTNEY. I do not.
Senator ALLEN. And that it is your intention to shield all such persons as far as possible?
Mr. MACARTNEY. That is not my intention at all.
Senator ALLEN. And because you believe that to give their names would be injurious to your business in the future?
Mr. MACARTNEY. That is not what induces my refusal at all, Senator.

A copy of the subpœna by which said witness was commanded to appear and testify before the committee at the time and place aforesaid, together with a copy of the certificate of service thereof, is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A.

EXHIBIT A.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Congress of the United States:

To John W. Macartney, of Corson & Macartney, Washington, D. C., greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear before the special committee of the Senate of the United States, to investigate attempts at bribery, etc., on Tuesday, June 19, 1894, at 11 o'clock a. m., at the room of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject-matters under consideration by said committee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To Richard J. Bright, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 18th day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

GEO. GRAY,
Chairman Special Committee.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I do appoint and hereby empower B. W. Layton to serve this subpœna, and to exercise all the authority in relation thereto with which I am vested by the within order.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1893.

I made service of the within subpœna through my deputy, B. W. Layton, by the within-named John W. Macartney, at No 1419 F st. NW., Washington D. C., at 9.40 o'clock a. m., on the 19th day of June, 1894.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, Senate of the United States.

In the opinion of the committee each of the questions put to said witness was a proper question and pertinent to the question under inquiry before the committee, and was necessary to make the examination ordered by said resolution of the Senate, and that said witness is in contempt of the Senate and merits to be dealt with for his misconduct; and that said witness, by his various refusals to answer the questions as herein set forth, has violated the provisions of that certain act of Congress in such cases made and provided, being chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which chapter is as follows:

SEC. 102, Revised Statutes. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

"SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

"SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned, as mentioned in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action."

Wherefore, the committee report to the Senate, to the end that the President of the Senate may certify as to said witness his aforesaid failure to testify and his aforesaid refusals to answer, and all the facts herein, under the seal of the Senate, to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, in order that said witness may be proceeded against in manner and form provided by law.

GEO. GRAY.
WILLIAM LINDSAY.
C. K. DAVIS.
HENRY CABOT LODGE.
WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF MR. ALLEN, OF THE COMMITTEE.

In addition to the above recommendation of the committee regarding the witness, John W. Macartney, I have to say that I think he ought to be brought to the bar of the Senate, and be required to there purge himself of the contempt of which he is guilty, or be summarily punished for refusing to do so.

I therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution by the Senate:

Whereas John W. Macartney, a witness, was heretofore duly summoned by a select committee of the Senate, and being lawfully required to testify before said committee, has, as appears by the report of said committee, refused to answer pertinent and material questions propounded to him by said committee: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant in due form under his hand and the seal of the Senate, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate the body of said John W. Macartney, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the meantime to keep the said Macartney in custody to await the further order of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

Mr. GRAY. I am directed by the committee to request that the usual proceedings be taken in this case.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Before the Chair said "it will be so ordered" I desired to be heard.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what the order is? I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HILL. That is the question I am going to refer to now.

Mr. HOAR. Let us have the order settled first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the report of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. The Chair will hear the Senator from New York upon that report.

Mr. HILL. I assume that the two reports are deemed as now presented together. I suppose, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is here, there is no objection to that being understood for the purpose of raising this question. That should have been done, of course.

Mr. GRAY. That was the understanding.

Mr. HILL. As both reports are now presented, I desire to make a motion for the purpose of raising the question. I move that the reports be not received. I do not care about discussing the motion now, but at some later day I want to discuss that question.

I took the position when the other report was presented in relation to the newspaper correspondents that the Senate was proceeding beyond its jurisdiction; that contempt proceedings would not lie; and I desire to take that same position now. I am fortified in that position by a minority report, which holds substantially, as I understand, that no contempt has been committed. The point I make is that the Senate can control these reports. I made that point before on behalf of the two newspaper men, and I make it now.

I simply desire to present my views upon that subject at some proper time. I suggest that the whole matter go over. The reports have been presented and my motion that they be not received has been presented, and I ask that we may discuss the question at some future day.

Mr. PLATT. Let the reports be printed.

Mr. HILL. Yes; let them be printed in the mean time.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose the reports have been received and laid upon the table, where they properly belong, and that they will be taken up in their regular order and be discussed and considered. I do not think we ought to undertake to sidetrack questions such as are presented by these reports.

I desire at the proper time to be heard upon the question of the Senate's jurisdiction, not only its jurisdiction to consider these matters, but its absolute duty to do so in the interest of the country; and I desire the reports to occupy their proper position.

Mr. DAVIS. The position of the majority of the committee who signed the report now under consideration has been throughout that in reporting the contumacy of witnesses it was merely performing a ministerial duty under the statute, submitting to the Senate what had taken place in the committee, from which certain consequences followed; namely, that it became the ministerial duty of the Presiding Officer of this body to certify those transactions to the district attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia.

I do not understand that the question of whether this report shall be received or not received is at all germane to the performance of that duty by the committee, or by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and I shall object to any concession of the position of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], which may be implied by consenting that this matter may go over until another day. I shall object.

Mr. HILL. The Senator can not prevent me making the motion I have made. I have talked with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and other Senators, and all sides want the matter to go over, as I understand, for discussion, and in the meantime, pending the disposition of my motion, that the papers be printed. Does the Senator think we can dispose of the question to-night?

Mr. DAVIS. The order has already been made that the report submitted by me shall be printed in the RECORD, and it will appear to-morrow morning.

Mr. HILL. That is not the printing I want.

Mr. DAVIS. They are printed under the general rule.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee will state his point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. A motion that a report of a committee of this body shall not be received is not in order, is my point of order. I am perfectly willing that that point of order may go over until another time, or it may be disposed of now; but I want to interpose it.

Mr. HILL. I do not want it disposed of now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go over.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] made his report there was no order of the Senate made; when the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] made his report he requested that the usual proceedings take place, and the Chair said, "It will be so ordered." Now, if an order of that kind is to be entered upon the records of the Senate, I desire to object. It raises the same question which the motion of the Senator from New York raises. I have been trying to get the floor, which has been occupied all the time by two or three Senators, to say that if a certificate is to be made in the case reported by the Senator from Delaware as by order of the Senate, I wish to object for the same reason that the Senator from New York, as I understand, moves that the report be not received.

If the certificate goes as a matter of course, that is another thing. I should not be prepared, I think, to vote against a certification of this witness to the district attorney, but I am interested in the question whether or not that statute executes itself and authorizes the use of the seal of the Senate, without the authority of the Senate, or even against the direction of the Senate. There would stand upon the records of the Senate, unless I made this objection, the order of the Senate, certifying Mr. Havemeyer. I object to that, if I am allowed to make that objection or if I am in season in making that objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the point made, or intended to be made, by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] had been settled adversely to him, in substance, by the action of the Senate, or its nonaction, in the case of the newspaper correspondents.

I want all these parties treated alike. If the action of the Senate is to stand against the newspaper correspondents, I want it to stand against these potentates of the sugar trust. I shall be prepared at any time to meet the Senator from New York in debate upon this subject if it becomes in order. But, Mr. President, the Senate having taken the action that it did, practically closed the question as to them in a debate somewhat excited and pointed.

I object now to its being reopened without the most mature previous consideration, whereby, in comparison with the attitude in which we have put the newspaper correspondents, it is proposed to exempt these magnates of this great trust.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether he holds it would be out of order to move to recommit his report, or to move to recommit the report of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether the statement the Chair made, "It will be so ordered," was understood by him to impart an order of the Senate after objection was made?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. The question was not disposed of, then?

Mr. LODGE. When this committee reported the first two cases it was then held that after the report had been introduced, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] being recognized as making a privileged report, the mere fact of making that report closed the question. It was then settled by the Senate, and the President of the Senate acted upon that report without any further action on the part of the Senate—none whatever—and the two newspaper correspondents were thereupon certified to the district attorney. Subsequently the committee brought in another report that was recognized as a privileged report. It certified Mr. Chapman for contumacy. There was nothing done; there was no action taken by the Senate; the same ground was held; and he was certified to the district attorney.

The majority of the committee, representing for all purposes the committee, have now presented a report, certifying Mr. Havemeyer and Mr. Searles, and the committee as a whole has presented a report certifying Mr. Macartney. I can not see, Mr. President, why there should be any change in the action of the Senate, nor do I see that the matter is otherwise than complete, as has already been held, when that report is presented, as it has been.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I understood the rule to be laid down when the two correspondents were certified to the grand jury, that the Vice-President, under the statute, was charged with the duty of certifying those parties for indictment whenever the proper certificate was returned to him by the committee, and that the Vice-President did so certify in the instance of Mr. Edwards and Mr. Shriver. The same rule, I believe, was followed as to Mr. Chapman. The same rule, I suppose, applies to these persons so far as they are certified to the Vice-President, for his certificate sending them to the grand jury, to be indicted for their refusal to comply with the law.

So far as that part of the reports made in these cases is concerned, I suppose there is but one thing to do; and that is for the Presiding Officer of this body to certify these persons in accordance with the statute.

In addition to the reports which have been made by the committee, I have in each instance made an additional report, asking that these different witnesses be called before the bar of the Senate and there required to purge themselves of contempt or be punished summarily for refusing to do so. That portion of the report I suppose properly goes over and comes up for consideration by the Senate; but the other is a mere matter of ministerial duty upon the part of the Presiding Officer to certify.

Mr. GRAY. I should like the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] for one moment. The report which was made by the committee; that is, by a majority of the committee, which is the committee, in the case of Mr. Havemeyer and Mr. Searles for contumacy, was made this afternoon when I was called out from my desk by some one in the reception room. The Senator from Minnesota and I, having had an understanding that the report would be made from the committee about 5 o'clock, and that at the same time the dissent of two members of the committee to the report would be made as a report and filed with the report of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the two reports may be considered as having been made at the same time.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly; that was the understanding.

Mr. GRAY. So that the order for printing may go with both and both be treated alike?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. GRAY. The report made by the majority of the committee is of course the report of the committee. It seems to me that the course which has been taken in previous cases is the course that will be taken in regard to these reports, for they are reports from the committee in just the same sense as the previous reports were, which happened to have been made unanimously.

The only difference is that in these two cases two members of the committee could not agree with the majority as to the jurisdiction in regard to the particular questions asked, or as to the pertinency of the questions to the inquiry then under investigation. They have filed the statement of the grounds of their dissent. That closes the matter so far as they are concerned. The committee through a majority of its members have made the report, and the law makes it incumbent upon the Vice-President to certify the cases to the district attorney.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Delaware to state what the minority report is? What is the report of the two members who dissented?

Mr. GRAY. The report just states the ground of dissent of two members of the committee as to the jurisdiction of the Senate and the committee over the questions upon which the report treats.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the Senator from Delaware holds that the report of the majority of the committee requires the Vice-President to certify the facts to the district attorney.

Mr. GRAY. Of course. The report of the majority is the report of the committee, and the status of the report and the status of the case before the Senate, so far as the Vice-President is concerned, is precisely as if the whole committee had made the report.

Mr. CHANDLER. As if the two members had not dissented?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir; of course.

Mr. HARRIS. The state of the case is simply this. A committee of this body has on this day made two reports, which have been received, and they are lying on the Clerk's desk. In that condition of affairs the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] moves that the reports shall not be received. They have already been received. But if he had anticipated the report and made that motion, I should have still raised the question of order that such a motion was out of order. Having made the motion subsequently, I raise the question of order that his motion is not in order. That is a question for the Chair to decide and is not debatable, and I shall not undertake to debate it. Other suggestions are that the Chair shall consult the Senate with respect to a different branch of the case, as to whether the President of the Senate shall obey the law or shall not obey it. That is all there is in this case.

Mr. HILL. So much is conceded, that the two reports are regarded as having been presented to the Senate at the same time. At the very same moment when they were presented I entered a motion that they be not received. The Senator from Tennessee now raises the parliamentary point that my motion is out of order. Of course that question can be discussed after it has been decided. I do not desire to do it to-night. The simple point which I desire to have the Senate decide and decide intelligently is, has not the Senate a control over the presentation of reports of committees?

The right of the committee to present the report depends upon what? Upon the point that certain witnesses have refused to answer questions material to the inquiry. Two honored members of the committee, representing this side of the Senate, have made a minority report, saying that these questions are not material to the inquiry. Now, the question which I present is whether the Senate is bound to allow the reports to go upon its records and no motion can be entertained to stop it, when upon the reading of the reports the Senate may conclude that there has been no violation of law? In other words, the Senate may agree with the two minority members of the committee, namely, that the witnesses have not refused to answer material questions. That is the point I desire to raise. I do not want to discuss it now, or to delay the consideration of the tariff bill, but I suggest that it ought to go over until some other time, when the parliamentary question can be discussed.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from New York or the Chair. Does either the majority or the minority report recommend the bringing of the contumacious witnesses to the bar of the Senate and exerting the authority of the Senate?

Mr. GRAY. No, sir.

Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. HOAR. I am sorry they do not.

Mr. GRAY. Allow me to state to the Senator from Massachusetts in answer to his question that the minority report signed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] did report in all cases that, in addition to being reported to the district attorney, the recalcitrant witnesses be brought before the bar of the Senate and punished.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, if I may be pardoned for a sentance, that the Senate is laying down its constitutional authority when it takes the view that its power to enforce obedience to its lawful order to a witness who is brought before one of its committees depends on the action or nonaction of a grand jury, or any officer whatever. If we have the constitutional right to bring the witnesses here to testify, we have the constitutional right to compel them to answer, and we are degraded if we do not do it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I trust I may be permitted to at least raise an inquiry as to what is meant by the statute. The so-called reports by the committee seem to be treated in the discussion as reports in a parliamentary sense. I do not think that what has been communicated to the Senate is necessarily the report of a committee, speaking in a parliamentary sense. The committee were created for certain purposes, to make certain inquiries, and to report the result of those inquiries to the Senate and recommend action thereon.

Now, they have made no report of that sort. I do not think that within the meaning of the word as it is used in the ordinary transactions of the Senate any committee report has been made. The committee have simply communicated to the Senate certain facts which have arisen during the progress of their inquiry as required to do by certain sections of the Revised Statutes. It is a communication of facts to the Senate rather than the report of a committee in a parliamentary sense. I shall not take up much of the time of the Senate, but I wish to read the two sections. Section 102 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress, to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

Section 104 provides that—

Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

I think the plain meaning of that section is just what it would be if the section said:

Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to testify, and the facts are brought to the attention of either House or communicated to either House.

Mr. HILL. That is right.

Mr. PLATT. When that is done it is not, strictly speaking, in the parliamentary sense, a report of a committee, but a committee which has been charged with certain duties informs the Senate that certain witnesses refuse to testify. I suggest this distinction because it seems to me that the whole matter rests upon the question, and is to be decided accordingly, whether this is the report of a committee, speaking in a parliamentary sense.

When the report of a committee is presented to the Senate something is to be done with it, and if it be conceded that this is, speaking in a parliamentary sense, the report of a committee, then something is to be done with it. But if it is simply information for the Senate as to certain facts which have occurred in the committee and that is all, I do not think it comes within what we understand when we speak of the report of a committee. I confess that I am not entirely confident of the correctness of my construction of the statute, but certainly that question arises in this case.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, simply on the parliamentary question whether the motion of the Senator from New York is in order, I will state that it strikes me Cushing is very clear on that point, and for the information of the Chair I will read section 1952 of Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies:

1952. On the question of bringing up the report, it is competent to any member to object to receiving the report on the ground of any irregularity, either of form, as, for example, that the report is full of erasures and interlineations, or of substance, as, for example, that it is not within the powers of the committee; or to go into a general debate of the subject-matter; but it is not in order to move to amend the report; it must either be received or rejected as it is; and no motion, except for recommitment, can be made in relation to it until it has been received.

Section 1953 is even more explicit. It is as follows:

1953. The practice in this country in making a report is somewhat different. There is no formality of going to the bar and bringing up reports from thence. Whenever the chairman or other member of the committee is ready to report, he obtains possession of the House, or is called to by the Speaker for the purpose, and announces that he has a report from such a committee. He thereupon proceeds in his place to read the report in question. If the report is objected to by anybody, either on the ground of form, as not being properly prepared, according to the orders of the House, or of substance, as not being within the jurisdiction of the committee, this raises the question of the reception.

If the objection is on the ground of order, a question is presented in the first instance for the presiding officer to decide. If the ground of order is overruled, or the report is suffered to proceed notwithstanding, or a suspension of the rules takes place, then the question of reception is to be put to the house or supposed to be so, and if decided in the affirmative, the report is accordingly received and further proceedings had thereon. If the objection is not one of order, the question of reception is to be put at once to the house.

I think the motion of the Senator from New York is clearly in order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not care, as I said before, about discussing the question of parliamentary law. The statute provides that—

Every person who * * * refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry shall be deemed guilty, etc.

Then it provides a certain form, which I think is essential to the prosecution, namely, that a report shall be made.

I submit that as a parliamentary question every legislative body has a control over the question of the presentation of reports from committees, and the mere fact that this is a peculiar case, the mere fact that it relates to the contempt of a witness, does not change the situation. The broad point I make is that it is at any time within the discretion of the Senate whether it will receive the report of a committee. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has read from Cushing showing that the reception of a report is always a question for the legislative assembly to determine. How else can I raise it?

A Senator rises in his place and offers a privileged report. I present the question by an objection, by a counter motion, that it be not received. Why is it not proper within every parliamentary principle? The consideration of the question, I submit, is proper.

There has been no crime committed. If the minority report here is correct, if the questions asked the witnesses were not material questions, then I say the prosecution can not go on. If the presentation of the report is a part of a formula which must necessarily be gone through with, then the Senate can control it. The position was taken the other day that the District attorney had a right to proceed with the prosecution without the action of the Senate. That is another question. If he sees fit to do that, of course we have nothing to do with that question; he can go ahead.

But if the chain that is sought to be made here by the presentation of the report is part and parcel of the prosecution, then the Senate has a right to challenge the report, the Senate has a right to determine upon the reading of the two reports whether there has been a refusal to answer material questions. If the Senate agrees with the minority of the committee, then the Senate has a right to say that the report shall not be received. Possibly a motion to recommit the report made at the same time of its presentation would have the same effect. That is another question.

But the point I now make, and I think I am sustained by parliamentary law, is that my motion is proper. Does the Senator from Minnesota want to preclude the discussion of this question? Is the report to be presented and he does not desire to have the question discussed as to whether the Senate has control of the report? I submit he does not. There is no time to discuss it to-night. Other Senators, I think, desire to be heard, and I do not wish to delay the consideration of the tariff bill. Set this matter down for some hour on some other day and we will bring up the question. Is there any hurry about the matter? I think not. These gentlemen are, like newspaper men, reputable gentlemen. We should make haste slowly about the matter I care nothing about the individual character of these men.

I have shown by my votes that I care nothing about the sugar trust, to which the Senator refers. I do not care whether this is John Brown or John Smith or John Anybody. I have nothing to do with these gentlemen. The point I make (and I desire to be consistent in this question) is that the Senate at all times and under all circumstances has control of its own reports. I think I am prepared to agree with the minority report that the questions which the witnesses refused to answer are not material to the inquiry. If they are, must the fact of the refusal to testify be certified to the District attorney when the Senate does not want it done? Is the Senate to be ignored? Can the prosecution go on in spite of us? That is the point which I desire to present. That is the point which I desire to hear argued.

It seems to me I am clearly right in making this inquiry. I care nothing about this matter except as a parliamentary question and as a question affecting the rights, the dignity, and the jurisdiction of the Senate. The men I care nothing about. I submit that this is a question worthy of the most serious consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 22, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 21, 1894.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Charles H. Evans, of Maryland, to be marshal of the United States for the district of Maryland, vice William F. Airey, whose term expired May 21, 1894, Buchanan Schley, who was nominated to the above-named office May 9, 1894, and confirmed by the Senate May 16, 1894, not having been commissioned.

UNITED STATES CONSUL.

Perry Bartholow, of Missouri, to be consul of the United States at Mayence, Germany, vice James H. Smith, recalled.

PENSION AGENT.

Patrick F. Walsh, of San Francisco, Cal., to be pension agent at San Francisco, Cal., vice John C. Currier, term expired.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 21, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. THOMAS O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following communication was read:

JUNE 21, 1894.

SIR: I hereby name the Hon. JOSEPH W. BAILEY, a Representative from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair for this day.

CHARLES F. CRISP, Speaker.

To Hon. JAMES KERR,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SANDUSKY BAY RANGE LIGHTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that an appropriation be made for the repair of the Sandusky Bay range lights, which are in a state of decay; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Attorney-General, transmitting a supplemental list of judgments rendered against the Government by the circuit and district courts of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles, which were severally referred as below:

A bill (S. 1320) to provide for the punishment of certain frauds—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 2065) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1538) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yankton tribe of Sioux or Dacotah Indians in South Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SALE OF LANDS, MONTGOMERY COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, being a bill (H. R. 7334) to sell certain lands in Mongomery County, Ark., to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the east half of the northwest quarter of section 2, township 3 south, of range 26 west, in Montgomery County, Ark., to T. B. Vaught, B. M. Rowton, W. C. Warner, C. J. Watkins, I. T. Black, B. F. Leonard, and T. I. Bell, as trustees for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, for the use by said church as a church camp ground, for the sum of $1 per acre.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall satisfy himself, upon what he may deem good and sufficient evidence, that this land is not valuable for agricultural, stone, or mineral purposes, or by reason of timber it may contain, in excess of the amount for which he is hereby authorized to sell it; and upon the determination of the value of this land, as herein required, and of the number of acres that it may contain, and upon the receipt of the price herein prescribed, he shall cause a patent to be issued to the said trustees and their successors for the use and purpose herein prescribed; and said trustees are hereby authorized to fill any vacancy that may arise in their number by death or otherwise, as the laws of the State of Arkansas may prescribe in the case of church trustees for property.

SEC. 3. That if at any time this property shall be used for any other purpose than church purposes of a religious character, waiving all acts of trespass, it shall revert to the United States without compensation therefor to the church or the trustees thereof who may hold it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas what is the object of stating the price to be $1.25 an acre if the determination of the value of the land is to be left to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The Secretary is to sell it at that price provided he is satisfied that it is not worth any more. That is the price at which Government lands are usually sold in that part of the country, and I can assure the gentleman that these lands are not worth even that.

Mr. COOMBS. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the other day we had some little controversy here in regard to a bill from Arkansas, and I desire now to say that all unpleasantness has been removed; and as I understand from the gentleman from Arkansas that this is a bill in the interest of the camp meeting, I can not make any objection to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. We will take the gentleman into the church if he continues to act as well in the future as he does now. [Laughter.]

Amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands were agreed to, as follows:

Section 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out "sum of $1 per acre" and insert "price of $1.25 cents per acre."

Strike out section 3.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS TO CERTAIN SETTLERS.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7489) to amend section 3 of an act to withdraw certain public lands from private entry, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1889.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the said act of March 2, 1889, be amended by adding thereto the following provision: "That if any such settler has heretofore forfeited, or may hereafter forfeit, his or her entry for any of said reasons, such person shall be permitted to make entry of not to exceed a quarter section on any public land subject to entry under the homestead law, and to perfect title to the same under the same conditions in every respect as if he had not made the former entry."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there ought to be some explanation of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KEM. I will explain it. All that this bill seeks to do is to restore the rights of entry to that class of settlers who, through drought, or through misfortunes over which they had no control, were compelled to abandon their lands and lose their homes. The bill simply gives to that class of settlers in the West another opportunity to file claims on the public lands; in other words, it gives them another chance to save their homes. It is well known that throughout the West, by reason of drought and other causes, large numbers of our very worthiest citizens were compelled to abandon their homes, were unable to make proof, and, in that way, lost every dollar they had in the world. All that this bill seeks to do is simply to give those people, as it were, one more chance for their lives, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1259) to amend section 2 of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, entitled, "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor in the District of Columbia;"

A bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval malitia;

A bill (S. 1546) authorizing a commission to draft a code of laws for the district of Alaska, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1827) to define the boundaries of the three judicial districts in the State of Alabama, and to regulate therein the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States and the powers and duties of the judges thereof, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the cost of dredging the bar at Everett, in the State of Washington, so as to make a fresh-water harbor in or near the river with the greatest depth of water practicable: Provided, That if the information necessary to make such estimate is now in the possession of the Chief of Engineers it may be made without any further survey. The Secretary of War is directed to cause such estimate to be made and reported to Congress without delay.

MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. SWEET. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6558) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to mining claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section numbered 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, be suspended for the year 1894, so that no mining claim which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessment for the year 1894: Provided, That the claimant or claimants of any mining location, in order to secure the benefits of this act, shall cause to be recorded in the office where the location notice or certificate is filed on or before December 31, 1894, a notice that he or they in good faith intend to hold and work said claim: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. COOMBS. It seems to me we had this same request in the year 1893. I would like to know whether it is to be an annual request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. I should like to hear what the bill is about.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COOMBS. There seems to be no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard no objection. The Chair asks again, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to know whether the bill comes from the committee with a unanimous report?

Mr. SWEET. This is the same bill which was reported in the last Congress and passed. It comes before the House at this time unanimously reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining. It is a very necessary measure, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. REED. I did not object to the consideration of the bill; I simply wanted an explanation, if it was to be considered.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the words "South Dakota," at the end of section 1, the words, "and the Second Congressional district of the State of Colorado."

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I hope that amendment will not be pressed.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, before this bill was introduced, or about the time of its introduction, I submitted it through the newspapers of Colorado to the people of my district. That district comprises the great gold fields of Colorado; and whatever may be said about silver, gold has not depreciated. In submitting the bill to the people of my district, I asked that they take up the subject and decide among themselves whether they wanted this measure extended to them this year or not. I have received from them numerous letters and petitions, from which I find that the great majority of the people of my district do not believe that it would be a benefit to the district or the mining interests of the district to extend the act to that district for this year.

Mr. SWEET. I have no objection to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BELL of Colorado was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SWEET, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF DIRECT TAX TO WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. ALDERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 119) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia the sum appropriated by the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861."

Mr. BURROWS. This matter involves several million dollars, I believe.

Mr. ALDERSON. No, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BURROWS. How much?

Mr. ALDERSON. Only $153,000, which has been already appropriated.

Mr. BURROWS. Well, there is a dispute in relation to the question; and I prefer the gentleman should let the matter rest until to-morrow. I should like to look into it.

Mr. ALDERSON. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BURROWS. There has been considerable controversy about this question.

Mr. ALDERSON. I wish to state that in the Fifty-second Congress the Senate committee unanimously reported a resolution similar to this, after full investigation——

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that; I am somewhat familiar with the case.

Mr. ALDERSON. The Senate unanimously passed the resolation, and in the same Congress the Judiciary Committee of this House unanimously reported a similar resolution. In this Congress the Judiciary Committee has unanimously reported this resolution after full investigation. The resolution proposes simply to do an act of justice to the State of West Virginia. I believe that if the gentleman will read the report——

Mr. BURROWS. I am familiar with all that the gentleman has stated in relation to this matter—entirely familiar with it. But the opinion of the Attorney-General is on file to the effect that the State of Virginia is indebted to the United States in a large sum over and above this amount; and I think the matter is too important to be disposed of in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] objects.

Mr. ALDERSON. I believe if the gentleman will examine the report he will be satisfied about the matter. Attorney-General Miller was clearly wrong in his opinion. I will call it up again to-morrow if I can get the opportunity.

Mr. BURROWS. I will try to look into it.

Mr. ALDERSON. I shall be glad if the gentleman will do so.

BOARD OF MANAGERS NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state that immediately after this matter is disposed of I will demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., that Charles M. Anderson, of Greenville, Darke County, Ohio; Sidney G. Cooke, of Herington, Dickerson County, Kans., and A. L. Pearson, of Pittsburg, Pa., be, and the same hereby are, appointed as members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States; Charles M. Anderson to succeed Gen. A. L. Barnett, whose term of service has expired; Sidney G. Cooke, to succeed Maj. E. N. Morroll, whose term of service has expired, and A. L. Pearson to succeed himself, his term of service having expired. All to take effect from and after the passage of this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will reserve objection, as I wish to ask a question or two about this. May I ask who succeeds Maj. Morroll?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Col. Sidney G. Cooke, of Kansas.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why does not Mr. Morroll succeed himself?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Well, the committee did not think he ought to. Not but that we highly appreciate his worth, his sterling ability, and his honorable career; not but that we regard Maj. Morroll highly and with sincere esteem, but the situation required a readjustment of the managers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is the politics of Mr. Cooke?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I would much rather that you should ask him. I can, if necessary, go into that whole matter, but I see no particular reason for it. One of the gentlemen named in the joint resolution is a Republican and two are Democrats.

Mr. BRODERICK. I desire to ask time to make a statement in connection with this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before submitting the request of the gentleman from Kansas, the Chair will again inquire if there is objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It seems that there are enough gentlemen interested in this, whatever may be its meirts, on both sides of the House to make it particularly ungracious to object; and I do not know as I shall interpose objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to say, however, reserving my right of objection, that I think in former years, while the Republicans had control, if I recollect properly, my distinguished colleague himself succeeded himself upon this board.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Permit me to call the attention of the gentleman to another fact. These three managers, selected in the Fifty-first Congress, were all Republicans. Now this Congress, a Democratic Congress, leaves one of the Republicans on the Board.

Mr. LOUD. How does it leave the board?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. With a majority of one Democrat.

Mr. DALZELL. On the old board it was one Republican.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, it leaves one of the Republicans on the board and two Democrats.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is one Democratic majority left on the board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, it seems that we have quite enough of "pork" in this to satisfy gentlemen on this side of the House in this matter, and if they are satisfied, as they know all about it, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas for ten minutes.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, when I objected to the immediate consideration of this resolution the other morning, I believed that more time than the House then had should be allowed for the examination of a question of so much importance. The proper conduct and efficient management of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are questions in which every loyal citizen feels a deep interest. The Home is what it purports to be—the abiding place of many thousands of brave men who during the late war sacrificed everything except life for the maintenance of the Government.

As the Western Branch of the Home at Leavenworth, Kans., is in the district I have the honor to represent here, I desire to reply briefly to some remarks recently made upon the government and management of that institution.

On the 20th day of last March my colleague from Kansas, Mr. SIMPSON, criticised, without justification, as I shall show, the management of the Home. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK], who is an honored member of the Board of Managers of the Home, followed my colleague, fully answering his criticisms and ably vindicating the management.

Under these circumstances I should not deem it necessary to take the time of the House to discuss these questions, excep for the fact that my colleague printed in the RECORD statement n ot uttered upon the floor, and his speech shows this upon its face. The remarks were delivered on the 20th of March and appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 4, so there was no opportunity to reply to much which appears in the RECORD and which is sent out as the gentleman's speech.

I am not criticising the fact of the remarks having been extended in the RECORD, for this was done under a rule, and no objection can be urged against it as a method of argument, when the House has assented, but it is only where personal assaults are made that this method becomes reprehensible. In such cases the rule in effect allows this sort of criticism without giving fair opportunity for reply.

After examining the published speech I made inquiry as to the merit of the charges, and am satisfied that they are wholly without foundation. My colleague was, as I am informed, never at the Home, and I know not the source of his information. I am exceedingly sorry he can not be in his seat this morning and give his authority, if he should like to do so.

There were complaints made against the governor of the Leavenworth Home I admit, and so there have been against the government of every Branch. Where there are so many unfortunate people in an institution there will always be those who are discontented. Where discipline must be enforced it is unavoidable that some should have grievances. But all the charges, to which reference has been made, against the government at this Home were investigated by the Board of Managers. The Board consists of eleven members and is nonpartisan. It is composed of distinguished soldiers of the late war. Upon investigation the charges were not sustained by the Board. Both in law and good conscience the verdict of the Board should forever put at rest all the questions involved and adjudicated by that judgment.

My colleague is much disturbed because the Keeley cure has been introduced into the Leavenworth Home. It is true that the beneficence of that cure has been made manifest in that institution. I am informed that 1,066 veterans have been, through this treatment, rescued from the lamentable fate of the drunkard through the efforts of the governor. One hundred and thirty-two married men, once members of the Home and supported by the Government, have been restored to their families, and are now supporting themselves. Certainly this wonderful cure is a blessing to humanity. To condemn it is madness.

Here is the latest official report of the governor, rendered to the president of the Board of Managers, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. Whether or not the work is commendable and worthy of emulation, I submit to the candid judgment of all right-minded people. The incredulous can not be expected to accord it any degree of approbation. The report reads as follows:

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE KEELEY INSTITUTE AT THE WESTERN BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS, RENDERED BY COL. ANDREW J. SMITH, GOVERNOR, TO GEN. WILLIAM B. FRANKLIN, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGERS.

WESTERN BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
Leavenworth County, Kans., December 31, 1893.

Gen. W. B. FRANKLIN, President Board of Managers, N. H. D. V. S.:

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit for your information the following report of the treatment of victims of alcoholism, opium, addiction and kindred diseases, in the Keeley Institute at this Branch Home, from its establishment, March 29 1892, to date, viz:

Treated for alcoholism	788
Treated for opium addiction	23
Treated for neurasthenia	2
Treated for tobacco habit	22
Total treated	835

Ratio of lapses per 100 for whole number treated, 8.02. Age of graduates, members of the Home, oldest 81, youngest 44 years; average age, 59 years.

The percentage of loss through relapse or return to their old habit is small. The improvement in discipline is very marked. The morale of the Home stands second to none.

An auxiliary to the institute is the Keeley League, composed of the graduates. This organization is admirably constituted to promote the interests of the cause of reform, and is doing wonders in inducing comrades who, through mistaken judgment upon the nature of the Keeley remedies, hold aloof until their excesses nearly compass their death. Men are brought in for treatment who are physical wrecks, and within a few days are restored to their manhood and health.

The largest number in line for treatment at any one period since the institute was established was 82, on December 10, 1893. An average of 37 in line has been maintained throughout the year.

The vile whisky dens which so closely hedged in the Home in former days are receiving little patronage. Many of them have been suppressed.

As shown by the records, since the Keeley remedies have been introduced there have left the Home, able to maintain themselves, 364 graduates of the institute who are believed to have been permanently cured of the disease of alcoholism and opium addiction. They are now good citizens. One hundred and thirty-two married men have been restored to families that have been neglected or deserted for years. Very few graduates have returned from furlough this year, which indicates that the object of most of those absent is to remain outside the Home. Their absence enables us to provide for an equal number of deserving men.

The per capita cost of maintenance for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, at this Branch, was $140.25. On that basis, the annual saving to the Government by reason of these men having been permanently restored to society, is $51,051.00.

The facts cited speak for themselves. I am encouraged by the excellent results already achieved to renewed and greater effort in the future looking to the rescue of the many in our midst who are yet unreclaimed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

COL. ANDREW J. SMITH,
Governor.

Official:

ROBERT HAYES,
First Lieutenant and Adjutant.

The assistant inspector-general of the National Home, Gen. W. W. Averell, United States Army, has this to say of the Keeley cure at the Western Branch, which he thoroughly investigated. The remarks are embodied in his official report rendered to the Board of Managers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and read:

LEAVENWORTH, KANS., May 21, 1893.

TEMPERANCE.

The most notable feature of this Branch, and that which first attracted attention at this inspection, was the Keeley League Club, now grown to nearly 600 members. It has not only created and exercised a profound influence in the direction of temperance and good conduct among the members of this Branch, but its example has been followed by the other Branches and by several State Homes.

The skepticism which it encountered in its earliest efforts has been silenced, the doubts of those who awaited evidence of a cure for alcoholism have been dispelled, and this club now receives the respectful and encouraging consideration of all candid and sensible men. This day being Sunday there was a meeting of the club, which was attended by the Board of Managers of the National Home, by whose president and members short and inspiring addresses were made. The National Home is indebted to the governor of this Branch for the successful inauguration and growth of this remarkable reformation.

In my report of this Branch last year certain positive advantages and benefits arising from this cure were set forth, but the indirect social economies and moral blessings which it has brought to the soldiers, to their families and friends, and to society at large can not be enumerated. One clew leading to an estimate of them, full of surprising satisfaction, is found in the fact that 152 reclaimed drunkards have surrendered the beneficence of the Home and are now earning their own living and making their various independent and honorable ways in life. The total cost of their cure, to themselves, in money was about $3,390; their self-support saves to the Government annually the cost of their maintenance at the Home, about $22,140.

The facts shown by these reports are entitled to great weight in the consideration of the government of this Branch of the Home. The administration of this cure costs the Government nothing. A small fee is charged for the treatment, but the governor of the Home receives no extra compensation from this source. Some few soldiers of the regular Army have been treated, but not one veteran has been turned away from the Home because of the presence of regular soldiers.

Under date of November 7, 1893, the president of the Board of Managers issued a circular directing discontinuance of admissions to all Branches of the Home, and on November 11, 1893, the president of the Board advised the governor that under no circumstances should the appropriation be exceeded. The following is an extract from a letter from the governor to the president of the Board, dated April 7, 1894:

It has been charged that I refused admission to the Home of sick and infirm soldiers eligible for membership, in order to make room for soldiers of the regular Army. This is untrue. Your circular of November 7, 1893, directed that no more admissions be granted at present, the appropriations for the maintenance of the Home being as heavily drawn as they can bear. I came to the conclusion that such direction was uttered to prevent the possibility of a deficiency in the appropriations at the close of the fiscal year. I immediately ascertained how many men could be cared for until June 30, 1894, under the current appropriations laid the matter before Maj. Morrill, the local manager, recommending that all applicants who presented themselves should be received as members, and Maj. Morrill concurred with me that all who came within the provisions of the organic act as to eligibility for membership, and who could be taken in without incurring a deficiency, should be received. I have accordingly taken in all applicants for membership, consistent with your orders, and the available accommodations. Not one has been turned away who was eligible for membership.

It has been charged that there is a saloon in connection with the Soldiers' Home where whisky and beer are sold, and that in the same institution they have a Keeley cure for the drunkenness that is promoted by the saloon. This statement is not sustained by the facts. Never in the history of any of the Branches of the Home has there been one drop of whisky sold to members with the knowledge of the management. A beer saloon is maintained in every Branch Home, save one, where light beer is sold under restrictions. The quantity sold to any individual is limited and inebriety is discouraged. No one under the influence of liquor is even permitted to enter one of these saloons.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK], in the course of the remarks referred to, and which appear on page 3851 of the RECORD of March 21, said:

The saloon that the gentleman from Kansas speaks of is not a saloon where spirituous liquors are sold. It is what is called a beer hall, which is run in all the Branches of the Home, one where beer is sold to the men and paid for by them, guaranteed to be of good quality and subject to inspection. That my personal judgment has been against the establishment of that hall, is true, but the majority of the Board believed that with the habits that many of these volunteer soldiers had, with the contracted disorders of a quarter of a century, the habits of a lifetime upon them, it was better that there should be a regulated institution, a beer hall inside of the homes, where a clean, wholesome beverage could be sold, rather than that these men, driven out by their impulses, their appetites, and their passions, should seek on the outside an inferior quality of liquor. We recognized the fact that the servitude of fifty years' appetite can not be broken by the institutions themselves.

I have here on this subject an extract from the official report of M. R. Patrick, governor of the Central Branch National Home, made in 1887, which I desire to insert in the RECORD. It gives a brief history of the beer hall as connected with the Home and states the reason for establishing the same. It reads as follows:

CENTRAL BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

[Extract from annual report, year ending June 30, 1887.]

DISCIPLINE.

Soon after the commencement of this last financial year (July 12) a beer hall was opened here in the Home for the benefit of its members.

As is well known to the Board, it was a matter that had been under discussion for years. In the Army, it has been the usage to sell beer, certainly for more than half a century, and for several years (I know not how many) at the other Branches of the National Home.

For some reason, I know not what, a terrible outcry was made through the press, through the mails, and by personal appeals to the governor, for the redress of this outrage upon the members of the Central Branch, and upon the interests of good order, good morals, and religion generally.

Possibly the fact that the governor had been known for more than fifty years as an active temperance man, both in military and civil life, may have had something to do with this onslaught upon him as a renegade. It is very true that the governor would gladly close every saloon in the land if it were in his power, but inasmuch as this Central Branch is hedged in on all sides by saloons, dives, and hells of the vilest character to entrap our men the moment they are outside of the gates, it seems wise to choose the least of two evils, either to furnish them with the best article of beer that can be purchased, in the home, at a cheap rate, and retain our men under our own control, or suffer them to go outside, get drunk on the vilest drinks of every kind, get robbed of their money, and kicked into the street, or secreted in the infamous dives that surround us until their money is exhausted, and they are turned out penniless.

The statistics and records of this Branch for the past year speak for themselves.

"The official report of Hon. Ira Crawford, mayor of Dayton, gives the number of arrests of our members from July 12, 1885, to July 1, 1886, as 486, while for the same length of time after the beer hall was opened (July 12, 1886, to July 1, 1887), as 274, a difference of 212."

The surgeon reports that the small number treated for alcoholism this year (14), as compared with 38 in 1886, and 35 in 1885, is, without doubt, in his opinion, to be credited to the less number of members who are given to protracted debauches and bad liquor, since the opening of the beer hall. Only such cases as can not with safety be treated out of hospital, are brought to hospital, for treatment after a spree, and those treated in camp, especially at the guardhouse, are not one-fifth as many this year as in former years.

That a large number of our men will drink to excess when they have the opportunity, is true, and notwithstanding the watchfulness of our employés at the beer hall, these shrewd old topers will manage to get tight; but on leaving the beer hall, if they show intoxication, they are at once sent up to the guardhouse, to remain until the next morning, without having had an opportunity to kick up a row in town, or on their way home, or along the avenues of the home.

Still another result: The beer we furnish is of the very best, and the man who gets intoxicated on it to-day, is fit to be turned out to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock, with a clear head and ready for duty, whereas a town drunk renders a man unfit for duty two, three, and four days.

Once more: The cry that less money would be sent by pensioners and employés to their families is disposed of by the showing of treasurer's report and that of the postmaster.

The discipline and good order of the Home have never been as good as now, within the last six or seven years at least, nor have the men been as contented.

I am happy to say, that candid men and women, of the most intense prohibition proclivities, who have been here at the Home and in Dayton making investigation, fairly, on the spot, have decided that, under the circumstances, it is best to leave the Home authorities to the exercise of their own judgment in this matter.

It is only theorists and fanatics, at a distance, who know nothing of the circumstances, who keep up the cry, "Down with the beer saloon at the Soldiers' Home." There are those who, for their own purposes, make statements to the effect that the men of the Home are induced to patronize the beer hall for the pecuniary benefit of somebody, presumably the Home authorities. It is true that the Home authorities, and all connected with the Home are benefited by the expenditure of money in the Home instead of outside, the profits accruing from the sale of beer within the Home going to the post fund, which, as seen by the treasurer's report, has been very largely increased, thereby enabling the council of administration, of which the governor is chairman, to greatly increase the band, to afford more frequent amusements and of a higher class, to replenish library, reading-room, etc., and in general terms, to expend a large sum of money during the last year with the sole object of giving pleasure, comfort, and enjoyment to the men, beyond what is provided for by Congressional appropriations.

It is not to be supposed that it is our object to make money, even for these purposes, at the expense of the health or morals of the men.

As we find it necessary, we place restrictions upon hundreds of our men, some being entirely debarred from the beer hall, and others being limited to one or two glasses, according to their physical, mental, or moral condition.

It is the opinion of every officer of this home, whether prohibitionist or otherwise, that under existing circumstances, the beer hall has reduced vice, crime, debauchery, sickness, and the waste of money that should go to the families of members, in a very marked degree.

Very respectfully,

M. R. PATRICK, Governor.

Average present	4,284	Average present	4,249
Average present and absent	5,176	Average present and absent	5,167

Whatever differences of opinion may exist regarding the beer hall, it is clear that the Board acted advisedly and for what was believed to be for the best interests of the veterans in establishing and maintaining the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended until he can complete his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRODERICK. I desire to say a few more words. Most of the charges made against the government of the institution at Leavenworth were investigated and passed upon by the managers, and as shown by the remarks of the honored chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SAYERS], as well as other members of that committee, made upon this floor during the discussion of March 20, the matter of the management of the Homes was investigated by that committee. At the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, said:

"Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] allow me in his time to say that the committee, after the most careful investigation, had no unkind criticisms to make of the administration of these Homes, and the Inspector-General, after a careful investigation, commended the administration as now carried on by the Board of Managers."

That the government of the Home has been efficient and the management commendable is not only evidenced by the well recognized business judgment and integrity of the managers, but by the judgment of the Inspector-General and the Committee on Appropriations. These proofs ought to be conclusive.

I have asked the indulgence of the House to present these facts because the management of the Home at Leavenworth has been unjustly criticised, and for the further reason that the retiring member of the Board of Managers, Mr. E. N. Morrill, is an honored citizen of my State and, during his service on that Board, has been a competent and conscientious official.

I have no objection to the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLACK of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, when reports were severally referred as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS GASLIGHT COMPANY.

By Mr. FLETCHER: The bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gas Light Company of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis—to the House Calendar.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CERTAIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

By Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs: The bill (S. 1694) granting to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company a right of way through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian Reservations in the State of Minnesota—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the bill H. R. 6340, in lieu of which the Senate bill, the title of which has just been read, is reported, will be laid upon the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH LEECH LAKE RESERVATION.

By Mr. ALLEN: The bill (S. 2000) granting to the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill H. R. 7167, of the same title, was ordered to lie upon the table.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, BALTIMORE, MD.

By Mr. McKAIG, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds: A bill (H. R. 4164) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the preparation of plans and specifications for a new custom-house building—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING, EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.

By Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds: A bill (H. R. 4835) for the erection of a public building in East St. Louis, Ill.—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OAKLAND, CAL.

By Mr. SWEET, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds: A bill (H. R. 6882) to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Oakland, in the State of California—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BUILDING, TOPEKA, KANS.

By Mr. ABBOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 2350: A bill (H. R. 7512) for enlarging the public building at Topeka, Kans., and for other purposes—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills raising revenue, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent of the House, as three-quarters of an hour have already been taken up, that the time limited for debate by the rule adopted yesterday may be so far modified that I may take the closing hour to-morrow morning immediately after the morning hour, so as to give an additional hour to gentlemen who desire to speak to-day. There are a large number on the list; and I want to say to the House that I would not make this request except for the reason that I have been very ill for two days. I ask it as a personal favor that I may have my hour reserved until to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If I can be allowed an opportunity to offer an amendment to the bill I shall not object to this.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee rises to a parliamentary inquiry, which he will state.

Mr. COX. The question I desire to submit to the Chair is this: When the order was adopted, I understood that amendments were to be offered to the bill, and I desire to inquire if that is true, and if so, when will amendments be in order? When is the proper time to present amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] that that question, if it arises at all, must arise in Committee of the Whole, when the attempt is made to offer an amendment, and the Chair would hesitate to pronounce an opinion upon it, because the opinion of the Speaker might not happen to be the opinion of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. That is quite true, Mr. Speaker; but the rule was adopted in the House, and it seems to be a question of construction of that rule, whether or not it includes the privilege of offering amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Tennessee that the question would involve the construction of a rule agreed upon in the House, but it so happens that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will be required to construe that rule, and the construction which the Speaker might place upon the rule might not be the same as that of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. Therefore, the present occupant of the Chair would hesitate to express an opinion, fearing that the opinion expressed by the Chair might be opposite to the opinion entertained by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and that either the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole must then disagree with the Speaker or must find himself embarrassed by the opinion of the Speaker.

Mr. COX. Then the decision of the Chair at present is that it is a question which addresses itself to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The author of this bill, as I understand, is asking unanimous consent. My inquiry is, if he could not embrace in that request unanimous consent for permission to offer amendments to this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the House could give unanimous consent to that request.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I ask the author of the bill [Mr. HATCH] if he will not embrace in the request permission to offer amendments.

Mr. HATCH. I did not hear what the gentleman said. Gentlemen were interrupting me at the time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask if the gentleman will not also embrace in his request for unanimous consent a request for permission for members to offer amendments to the bill who wish to do so?

Mr. HATCH. I can not do that, Mr. Speaker. I have simply made a request for my own personal comfort, and I think there ought to be no objection to it; but I will not purchase that by the disturbance of an agreement that has already been made. If any gentleman wants to object, I can not help that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman yield to me while I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. HATCH. I can not.

Mr. BYNUM. Under this rule there is no provision whatever by which members may offer amendments.

Mr. COX. The RECORD shows that there is none in the order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish it understood that I have not objected to the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BYNUM (continuing). Because general debate does not close until the adjournment to-night, and the vote is ordered to begin immediately after the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HATCH. And that was perfectly understood. I discussed it with gentlemen who were opposed to the bill. Nobody proposed to offer an amendment, and several gentlemen who oppose the bill do not desire to offer amendments. The only gentleman who mentioned an amendment was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] in his speech, in which he said he would propose to strike out the second section.

Mr. BYNUM. What serious objection is there to allowing amendments to be offered?

Mr. HATCH. If there is to be an objection to my request——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALDRICH. My point is that when the request was submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture yesterday morning he suggested, and I think the RECORD will bear me out, it was that the time for general debate close to-night, and that the vote be taken to-morrow immediately after the morning hour upon the bill itself and pending amendments if there were any offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In response to the gentleman from Illinois the Chair would state that the request preferred by the gentleman from Missouri, and the request stated by the Chair, was that all debate should close to-morrow evening (that is, this evening) at the time of the adjournment of the House. Under this order it would be competent for the House to terminate the general debate before that time. If this should be done debate would then proceed according to the rules of the House under the five-minute rule until the adjournment to-day, and amendments could be offered and debated. But if general debate is not closed the Chair, while hesitating to express an opinion, feels that it can not possibly embarrass the chairman of the Committee of the Whole for the Speaker to say that so long as general debate is pending amendments are not in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would state that I serve notice——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to longer delay the consideration of this bill, and I wish the Chair to submit the question if there be objection to my request, and if there is, let me make the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue; and pending that, the gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the order of the House made yesterday morning be so modified that instead of closing all debate upon the pending measure at the adjournment of the House to-day that the debate be closed in one hour after the morning hour to-morrow, that hour to be consumed by the gentleman from Missouri in closing the debate. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BYNUM. Unless there is provision made for offering amendments I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole the Chair will lay before the House the following requests for leave of absence:

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. BLACK of Illinois, for ten days, from to-morrow.

To Mr. CURTIS of New York, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ANTIOPTION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of bills raising revenue, and the Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7007) to regulate the sale of certain agricultural products, defining "options" and "futures," and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The first inquiry I make is, if amendments are in order to this bill; and secondly, when it will be in order to offer them. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. HATCH, by unanimous consent,

"Ordered, That all debate on House bill 7007 be closed at the adjournment of the House on to-morrow; that the said bill be then reported to the House, with the previous question ordered on the bill, including any amendments which may be pending, to its passage, the vote or votes thereon to be taken immediately after the morning hour on Friday next."

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty seems to be that this order was made closing all debate this evening at 5 o'clock, the previous question to be considered as ordered not only upon the bill, but upon amendments. While there has been no special provision made for offering amendments, and while under the rule generally, perhaps, the Chair would be compelled to hold as indicated by the Speaker pro tempore before he vacated the Chair, that the House could not change the order, and the Committee of the Whole would have opportunity to act under the five-minute rule, the Chair will hold differently—that amendments are in order under this general order at any time, and have been at all times.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and I desire to offer an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize any gentleman until order is restored. [A pause.] The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The parliamentary inquiry which I desire to submit is this: The Chair states that he will entertain amendments——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I had the floor when the committee rose yesterday, and I do not propose that any gentleman shall take the floor away from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is entitled to the floor for thirty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary inquiry I desire to make is this: Under the intimation which the Chair has just made that he will entertain amendments, I desire to ask the Chair when he will submit those amendments to the committee—when they will be voted upon? The Chair has just stated that he will entertain amendments in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendments have been introduced yet, and the order says that on to-morrow the amendments and the bill shall be voted upon.

Mr. SNODGRASS. But when is the Chair going to receive the amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments are not received now because of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is entitled to the floor for thirty minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know whether or not the amendments which I gave notice of, and which I have submitted to the Chair, will be recognized to-morrow morning after the morning hour. There are two of them, one to incorporate "flour" in the bill and the other to strike out "futures."

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever a gentleman gets the floor in his own right it will be in order for him to offer his amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The order which has been referred to, ordering the previous question to-morrow and the vote in the House, can only operate upon such amendments as may be then pending, which would be an amendment to an amendment, a substitute and an amendment thereto (if the gentleman would accept them before he moved the previous question), unless the Committee of the Whole House should report back amendments to the House with certain recommendations.

Now, the difficulty I see in the way is this: While the Chair may admit amendments, unless some arrangement be made by which those amendments can be voted upon and adopted in the committee, they can not be voted on in the House. Now, I want to ask the Chair whether it would not be in order, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] shall have consumed his thirty minutes, for the Chair to recognize me, or some other member of the committee to move that all general debate on this bill be closed, and to take the sense of the committee upon that proposition? If it should be adopted, then the bill would be open to amendment and to five-minute debate, and we would get to some place this afternoon. Otherwise, we are not likely to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. That, perhaps, would be the most formal way to proceed, but there is another way to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. HATCH. Before the Chair proceeds, let me call his attention to the fact that the rule adopted by the House can not be changed except by unanimous consent, and it is as plain as it can be that, under that rule, the Committee of the Whole can not entertain a motion to change the terms of the rule. It can only be changed by unanimous consent in the House.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me interrupt the gentleman just at that point, because it is material. This general order provides for debate during to-day. It does not say whether that debate shall be under the hour or under the five-minute rule, but it provides that we shall go into Committee of the Whole, and when we get into committee, after there has been one hour of general debate, it is in the power of the committee to close general debate and go on to discuss the bill under the five-minute rule, and that can be done under this rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I think this rule is perfectly consistent with the other rules of the House and should be construed in accordance with them. It prescribes a time when all debate on this bill shall be closed, which includes both general debate and five-minute debate. The debate is to close at the adjournment to-day. In the meantime it is perfectly competent for the House, if the committee should rise and we should go into the House, to close the general debate, and then to proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Under the rule can not the Committee of the Whole close the debate?

Mr. SPRINGER. No. It is only the five-minute debate that can be closed by of order the committee. But if the committee should rise and we should go into the House, the House could close the general debate after a certain time or at any hour it might determine, and then amendments might be offered under the rule and five-minute debate be had on each amendment. If this order provided that general debate should be closed, then after that the bill would be open for five-minute debate, but the rule says "all debate," which includes both the general and the five-minute debate.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, is there anything before the committee? It seems to me that we are spending time, which ought to be devoted to debate, upon something that is not before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever the regular order is demanded the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will be entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I demand the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] yields to me three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want this read for information?

Mr. WILLIAN A. STONE. No, sir; I offer it as an amendment under the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish it read for information?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; as an amendment to be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not decided to accept amendments until the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is off the floor. He is on the floor for thirty minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have yielded three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have the floor for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I desire it to be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 13, page 20, add:

"Provided, That this act shall not apply to any contract or agreement for the future delivery of any of said articles where the time specified shall not exceed thirty days from the day of the contract; nor to any person, firm, or copartnership dealing in any of said articles who buy and sell the same for spot delivery, or to be delivered within thirty days from day of sale."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now, I desire to know whether that amendment is pending to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I offer it as an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer it yet.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. When can I?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has said that when the gentleman from Ohio closes this question will be decided.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I ask three minutes at the end of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I agree to that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well, I reserve my time. I have two minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect in the very brief time which I shall occupy to analyze the provisions of this bill. I do not share in the fear of danger to the liberties of the country which has been suggested by some of the opponents of the measure. This is, in my judgment, from a legal standpoint, simply a question of the right and power of Congress to tax the commerce of the country for the purpose of raising revenue. I do not hesitate to say that from that standpoint the proposition is a fraud. But we have established a reign of fraud, legal fraud, in this connection already in this country. The taxation of oleomargarine and the dealers in it—professedly as a matter of revenue raising—was the first, perhaps, and greatest development of this spirit of indirection by which Congress has been actuated so often in its dealings with the business of the country. If you can tax the dealer in a certain quality of butter, why can you not tax the dealer in futures and options?

Now, if I believed that the effect of this law would be that the producer of grain should not be permitted to contract for the future delivery of grain, I would not vote for this bill. If I believed that I might not contract for the future delivery of stock—ox, cattle, sheep—or of lumber, or any other commodity produced in this country, before the thing was fitted for the market and before I owned or had possession of that property, I would not vote for it. But I do not understand the provisions of this bill to have that effect, and therefore I am in favor of it for the reasons I am going to give.

I have no sympathy with the cry that is behind this bill. I have no sympathy for any man, be he a millionaire or a beggar, who having attained his wealth in Wall street or in the Bohemian oat business, or in any of the ramifications by which the farmers of this country have been defrauded by organizations in favor of thoroughbred stock of all the various kinds, by which one man has assumed and gathered together enormous wealth, to find himself giving tribute to God Almighty, and attempting to subsidize the Almighty from punishing him by now turning round and making a demagogical appeal in favor of the poor men of the country—whether it be that sort of a man or some other kind of a man, I have no sympathy for the man who raises upon this floor a cry intended and calculated, in the very nature of things, to widen the breach between classes of citizens of my country.

There is no greater enemy of the United States of America to-day than the man who attempts to breed discord and dissatisfaction among the various elements of our society. There is no man to-day so much responsible for the blood of the men who are falling under the hand of the murderous assassin as the man who, for the sake of personal aggrandizement, dares to stand up and appeal to the passions and the prejudices of men and attempt to array class against class. [Applause.]

It may be a very nice thing to be heralded throughout this country as the coming candidate of the Jacobinical clubs of the country. It may be a very nice thing to be held up as a possible candidate of the Coxeyites of this country. It may be a very nice thing to be docketed among the possibilities of the coming election as a candidate for the Presidency of the men who to-day are the enemies of this country and her Constitution. All that may be very fine for the individual engaged in it, but the man who does it holds in his hand a torch in deadly and fearful proximity to the fabric of this country's government that we depend on for our safety and protection.

Whence comes the incentive, the spirit, the purpose of these bodies of incendiaries? Whence do they draw the logic of their assaults upon free government? What is the signal waving upon the shores of the United States and calling the leading anarchists of Europe to come over to this country and take part in the disturbances now going on? It is the cry of the demagogue on the floor of Congress, in the halls of the Senate, upon the hustings of the country, who for his own purposes is seeking to array one class of individuals against another class of individuals.

I have no sympathy with them, and I undertake to say that when the time comes that agrarianism, or communism, or socialism shall sweep over this country, if ever, the question of the man who will be put to the torch or knife will be, "How much property has he?" It will not do him any good, after he has acquired enormous wealth by processes which he has been enabled to manipulate, to say, "Did not I appeal in behalf of the poor people of the country after I became rich and independent?"

Mr. Chairman, I do not support this bill from the standpoint of the cry which has been raised, that it is time at last that something should be done for the farmer of this country. I class the appeal that would array the farmers of the country against the business men of the country, that would array the miner of the country against the operator of the country, I class all such appeals as alike dangerous to the future of the country and alike unfortunate. I have as good a right to speak for an agricultural community as has the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], who addressed the House on yesterday. My ancestors in this country coming from England as far back as 1660 odd, became proprietors in the hard soil of New England in farm lands in 1690, and from that day until 1838 they lived on and farmed the lands of New England, working out a living from the sterile and almost barren soil of old Windom County, and then removed to the State of Ohio when I was a mere child, my father settling on lands he had inherited from his grandfather, there being but a single title and that signed by George Washington himself.

My father with his wife and children settled on farming lands in the county of Athens, Ohio, and that land is held and farmed to-day by the same family. So for nearly three hundred years, or for more than two hundred years, I am a direct descendant, in a continuous line, of the farmers of this country, and all the property I own in this world other than the house in which I live is agricultural land which I myself operate. So there is from the standpoint of the farmer, I may be permitted to say, no necessity for this cry. Just on the eve of election we hear it, although we seldom or never hear it at any other time, but on such an occasion somebody bobs up in a legislative assembly and cries out, "Is it not about time that we were doing something for the farmer?"

I want to ask some intelligent man on this floor to answer me, in his own time, what is there that can be done by Congress for the benefit of the farmer that would not inure to the benefit of somebody else? By what line of argument can you safely here undertake to array the interest of the agricultural classes of the country against the interests of everybody else?

Mr. Chairman, agriculture in this country to-day is on a better footing than it was in former years. I am glad the time has come when the gentleman from South Carolina, who talks of my having been converted from a condition of "hardness of heart" and "blindness of mind," and all that sort of thing, over to the true gospel—I am glad to hear him talking about the interests of agriculture—and I am glad the time has come, although the gentleman and his associates did not have much to do with its coming, that the agricultural interests of the entire country are now guarded and carried on by the men who own the lands or who pay the wages for carrying on the industry. I am glad that in that great Southern country agriculture is not the aristocratic procedure that it was before the war. I am glad that it has become respectable now for all men, and that it is respectable for an agricultural laborer to work on the plantation, although he does not stand the chance of being flogged with a whip on occasions when he does not do a full day's work.

Yes, there has been something done for the farmers in this country, and I propose before I get through to show just how it has been done. The first grand thing accomplished in behalf of agriculture was done when the Republican party, struggling into power against an adverse Democratic majority in both Houses up to that time, succeeded over the veto of one or more Democratic Presidents in passing the homestead laws, which gave to agriculture an opportunity to move West and occupy that enormous scope of magnificent country which was thus opened to it. The party to which the gentleman from South Carolina comes from or belongs to, the party with which he now associates, if he belongs to any known party on earth, voted almost solidly against that measure, which was the greatest step towards the enfranchisement and broadening of the agriculture of this country that was ever achieved by man.

From that day to this agriculture has been the child of Republican patriotism and Republican intelligence. From that day to this, and for thirty years gone by and upward, the Republican party has kept upon the agricultural productions of this country a tariff sufficient to give to the farmer of this country the home market of this country, and if there is any gentleman wants to know——

Mr. MOSES. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not be interrupted; I have so short a time. Otherwise, I should be glad to be interrupted. If there is anybody anxious to know what ought to be done for the farmer I will tell him, and I will tell him what ought not to be done. If you want to know what affirmative acts should be done, let me tell you.

There is a limited market in the United States for the agricultural products of the country. We produce more than we have a market for already. If that be true—and no man can gainsay it—one thing to do for the farmer is to give him the market of this country, and do not open this enormous boundary line between us and Canada, to permit the Canadian productions of a cheaper quality of labor to come in and crowd into the markets of our country here. If you want to do something for agriculture, do something to aid the development of a greater variety of agricultural productions. If you want to do something for agriculture, continue upon the statute books a law under which the production of sugar in the United States increased 50 per cent in one year, and has almost doubled since the passage of the McKinley law. If you want to do something for agriculture, do not turn over the whole subject of sugar-raising in this country to the benefit of a great trust, organized in the city of New York, more corrupt, more wicked, more villainous than any trust that has ever cursed the United States in all its history. [Applause.] And directly, in a few days, when you are called upon to bow your subservient heads to the lash of the agents of that trust, do not do it, and you will have done something for the farmer of the United States of America. [Applause on the Republican side.] The farmer of this country does not expect, does not want, any cry of demagogy on this floor. What the farmer of this country wants is to be treated exactly as everybody else is treated.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] said something yesterday which startled me, and I want him at the proper time to answer a question. I think he said it in a moment of enthusiasm. I do not wonder that the gentleman becomes a little extravagant when he listens to the sound, to the music, to the eloquence of his own voice. The question which I wish him to answer is this: When was it, on the floor of the American Congress, amid the representatives of a great body of the best intelligence of this country—when was it that somebody denounced the farmers of the United States, as he charged yesterday? When was it that a member of Congress called the farmers of the United States "ignorant," and made fun of them and ridiculed the farmers of the United States? Who was the man? Where is it recorded?

Turn to the RECORD of Congress and let us know who he was and where he came from. Was it the predecessor of the gentleman from South Carolina, who said that the laboring people of the North were greasy mechanics? Is that what the gentleman refers to? Was it the man who called them "small-fisted farmers?" Is that the man referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina? Is he talking about Hammond, dead and gone to Heaven, I hope; or was it somebody else? I stand here with the honor of my country involved, to say that never since I have been a member of this Congress—and I have been here much longer than the gentleman from South Carolina—was there such a word used toward the farmers of this country.

Mr. GEAR. May I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that in the formation of the so-called McKinley law the Farmers' Alliance and the National Grange sat in conference with the subcommittee and helped to frame the agricultural portion of that bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is a fact.

Mr. GEAR. That should be known as a part of the history of that legislation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I said that on every occasion the Republican party had dealt generously with agriculture, and I am now authorized by one of the gentlemen who framed the McKinley law, Governor JOHN H. GEAR, to say that a committee of the National Grange and a committee of the Farmers' Alliance sat in consultation with the Committee on Ways and Means and aided in the formation of the agricultural schedule of the McKinley bill, and confirmed and ratified their action. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GEAR. The National Grange was represented by a distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Col. John H. Brigham.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Col. John H. Brigham, the gigantic and intelligent farmer from Wauseon, whom I know very well. What is the contrast? A few days ago representatives of an agricultural interest, real farmers, not specimens like my friend from South Carolina and myself, who I fear farm the farmers more than we do the land [laughter], came to this Capitol to be heard. It is a matter of public record that they were not only refused a hearing by the gentlemen having their great interests in charge, but with insults they were ordered out of the room into which they had been shown in the Senate of the United States.

And I did not hear of the distinguished Representative from the Cleveland (Ohio) district [Mr. JOHNSON], who was so afraid that some Coxey or some Browne was being wronged, getting up in Congress and demanding an investigation as to why intelligent and respectable farmers from the State of New York were driven out of the Senate of the United States and out of the committee room and refused a hearing. So that I can tell you exactly how to do something for the farmer. Defeat Democratic legislation. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] That is the way to benefit the farmer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has gone forth in this country a cry that by reason of a commercial practice of buying and selling futures and options that the prices of grain have been seriously interfered with; and, in my judgment, to a very large extent that statement is true. I do not believe that in the course of a year any commodity is seriously affected, but I do believe that irregularities in the prices of agricultural products produce corners, and an opportunity is given for speculation, not by the speculators of Wall street, who are so constantly being abused in this House, but I believe the speculators all over the country do thereby get an opportunity to corner and affect the grain market.

But, Mr. Chairman, whether I am right in this or wrong, it is enough for me to know that so constantly has this cry gone out that the people of the United States believe that condition to exist; and, therefore, believing that no harm can come from the passage of this law, believing that no paralysis of business is likely to occur, for I have no sympathy with that cry; believing that business in this country will be done on a fair basis and in a fair manner regardless of any question of this sort; and inasmuch as the removal of this right, or, in other words, to put into the statute law what has ever been in my judgment the rule of the common law, I shall vote for this bill. I shall vote for it in the hope that the farmer of the country, the trader of the country, will be relieved of the impression that seems to have settled upon him that he is being oppressed by these dealers in "futures" and speculative sales of produce.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the operation of running corners on the produce market is to the injury of the farmer?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say that is the impression abroad in the land; and inasmuch as that is the case, I am willing to vote for the bill, in the hope that it will remove that, not in the hope that it will bring about the millennium which our friends talk about, but because I am willing to make this experiment in the interest of relieving the public mind of the present prejudice which they have against these dealers in this sort of product.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then the gentleman does not believe that corners operate to the injury of the farmer?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say that in the course of a year's time I think that things equalize themselves; but at times I do believe that corners do operate to the injury of the farmer when he has to sell at the time they are in operation.

Now, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I presented an amendment which has been read. I did not understand that the Chair has yet indicated that amendment to be pending to the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I desire to have that question settled before I continue my remarks upon the amendment. If the amendment is not to have any application, then certainly I do not want to take up the time of the House in discussing an amendment that can not be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will please give the Chair his attention for a moment. The general order adopted by the House is in this language:

That all debate upon the pending bill and amendments thereto, if any, shall be considered closed at the adjournment to-morrow evening—

That is, this evening—

the bill and any pending amendments to be reported to the House, the previous question to be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments thereto to final passage, and the vote to be taken immediately after the morning hour on Friday morning.

The general order contemplated the offering of amendments. Members upon the floor and friends of the bill expected an opportunity to offer amendments, and the general understanding on the floor of the House for the last two days has been that there would a time come before the closing of this debate, and before the operation of the previous question, when amendments could be offered. The Chair is of the opinion now that the only way, and perhaps the better way, at least an orderly way, to do business would be to have the committee rise and let the House restrict debate, closing general debate, and let the remainder of the debate be under the five-minute rule and under Rule XXIII. After general debate is closed, then amendments will be in order. The Chair thinks that is the better way out of it; and the matter is in the hands of the committee, which can do as it pleases.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do I understand the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the Committee of the Whole takes that course, the Chair will not entertain amendments for the present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have the floor. I would like to know——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor for eight minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is this to be taken out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the committee rise, Mr. Chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LIVINGSTON, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 7007) and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested by quite a number of gentlemen on the floor that they have amendments which they regard as germane and proper to certain sections of this bill, and which they desire to present to the Committee of the Whole or to the House, and I have told gentlemen having such amendments that I would ask consent to-morrow, before taking the vote, that those amendments should be voted upon. I want to keep faith with the gentlemen whose names are on the list of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and who expect to debate this bill. It has been my purpose all the time, if no opportunity arose after the close of general debate, that such of these amendments as were germane and pertinent to the bill should be tested by a vote in the House. I told the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] that on yesterday, and I intend to make that request, and I am sure it will be agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the course he proposes leaves his proposition subject to be defeated by the dissent of any one of the three hundred and odd members here. I submit to him that he can accomplish the same result by moving to reconsider the order that was made on yesterday fixing the limit of debate, and adding to it a proposition to devote a certain time, beginning now or at any hour he may indicate, to debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I was simply stating what my own position had been; and then I was going on to say that, in deference to the wishes of so many gentlemen who have expressed a desire to offer amendments, I will now ask consent that immediately after the morning hour to-morrow one hour shall be devoted to offering amendments under the five-minute rule in the House——

Mr. COX. Make it two hours.

Mr. HATCH. I am doing the very best I can, and some gentlemen have told me that if I propose any longer time objection would be made in the interest of other measures that are to come before the House. I am trying to be just as liberal as possible. In one hour every proper amendment can be offered under the five-minute rule, even if it can not be fully debated. I wish to have the remainder of this day devoted to debate by gentlemen who have expected to address the committee, and I now ask unanimous consent that the first hour to-morrow, after the morning hour, shall be devoted to offering amendments to the bill under the five-minute rule, that I may have my hour to close the debate, and that then the vote may be taken.

Mr. COX. I suggest that the gentleman ask that in offering amendments under the five-minute rule it shall not be necessary to read the bill in detail.

Mr. HATCH. I will accept that suggestion, that amendments may be offered to any section of the bill and voted upon in the order in which they are presented, so that the time will not all be consumed upon any one section of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, would it not be equally agreeable to him to provide that general debate close with the session of to-day and that amendments under the five-minute rule shall be then in order?

Mr. HATCH. For one hour; that is just what I have stated.

Mr. WARNER. But I suggest that the request be made without the limitation. The House can make the limitation to-morrow as well as to-day. Several gentlemen desire to offer amendments, and they have a right to present them and certainly to discuss them for five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. They do not have to be voted upon in the hour?

Mr. WARNER. No; but they have to be discussed in the hour.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And only two amendments can be pending at one time.

Mr. HATCH. That is not so under this order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Not if you make the exception, but you will have to include that in the exception, because the rules themselves prohibit the pendency of more than two amendments at a time.

Mr. BOATNER. I understood that the request of the gentleman from Missouri was that the amendments should be considered as pending and that they should be voted on in the order in which they were offered.

Mr. WARNER. That would cut off the possibility of discussing the amendments. I have no amendments that I wish to present or to discuss, but I do want to hear discussion on some amendment that may be presented in order that I may vote intelligently. Now, I shall not object to a proposition to change the order so that general debate shall close with this day's session and that the bill shall then be considered under the five-minute rule. In that case I shall offer no objection if the House chooses to dispense with the reading of the bill, or to make any other order in that regard; but I do object to a proposition that will cut off the presentation and explanation of amendments under the five-minute rule, or limit it to one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is indulging this as a matter of unanimous consent. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. HATCH. Except the statement that I would ask unanimous consent. Now, Mr. Speaker, the rule which was adopted was perfectly understood by the House; and it received the unanimous consent of the House. It was the desire of nearly every gentleman on the floor to fix a reasonable time within which debate should be closed and a vote taken on the bill. I am now going to the farthest limit of what I feel to be right and fair to other measures——

Mr. COX. There will not be a single objection if two hours be allowed.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I will compromise on that, and say two hours for amendments under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WARNER. With the understanding that as many as are offered can be pending at once.

Mr. HATCH. Do not let us have so many understandings in this matter. Two hours under the five-minute rule for the offering of amendments, and coupled with that the understanding that I shall have my hour to close the debate at the expiration of those two hours.

Mr. BURROWS. And that the consideration of the bill for those two hours under the five-minute rule shall be in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WARNER. And with the understanding that any number of amendments may be pending at once.

Mr. HATCH. No; not in Committee of the Whole. I would not violate the rules of the House in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made by the House closing all debate on this bill this evening at the adjournment of the House, be so far modified that to-morrow, instead of taking the vote immediately after the morning hour, the bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole for two hours under the five-minute rule, and that the gentleman from Missouri shall then have one hour to conclude his discussion of the measure.

Mr. HATCH. In the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the House. Is there objection to that?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman whether he would not be willing to have the bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, so that we can make some headway with amendments——

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that; that was what I proposed to ask in the first place.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And then let the previous question operate——

Mr. HATCH. The previous question will operate under the order already adopted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. On all amendments pending that are germane.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that one of the troubles which might arise from that arrangement would be that four votes by yeas and nays in the House while considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole, would consume the whole time.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BYNUM. I think it would be well for the gentleman from Missouri to stipulate that there shall be but ten minutes' debate on each amendment.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. HATCH. Under the rule there can only be two five-minute speeches on each amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. I know, but——

Mr. HATCH. I will do my best to have the rule enforced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Missouri now moves that the House resolve into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of revenue measures.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7007) regulating the sale of certain agricultural products, defining "options" and "futures," and imposing taxes thereon and upon dealers therein.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr STONE) has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand the order as now amended, it would not be proper for me to offer an amendment until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments will be in order to-morrow as soon as the House goes into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I desire to reserve my time and will withdraw the amendment I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] is now entitled to the floor for thirty minutes. The Chair suggests that there are about sixteen or eighteen gentlemen who want to speak on this question. The Chair has no right or disposition to dictate the time that any member shall occupy; but he would be glad if members could reach some agreement among themselves so that speeches should be limited to about twenty minutes each.

Mr. COVERT. Do I understand that the limit now operating is twenty minutes?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I suggest that we make the limit to-day half an hour. I think most of the gentlemen will be able to get through in that time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will so hold. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] is recognized for thirty minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BAILEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On June 8, 1894:

An act (H. R. 82) to authorize the Missouri River Power Company of Montana to construct a dam across the Missouri River.

On June 14, 1894:

An act (H. R. 3715) granting to the village of Dearborn certain land for village purposes.

On June 19, 1894:

An act (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890; and

An act (H. R. 6576) to provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 622, in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of the president and directors of Gonzaga College.

On June 20, 1894:

An act (H. R. 2710) for the relief of the heirs of Edward Morrison and Nellie Morrison, now deceased;

An act (H. R. 5778) to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State University; and

An act (H. R. 1127) for the relief of Francis M. Tomlin.

ANTIOPTION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. LIVINGSTON in the chair.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, I can not resist the conclusion that the title of the pending measure is a misnomer. I submit that it should be "A bill to amend the Unabridged Dictionary, to restrain trade, and to restrict the rights of the American citizen."

The strictly "educational" feature of the bill seeks to instruct the House and the country as to the real meaning of the terms "options" and "futures;" it relegates us to the dictionaries for the significance of the words "contango" and "backwardation," but it is significantly silent as to the ordinary or legal meaning to be attached to the term "ringing out."

Lexicographers had, before the introduction of the pending measure, told us the full significance of all the other singular and unique terms employed in this bill; and there would seem to be no absolute and urgent necessity that they should be redefined in the measure now presented to us. While this has been done with great care by the author of the pending measure, absolute silence has been observed regarding the term "ringing out." Ponderous dictionaries have been asked to open their leathern lips for information in this regard, but the appeal has been made in vain. No definition of the term can be found in their musty pages, and the pending bill is equally silent in this particular. The anxious citizen of Hannibal, Mo., and the wondering resident of Iola, Kans., are alike left in Egyptian darkness as to the significance to be attached to the mystic term "ringing out," as it occurs in the several sections of the bill under consideration.

But the benighted denizens of the localities mentioned will, I venture to affirm, in the event of the final passage of this measure, realize sooner or later that the real meaning of this last-mentioned term in its true connection, is the beginning, perhaps, of the end—the "ringing out" of the reserved rights of the States and the reserved rights of individual citizens as secured to them by the Constitution of our fathers.

While it is difficult for me, sir, to discuss this matter in any serious spirit, yet I can discuss it from an entirely impartial and disinterested standpoint. There is not a single stock or produce exchange in the whole length and breadth of the district I have the honor to represent, nor do I know of the existence in it of one single, solitary person who is engaged in the business of buying or selling options. But, sir, I represent a broad, Democratic constituency, whose claim and whose plea is presented to-day at the bar of this House, that no such narrow and un-Democratic measure as this—a measure seeking to chain up trade and to fetter commerce—shall find its place upon the statute books of this land.

Any man who has known my esteemed friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] as long as I have known him, will be slow to accuse him of any lack of frankness, and he has been entirely frank and outspoken in his opening speech made in behalf of the pending proposition. He has told us in so many words that this bill is to some extent a new departure in revenue legislation. He has told us that he does not believe the taxing power should ever be used except for the primary purpose of raising revenue. "Raising revenue," Mr. Chairman, is not the object and not the intent or the purpose of this bill. Its object is not even thinly disguised, either in the title or in the text of the measure itself now under consideration. We have done what we could to raise revenue in the passage of a tariff bill, imperfect as that measure may have been.

If this bill were really a revenue measure, why was it not offered and inserted as a part of the internal-revenue feature of the Wilson bill when that measure was on its passage through this House? There is scarcely a pretense anywhere on the part of any of the advocates of this bill that its purpose and object are the raising of necessary revenues for the support of the Government. Such being the case, what is its purpose? I submit that its object is apparent on the surface, and that "he who runs may read." What is the object of the bill? My esteemed friend from Missouri says that if the courts are called upon to pass on the constitutionality of this measure they will not stop to inquire into the motives of legislators in the adoption of such provisions as are embodied in this bill.
